TAKING SNAP-SHOTS.

An Interesting and Instructive Pastime.

Things That Have Tended to Bring the Art-Science of Amateur Photography Into Favor—When, Where and How It Originated.

SCORES of people in Chicago are taking up amateur photography this summer, says the Times of that city. The pastime is by no means a new one, but it is growing rapidly, and each succeeding year brings with it a fresh lot of devotees, all destined in time to become as infatuated with the business as are the older users of the camera, any one of whom would as soon think of voluntarily giving up his good right hand as to calmly entertain a proposition to do away with his apparatus. The reasons for this are not far to seek. Viewed strictly as an amusement amateur photography is fascinating in the extreme. It is as healthful an exercise as one can possibly indulge in, and the very highest element in a social and business way give it their indorsement and support. These reasons sufficiently explain the popularity of this art-science.

The growth of amateur photography has been so gradual that no one can tell exactly when or where it began, or to what fortuitous circumstance it owes its origin. Like most of the pies which society has a hand in making, it is older in Europe than in America. Abroad the entrancing occupation is smiled upon by royalty, for the Duke of Edinburgh and the Prince of Wales are both presidents of amateur photographers' associations. In democratic America every important city now has its club. The oldest and largest organization is the New York Society of Amateur Photographers, about seven years of age, with an active membership of some two hundred. The New York Camera Club is a similar organization, but is slightly different in its personnel, being patronized almost exclusively by Mr. McAllister's "400." The Chicago Camera Club ranks second, having a membership of about one hundred and fifty; but what they lack in age and numbers they more than make up in enthusiasm and club appointments, the latter being in point of perfection far ahead of the facilities possessed by any similar organization in the country. Philadelphia, Boston, Cincinnati, St. Louis and New Orleans also have clubs to which they "point with pride."

In England amateur photography is being put to a novel but excellent use. The various camera clubs of the Kingdom are engaged in making photographic surveys of their districts. Succeeding generations, therefore, will be able to see what England looked like in the nineteenth century. The idea does not seem a bad one for adoption in America.

It was under the auspices of the Chicago Camera Club, it will be remembered, that a recent attractive entertainment was given at Central Music Hall, by which the growth and interesting features of the city were photographically illustrated. Under the guidance of Secretary Fred K. Morrill a Times representative recently made a tour of the rooms constituting the club's headquarters, at 189 Wabash avenue, the walls of which are lined with high-grade work performed by members. Many of the pieces shown have taken prizes at various exhibits.

"In many respects," said Mr. Morrill, "regular photographers can not equal amateurs, for the former rarely keep the vast amount of special apparatus owned by a first-class amateur club. That certain work is performed by amateurs does not in any sense imply crudity or lack of skill. We have here every thing necessary for the production of the very highest grade of portrait and scenic work. For obvious reasons nearly all members of the club prefer the scenic part of the business. The perpetuation of attractive incidents, scenes and surroundings is, in fact, the primary object of amateur photographers. Joining the Camera Club simply places the enthusiasts en rapport with each other and furnishes them far superior mechanical facilities for the accomplishment of their artistic desires than could possibly be enjoyed by them in the condition of isolated individuals.

RESULT OF [illegible] ON PLATES.

"We have too, all the books and periodical publications on the subject of amateur photography, which are not inconsiderable in number. These, of course, are at the disposal of members and constitute an attractive feature.

"The number of Chicagoans interested in amateur photography? Well, I should say not far from 1,000. It is extremely popular, but not in any sense a 'fad.' That is, it is not one of the things taken up to-day and dropped to-morrow. It seems to chain one's interest, and the latter is constantly increased in the ratio to one's advancement in the art-science."

G. A. Douglass, than whom no member of the Camera Club is more enthusiastic on the subject of amateur photography, is full of stories illustrating the advantages of a knowledge of the art. "Americans," he said, "are great travelers, and find a good deal of pleasure in bringing home with them mementoes of a trip which enable them at any time to recall the scenes vividly to mind. Nothing accomplishes this purpose quite as perfectly as a well-taken and carefully developed photograph. As an amusement and instructive diversion amateur photography ranks high. It has been steadily growing in public favor since about 1875, when the dry-plate process was introduced. This, by the way, was the invention of an amateur. Non-professionals, in fact, are credited with many other inventions of decided merit and value in connection with photography. I account for it on the theory that those who take it up as a diversion are of the highest class intellectually, and therefore quick to determine any needed improvement in a mechanical way.

"Physicians have indirectly done a great deal for amateur photography by sending convalescents out with a camera. This prescription is of course a scheme to make the patient take some necessary exercise, while the camera acts as a distractor in keeping his or her mind off the fact that they are taking medicine.

"It is not as expensive a luxury as many people suppose. One may indulge a fancy for photography to any desired extent. It is possible, of course, to spend a good deal of money in it, but by no means necessary in order to extract all the amusement, benefit and instruction from the business. An amateur may personally develop his work or not, as he pleases. He may either send it out, take advantage of the facilities offered by a membership in the Camera Club, or he may improvise a 'dark room' in his own house. Any private residence has a closet somewhere admirably suited to the purpose."

Many amusing incidents are told of amateurs, who have made some ludicrous mistakes. It is related that one enthusiastic Chicagoan recently went to Europe, and of course took his camera with him. After he had drawn a bead on some particularly interesting scenes he suddenly discovered that he made twenty-three exposures without pulling out the slide. It is quite needless to say that the wooden "negative" was never developed.

The amateurs again have a very embarrassing habit of misplacing their "stops," and after a hurried but fruitless search are forced to forego the pleasure of taking a shot at some interesting scene.

Another mistake often made results in the unconscious possession of a composite negative, which may include a little of every thing. These are always interesting, and sometimes funny. Likewise they are generally objectionable, for the composite arrangement usually includes a scene the artist was particularly anxious to reproduce.

As an adjunct to professional studies amateur photography is being gone into quite extensively. One medical student at a West-side college has several large albums filled with "cases" of all sorts and descriptions. Whenever he meets any thing in hospital life (or death) particularly gruesome, he takes a shot at it. The instantaneous process has also been an important factor in the decision of many intricate law points, as the office performed by any mechanical device in action can be determined beyond question, provided it is in sight.

TWELVE QUESTIONS.

They All Relate to Love, Marriage and Domestic Bliss.

When to Marry and Whom to Marry—Rules That Have Been Tried and Seldom Been Found Wanting—Love at First Sight.

Whom to marry and when to marry are grave questions that confront many people who have not yet come to feel that marriage is a lottery, says the Boston Globe.

Hence arise questions like the following:

1. How can I tell when I love?
2. Can I afford to marry, if poor?
3. What sort of a person will I be happy with?
4. Will I always be loved?
5. Will I always love?
6. Will I ever see somebody whom I will love more?
7. Shall I marry young or shall I wait until I am mature?
8. Should a man marry a widow?
9. Should a girl marry a widower?
10. Is it always well to marry if one loves?
11. Is there love at first sight?
12. What is love at first sight?

And many others.

Ye who are married can best answer many of these questions. Only one who has made experiments in marriage in all its phases could singly answer all of them. And not unlikely the result of such experiment would prove any thing but edifying.

I am, therefore, prepared only to give the result of my own venture in the matrimonial boat as a partial guide, completing the latter by giving the results of other men's and many women's ventures, or marriages.

Probably the first approach of that tender feeling known as love is felt when at school a red cheek seems to the average boy lovely as a peach, and he respects the possessor for her gift. May be a big blue eye strikes him as prettier than any he has seen in the picture book mother bought him for a Christmas present, and he wishes that he might have this living picture book near by to look at when he chooses.

Now, she with the red cheek or she with the big blue eye may see across the aisle in the little school-room a bright little fellow whose clothes fit as nicely and look as pretty as those of the doll she takes delight in fondling at home.

For a doll is the first object outside the immediate household for which your little daughter shows any liking. The doll is her beau ideal. To win her favor one must conform to that model.

Its shape, the color of its hair and eyes, its clothing, speak to her language mystic and full of meaning. To her it is the symbol of mother's care, first love, wifely devotion, and perhaps the incentive of those sweet flatteries that in after years may turn some poor fellow's head.

And as our impressions of what we need are true or false, so will possessions bring joy or sorrow, and when the question comes to us, whom and when shall we marry? we should inquire into our needs and ascertain just what sort of a partner will supply our needs.

The question should never resolve itself into whether blonde should marry blonde, whether brunette should marry brunette, or whether partners should be of different complexion. An investigation on the complexion hypothesis might prove entertaining, but would, I fear, bring us back to where we started. But to my answers.

1. You are in love when you absolutely need the object of your affection.

2. A poor person can afford to marry if marriage will increase the possibilities of escape from poverty.

3. You will be happy with the one whose tastes, education and moral views are similar to your own.

4. You will always be loved if you observe the above rules and do not lose sight of the fact that

> Still in mutual sufferance lies
> The secret of true living;
> Love scarce is love that does not know
> The sweetness of forgiving.

5. You always will love if you realize that obedience to duty is the only medicine for conscience, and that perfect happiness is this world at least is but the shadow of a dream.

6. You will see somebody whom you will love more when your sense of duty becomes blunted, which will only happen in case you have not observed the first rule laid down.

7. Marry young if your nature has developed fully; if not, wait until your nature has developed. Rather than marry when undeveloped never marry at all.

8. Marry a widow according to rules laid down previously.

9. Same as No. 8.

10. Always marry if you truly love, but do not confound fancy or infatuation with the noble passion.

11 and 12. There is a love at first sight, but it is simply a quick and mutual apprehension of similarity in tastes, education and moral views.

Bugle Call Learned by a Bird.

The robin is not generally expected to be much of an imitator, but Fort Erie, N. Y., has a robin that would put to shame the most accomplished mocking-bird. On quiet mornings the mellow notes of the bugle calls from Fort Porter float across the river, and the aforesaid robin, in his leisure moments, when freed from his family cares, has amused himself by acquiring the reveille to perfection. But he would better have stuck to legitimate business, for he now adorns a cage and is expected to sound the reveille from sunrise till sunset.

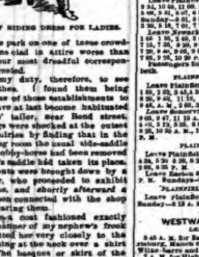
An Obliging Conductor.

A woman who went to Boston from Lisbon one Sunday night had seated herself comfortably in the car and the train had started when she suddenly exclaimed: "I have lost my pocket-book." Conductor Blackden inquired, and she thought that she had dropped it on the platform at the station. The train was backed up and the pocket-book was found on the platform where it had been dropped by her.

HOW SHALL LADIES RIDE?

Mrs. Grundy Says They Shall Not Ride as Do Gentlemen, Astride—The New Riding Dress.

There have been whispered hints in the boudoirs of Belgravia, says the London Daily Graphic, as well as the back drawing-rooms of Bayswater, that something shocking would happen at the meet of either the coaching or four-in-hand clubs. As the guardian of society proprieties, I need hardly tell you that I followed with the keenest interest the discussion in your columns relative to a revolution in riding, and made myself thoroughly au fait with all the arguments in favor of existing conditions. Will you judge of my consternation when I learned that some audacious creatures—I can hardly write that they were females—actually intended to appear in the park on one of these crowded occasions clad in attire worse than any of your most dreadful correspondents suggested.



THE NEW RIDING DRESS FOR LADIES.

It was my duty, therefore, to see these clothes. I found them being made at one of those establishments to which I have at last become habituated—a ladies' tailor, near Bond street. My feelings were shocked at the outset of my inquiries by finding that in the habit-fitting room the usual side-saddle upon the hobby-horse had been removed and a man's saddle had taken its place. The garments were brought down by a male tailor, who proceeded to exhibit them to me, and shortly afterward a young person connected with the shop entered wearing them.

She wore a coat fashioned exactly after the manner of my nephew's frock coat. It fitted her very closely to the waist, opening at the neck over a shirt and tie. The basques or skirt of the coat were somewhat longer and more ample than in the case of a gentleman's garment, but I assure you that that was the only compromise in the matter.

The breeches—I believe that is the dreadful name that the other garments go by—were tight to the limbs and buttoned at the knee. High boots and spurs and a tall hat completed the attire, which I can only regard as a shockingly correct copy of what would be worn by one of the other sex. In fact, at a little distance I do not see how you could tell a brother and sister apart.

Now, sir, I venture to predict that the British public, who are strong admirers of my views at heart, will resent this innovation strongly. I used, in common, to believe with most people, to imagine that it constituted a misdemeanor at common law for man and woman to change the clothing assigned by conventionality to their sex for that of the other. My nephew, a learned barrister, assures me that such is not strictly the case, but as any person or persons wearing the garments of the other sex is practically certain to be followed by rightly surprised people, he or she is liable to immediate arrest as "a disorderly person," and to be charged with the offense of causing a crowd to assemble. I need not point out the sensation that ladies thus habited would cause in the park. This would be, indeed, an undignified end to the movement. I remain, sir, yours obediently,

AMELIA GRUNDY.

A Cruel Fate.

Friend (visiting an invalid)—Did you read about the Southerners contributing to build the Grant monument?

Invalid—Yes, I read about it.

Friend—It looks as if the cruel war was over.

Invalid (with a sigh)—The cruel war isn't over with me yet. I get it three or four times a day.—Texas Siftings.

Why They Struck.

Employer—I understand, Finnegan, that the men have struck work.

Finnegan—We have, sor.

Employer—And may I inquire their reasons?

Finnegan—Shure, we don't know yit, sor. The dilygate froom th' 'Knoights' ain't kim yit, sor.—Light.

Good Out of Evil.

Mrs. Brown—Johnnie will worry the life out of us in the train unless he has something to munch on. I'll get him some candy.

Brown—Nonsense. It would take fifty cents' worth. Get him a railroad sandwich.—Munsey's Weekly.

A Long Felt Want.

The Count—Ah, mademoiselle! I have longed to marry an American from my earliest infancy.

Miss Seven Figures—Poor fellow! You have been bankrupt all your life, have you?—Munsey's Weekly.

EQUINE RAT-KILLER.

A Brockton (Mass.) Horse Which Possesses a Peculiar Accomplishment.

Roscoe Franklin, of Brockton, Mass., owns a bay horse, known by the name of Shiloh, that is possessed of a peculiar accomplishment. Mr. Franklin's stable, a rather old building, is infested by rats that give the horses much trouble, stealing their food and making themselves pests generally. It began to be observed a short time since that in Shiloh's stall there was to be found every morning one or more of the rodents, dead, the crushed bodies of which indicated that they had died violent deaths, but what that death was remained a mystery until one of the stable men discovered that the big bay was himself their executioner.

He was then watched at the work, and the strategy and cunning of the animal is said to be remarkable. He will stand over a rat-hole for any length of time without stirring, his ears alert and his eyes fixed on the hole. Then as the rat breaks cover abruptly and hurriedly, as they always do, Shiloh brings down the sharp hoof of his uplifted foot upon his little but harassing foe, crushing the life out of him, and if he fails to strike the wily creature will overtake him with outstretched neck, and seizing him in his powerful teeth throw him against the side of the stall, thus breaking his back.

It is but seldom that this curious ratter fails to kill his prey. The horse actually seems to enjoy the sport, for he will repeat the trick again and again, and if any one stands and watches him at it he will, without ceasing to be on the qui vive for the rat for an instant, occasionally turn his intelligent eye on the spectator, as if to say: "I'll get him yet."

"Oh, Cholly, I'm broken-hearted!"

"Why, old man, what's up?"

"I wead that mustaches were going out of fashion, and I've just waised one after faw yeahs hard work, and it's horwible to give it up."—Harper's Bazar.

Practice Makes Perfect.

Mrs. Grizzly—What on earth is that screeching over at Johnson's about?

Grizzly—Oh! Johnson is going to sing in a concert Saturday night, and as he's too lazy to practice he has hired Senor Highkey to practice for him.—West Shore.

A TENDERFOOT FACES SHOSHONES

He Levels a Rifle at Them, Much to the Disgust of the Indians.

"One summer about eleven years ago, when I was out in Wyoming," said the colonel, "my younger brother, who was then a college boy, came out to spend his summer vacation with us. Will gave the rough men out there a good deal of amusement with his ideas of how a man should dress on the plains. But he wasn't a bad fellow, for he had no little spirit and was always willing to do his share of the work.

"If you ever met a Shoshone Indian at that time you know what a perfect type of a lazy, peaceful, harmless redskin is. We used to consider that the Shoshones were born to be kicked about, and I am afraid that many of us lived up to our beliefs. A man would never hesitate if there had been any petty thieving around the camp to walk four or five miles, go into an Indian camp single handed and kick things about, or drag the mighty braves from their blankets until he had found his saddle, his bridle, his rifle, or whatever it was that had been stolen. Having found it he would sling it on his back and stride off amid the disappointed grunts of the dirty braves.

"But Will, fresh from the east and never having seen an Indian before, could not understand this boldness. When there were Indians in the camp begging for tobacco he was always suspicious of treachery. At such times he kept an anxious eye on the guns and watched every movement of the visitors closely, while we used never to think of such a thing.

"We left him in charge of the camp one day and started for the mountains after deer. Finding ourselves several miles from camp that night we started a fire, broiled a steak over the wood coals, and gathering some leafy branches for beds and pillows, turned in and slept the sleep of the just.

"As we drew near camp the next evening we saw a sight which sent us into roars of laughter. Will was ensconced behind a barricade which he had made of saddles, boxes, bedding—anything he could find. He was standing there with a pale look of agony on his face, all the spare guns and six shooters carefully arranged around him. Two hundred yards away from the breastworks sat a half dozen Shoshones looking utterly nonplused and disgusted. Coming up to the Indians first we tried to find out what the trouble was. From their grunts and grimaces, gestures and snatches of broken English, we learned that they had come to pay us a visit on the preceding afternoon. They had caught the young tenderfoot napping, and he had not noticed their approach until they were within a few feet of him. As soon as he saw them coming up silently, as Indians always do, he seized his rifle and frantically waved them back. Nor would he rest until they had fallen back to the position which they then held.

"When we failed to appear that night the boy immediately decided that we had been massacred and hastily began to throw up his breastworks. The Shoshones rolled themselves in their blankets and went to sleep, but Will stood guard all that night and watched them with eagle eye until we returned the next day. Even then, when we walked toward him, the Indians following us in solemn wonder, he was for shooting, but we laughed at him so immoderately that he threw down his rifle sulkily. As for the braves, their opinion of the boy was shown by the action of one big, solemn faced buck, who, going up to Will, touched him on the forehead, and even then Will started back. The buck looked at him a moment, we ready to burst into roars again, tapped his own forehead slowly, shook his head gravely and turning away said 'Ugh!' in tones of the deepest disgust.

"In the opinion of that Indian only an insane man could believe that there was any fight in a Nintah county Shoshone."—New York Tribune.

Is Politics Contagious?

Politics seems to run in families; political talent seems to be transmitted. The Adamses, Bayards, Breckenridges, Frelinghuysens, Pickerings, Pinckneys, Quincys and Randolphs indicate this clearly. There are many instances, too, of prominent politicians of the same kin, in the same generation, like Jacob and Benjamin Crowninshield, of Massachusetts; James M. and Robert S. Garnett, of Virginia; John A. and James G. King, of New York; Arthur and Francis F. Lee, of Virginia; Jonathan D. and Isaac N. Morris, of Ohio; Charles C. and Thomas Pinckney, of South Carolina; Cæsar and Thomas Rodney, of Delaware; John and Hugh Rutlege, of South Carolina. Cynics might say that politics, like any other virus, once getting into the blood, is very hard to expel, and taints different members of a family and even successive generations.—New York Commercial Advertiser.

Marvels of Human Skill.

Among the marvels of human skill and ingenuity exhibited by the London Mechanical and Scientific society may be mentioned an instrument loaned by the great Armstrong gun works which accurately measured thicknesses down to the one-thousandth of an inch; a similar instrument by a rival mechanic which grades thicknesses in one-millionth parts; a scale by Oertling, the world famous balance maker, which turns with the one-thousandth of a grain while loaded with 3,000 grains, and an engine by a Paddington watchmaker which contains 188 pieces, not including thirty-three bolts and screws, and can be hidden in a lady's No. 7 thimble.—Philadelphia Record.

A Novel Preventive of Sore Throat.

People who are subject to inconvenient throat trouble, caused by a proneness to catch cold on slight exposure, are advised to place a few threads of Berlin wool around the neck and wear them continuously. From ten to twenty threads are enough for the purpose. They should only be removed while making ablutions, and should be left off gradually by discarding daily one thread at a time. The remedy probably acts by keeping up a belt of skin action, thus acting mildly and continuously as a slight counter-irritant.—Hall's Journal of Health.

How a Town Got Its Name.

Many persons have wondered where the word "Anacortes" came from. A gentleman from Victoria, who was lounging in the Spokane lobby one evening, said it was named after the town site owner's wife, Anna Cortes, now Mrs. Boman. Mr. Boman made $210,000 selling Anacortes town lots.—Spokane Falls (Wash.) Globe.

Engraving on metal is probably the oldest of all the arts. If readers will take the family Bible and turn to Exodus xxxix, 30, they will find an allusion to engraving on gold. In the rooms of the New York Historical society there is an engraved gold ring which Egyptologists say dates back to 600 years before Pharaoh.

The first furnace for cremation in the United States was built at Washington, Pa., by Dr. J. Le Moyne.

The Tomb of Eve.

The Arabs claim that Eve's tomb is at Jiddah, the seaport of Mecca. The temple with a palm growing out of the solid stone roof (a curiosity which is of itself the wonder of the Orient) is supposed to mark the last resting place of the first woman. According to Arabian tradition, Eve measured over 200 feet in height, which strangely coincides with an account of our first parents written by a member of the French academy of sciences a few years ago, who also claimed a height of over 200 feet for both of the tenants of the Garden of Eden. Eve's tomb, which is a graveyard surrounded with high white walls, and which has not been opened for a single interment for over a thousand years, is the shrine of thousands of devoted Ishmaelites, who make a pilgrimage to the spot once every seven years.

It is hemmed in on all sides by the tombs of departed shiekhs and other worthies who have lived out their days in that region of scorching sun and burning sands.

Once each year, on June 3, which is, according to Arabian legends, the anniversary of the death of Abel, the doors of the temple which forms a canopy over this supposed tomb of our first mother remain open all night in spite of the keeper's efforts to close them. Terrible cries of anguish are said to emit from them, as though the memory of the first known tragedy still haunted the remains which blind superstition believes to be deposited there.—St. Louis Republic.

An Act to regulate the practice of dentistry in the state of New Jersey.

1. Be it enacted by the Senate and General Assembly of the State of New Jersey, That a board of commission to be known as the state board of registration and examination in dentistry is hereby created, to consist of five resident and practicing dentists, whose duty it shall be to carry out and enforce the provisions of this act; the present members of the board of dental examiners appointed and now existing under the act of the legislature of this state entitled "An act to regulate the practice of dentistry and to protect the people against empiricism in relation thereto in the state of New Jersey," approved [illegible]

[illegible]

11. And be it enacted, That the act of the legislature of this state entitled "An act to regulate the practice of dentistry and to protect the people against empiricism in relation thereto in the state of New Jersey," approved March the fourteenth, anno domini one thousand eight hundred and seventy-three, the supplement thereto approved February seventeenth, anno domini one thousand eight hundred and eighty, and the supplement thereto approved March the twenty-seventh, anno domini one thousand eight hundred and eighty-four, and all acts and parts of acts inconsistent herewith, be and the same hereby are repealed.

12. And be it enacted, That this act shall take effect immediately.

Approved April 7, 1890.

CHAPTER CXLIV.

An act to amend an act entitled "An act to authorize the construction, curbing and paving of sidewalks and crosswalks in townships," approved May sixth, one thousand eight hundred and eighty-four.

1. Be it enacted by the Senate and General Assembly of the State of New Jersey, That section one of an act entitled "An act to authorize the construction, curbing and paving of sidewalks and crosswalks in townships," approved May sixth, one thousand eight hundred and eighty-four, be amended so that the same shall read as follows:

1. Be it enacted by the Senate and General Assembly of the State of New Jersey, That on the application, in writing, of the owners of one-fourth of the property fronting on any public road or street or section thereof, in any township in this state, for the construction, curbing or paving of sidewalks and crosswalks, along one or both sides of such road or street, or along one or both sides of such section of such public road or street, it shall be lawful for the township committee of such township to direct, by resolution, the township clerk to post copies of the said application, together with a notice of the time and place, when and where the township committee will meet to receive and consider objections thereto, in five of the most public places in said township, designated by the township committee, for ten days and thereupon, after such notice shall be given, and if, at the time and place so specified, the owners of one-half of the property fronting within the limits mentioned in said application do not object thereto, in writing, it shall be lawful for such township committee, by ordinance, to direct sidewalks and crosswalks to be constructed, curbed and paved along one or both sides of such public road or street, or along one or both sides of any section of such public road or street, not exceeding the limits applied for, in such manner and with such materials as said township committee shall deem advisable; provided, that if the grade of the public road or street, or of the section thereof along which such sidewalks and crosswalks are proposed to be constructed, shall have been established, in accordance with any law, general or special, previous to the passage of the ordinance directing the construction, curbing and paving of such sidewalks and crosswalks, then the grade of such sidewalks and crosswalks shall be made to conform as nearly as practicable to the grade of such public road or street, or of such section thereof; and provided, further, that the width of any sidewalk shall not exceed one-fifth of the width of the public road or street.

2. And be it enacted, That this act shall take effect immediately.

Passed April 7, 1890.

CHAPTER CXLV.

An Act concerning sales of land.

1. Be it enacted by the Senate and General Assembly of the State of New Jersey, That no sale of lands, tenements or hereditaments heretofore made by any assignee or assignees under the provisions of the act entitled "An act to secure to creditors an equal and just division of the estates of debtors who convey to assignees for the benefit of creditors," shall be deemed or taken to be invalid or defective by reason of the failure to advertise such sale in a newspaper published at the county seat of the county in which the said lands, tenements or hereditaments are situated; provided, that such sale shall have been advertised at least four weeks in two newspapers published in the county wherein said lands are situated, once in each week next preceding the time appointed for such sale, and such advertisement shall also have been set up in at least five public places in said county, one whereof shall have been in the township wherein said lands lie, for the like term of four weeks next preceding the time appointed for said sale, but any deed or deeds made by any assignee or assignees for lands, tenements or hereditaments heretofore sold as aforesaid and advertised as above set forth shall be deemed and taken to convey to the purchaser of said lands, tenements and hereditaments a full and effectual title to said lands, tenements and hereditaments as if said sale had been advertised in a newspaper published at the county seat of the county wherein the lands, tenements and hereditaments so sold were situated.

Passed April 7, 1890.

CHAPTER CXLVI.

An Act to regulate the transfer and conveyance of burial lots and plots in incorporated cemeteries.

1. Be it enacted by the Senate and General Assembly of the State of New Jersey, That in any cemetery in said state belonging to any incorporation or association having a board of managers or directors, and whether such incorporation shall have been or shall be incorporated under a special act of this state or by the general laws thereof, it shall be lawful for the owner and owners of any lot or lots therein to transfer and convey any such lot or lots to any person or persons, or to the cemetery association having charge of the cemetery in which such lot or lots are situate, notwithstanding any restriction or prohibition of the sale of lots contained in the general laws of said state concerning cemeteries or in the charter of any cemetery company; provided, however, that before any such transfer and conveyance shall be made, the board of managers or directors of such cemetery association shall authorize such transfer and conveyance by a vote of at least three-fifths of the members of such board.

2. And be it enacted, That this act shall take effect immediately.

Passed April 7, 1890.

CHAPTER CXLVIII.

An act for confirming of conveyances of land made by virtue of letters of agency, power of attorney, or other powers or authorities.

1. Be it enacted by the Senate and General Assembly of the State of New Jersey, That all deeds, grants, sales, leases, assurances or other conveyances whatsoever, heretofore made by virtue of letters of agency, powers of attorney or other powers or authorities, whatsoever, that have been entered on the public books of record of this state whereby any lands, tenements or hereditaments whatsoever in this State, have been granted, sold, conveyed, assured, released or transferred to any person or persons, pursuant to such powers and authorities whatsoever, shall be and are hereby declared as good, valid and effectual in the law to all intents, constructions and purposes whatsoever unto the said grantees, and to their heirs and assigns, as if the constituents or constituents had then and there sold and conveyed the land or lands, and had executed deeds, according to the true intent and meaning of such grants, deeds, or conveyances, which said grants, deeds or conveyances shall be of force against, conclude and bind all and every constituents, employers, grantors of such powers and authorities, and their and all and every of their heirs, and all and every other person or persons claiming or to claim estate from or under them, and any of them, severally and respectively; provided, that all such powers and authorities as aforesaid have been duly acknowledged and now entered upon the public records; and provided further, that this act shall not affect the title of any bona fide purchaser or mortgagee for valuable consideration.

2. And be it enacted, That this act shall take effect immediately.

Approved April 8, 1890.

CHAPTER CXLIX.

Supplement to an act entitled "Further supplement to an act entitled 'An act to regulate elections,' approved April eighteenth, one thousand eight hundred and seventy-six," approved May sixth, one thousand eight hundred and eighty-nine.

1. Be it enacted by the Senate and General Assembly of the State of New Jersey, That section one of an act entitled "Further supplement to an act entitled 'An act to regulate elections,' approved April eighteenth, one thousand and eight hundred and seventy-six," approved May sixth, one thousand eight hundred and eighty-nine, be amended so that the same shall read as follows:

1. Be it enacted by the Senate and General Assembly of the State of New Jersey, That whenever in a township not divided into wards, it shall appear that two hundred or more voters in any one section of such township have to travel a distance of four miles or more to vote, that in every such case the township committee may establish an additional polling place in such section, and that in townships containing more than five hundred voters at the last presidential election, and having but one polling place, and where some of the voters have to travel a distance of four miles or more to vote, it shall be the duty of and the township committee are required to forthwith establish an additional polling place in such township.

2. And be it enacted, That this act shall take effect immediately.

Passed April 8, A. D. 1890.

CHAPTER CL.

An Act concerning the right of suffrage in this state.

1. Be it enacted by the Senate and General Assembly of the State of New Jersey, That every citizen of this state entitled to vote at a general election for members of the legislature shall be entitled to vote at any election of municipal officers held in the city, town or other municipality where such citizen may reside.

2. And be it enacted, That all acts or parts of acts, inconsistent with the provisions of this act, be and the same are hereby repealed, and that this act shall take effect immediately.

Approved April 8, 1890.

CHAPTER CLI.

An Act to provide for the appointment of an assessor in incorporated towns and cities of the third class in counties of the first class by the governing body thereof, and limit the compensation for performance of duty therefor.

1. Be it enacted by the Senate and General Assembly of the State of New Jersey, That in any incorporated town or city of the third class in counties of the first class which is divided into wards so-called, and where now it is provided and required by law that the assessors for such town or city shall be elected annually in and for such wards, such mode and manner of election of assessors is hereby abolished; and hereafter it shall be lawful for the common council or other governing body of such town or city to appoint, by the vote of a majority of all its members, one assessor, who, when so appointed, shall perform all the duties as now required by law of each and all the assessors as heretofore elected annually in and for the various wards of such town or city; and he shall hold office for a term of three years and until his successor is appointed, and as compensation for the performance of his duties as such assessor he shall receive a stated annual salary, which shall be fixed at the time of his appointment and shall not be increased or reduced during the term of his office, which salary or compensation shall not exceed the amount or sum of four hundredths of one per centum of the total assessed valuation of the taxable values, real and personal, of and in such town or city at the time of his appointment, and such salary or compensation shall be in lieu of all fees heretofore allowed to assessors in such town or city for the performance of their duties.

2. And be it enacted, That the said assessor may be appointed by the common council or other governing body of such town or city any time after the passage of this act, but shall not enter upon the discharge of his duties nor shall his term of office begin until the expiration of the term of office for which the present assessors in and for such town or city were elected; and the appointment of said assessor by the common council or governing body of such town or city shall be taken to be and is hereby declared to be the election of the successor of each of the before mentioned assessors elected in and for the various wards of such town or city as aforesaid.

3. And be it enacted, That all acts and parts of acts inconsistent with this act, be and the same are hereby repealed, and that this act shall take effect immediately.

Passed April 8, 1890.

CHAPTER CLII.

An act in relation to the power and authority of aqueduct boards or other water boards having the control of the water supply in the cities of this state, giving such boards power to contract for and construct works, to purchase or condemn lands, waters and rights, and to use for such purposes certain funds in their possession.

1. Be it enacted by the Senate and General Assembly of the State of New Jersey, That where any aqueduct board or other water board having the control of the water supply in the cities of this state, now has in its possession any moneys, funds or securities derived by taxation for the purpose of paying and redeeming bonds heretofore issued by such board, and such funds are not legally applicable to the payment or redemption of the bonds so issued, and such bonds have been otherwise paid and redeemed, it shall be lawful for such board to use such moneys, funds and securities for the purpose of providing new and additional works for the supply of such city with water, and every such board shall have power to contract for the erection and construction of all such works as may be necessary to procure such supply and provide for the storage and distribution thereof.

2. And be it enacted, That where any such board has heretofore lawfully contracted for the erection and construction of water works for the supply of such city, such board shall have power, if it is deemed necessary, to purchase, or in case of inability to agree with any owner, to condemn such lands, waters and rights as may be required, and the method of procedure, if condemnation proceedings are taken, shall be the same provided for by the act, approved April the twenty-first, one thousand eight hundred and seventy-six, entitled "An act to enable cities to supply the inhabitants thereof with pure and wholesome water;" provided, however, that such board shall not be authorized to contract for or pledge the credit of any such city for any sum in excess of the amount hereby or heretofore authorized to be expended for the providing of such water supply; and provided further, that nothing herein contained shall be so construed as to prevent any municipality from acquiring by purchase or condemnation lands, waters, personal property, rights or privileges necessary or proper for supplying such municipality with water from any source whatever, the same as if this act had not been passed.

3. And be it enacted, That this act shall take effect immediately.

Passed April 14, 1890.

CHAPTER CLIV.

An Act to provide for the enlargement of the New Jersey state prison, and to construct a hospital.

1. Be it enacted by the Senate and General Assembly of the State of New Jersey, That there shall be appointed by the governor of this state, by and with the advice and consent of the senate, three competent persons, commissioners to provide for the enlargement of the New Jersey state prison.

2. And be it enacted, That the said commissioners be authorized to erect an additional wing to the state prison, containing such accommodation as the governor and commissioners aforesaid shall think necessary; and said commissioners shall have power to select and appoint such architects, superintendents and other persons necessary, with such compensation as they may fix upon; and it shall be the duty of said commissioners, as soon as practicable, to commence the erection and alterations of such state prison buildings, and according to such plans as the joint committee of the senate and general assembly for the year one thousand eight hundred and ninety, or a majority of them, may approve; that such erection or alterations may be either by contract or otherwise, as the said commissioners may deem best for the interest of the state; and if done by contract they shall invite, by public notice, proposals for building the same according to the plans adopted, reserving the right to accept or reject any or all bids, which shall not be exceeded, but shall wholly complete at least one wing of the buildings under said plans.

3. And be it enacted, That to enable said commissioners to finish and complete at least one wing of the buildings under the plan to be adopted by said joint committee, the sum of one hundred thousand dollars be and the same is hereby appropriated, to be paid by the treasurer of the state out of any funds in his hands not otherwise appropriated, on the warrant of the comptroller and the requisition from the said commissioners.

4. And be it enacted, That it shall be the duty of said commissioners to use out of the aforesaid amount a sum not exceeding ten thousand dollars, in erecting a hospital building within the walls of the prison.

5. And be it enacted, That the commissioners shall severally give bonds to the state, in the sum of five thousand dollars each, with two sufficient sureties, to be approved by the treasurer, conditioned for the faithful performance of the duties imposed upon them by this act; and the treasurer is hereby authorized, upon the warrant of the comptroller, to pay to them for such services at the rate of five dollars for every day they may be necessarily and actively engaged therein.

6. And be it enacted, That this act shall be a public act, and shall take effect immediately.

Approved April 14, 1890.

Masonic.

The proposed Masonic Temple in Chicago is no longer a myth. The structure is finished and complete in all its details—on paper. The plans and specifications have been prepared, accepted and filed. The structure will be eighteen stories high, thoroughly fire-proof, lighted throughout by electricity, provided with sixteen of the largest-sized elevators, and having office, store and shop accommodations for nearly three thousand tenants. Three of the upper floors will be elaborately fitted up for lodge rooms, Chapter Tabernacle, Commandery Asylum and Preceptory for the Scottish Rite bodies. The building will be by far the highest in Chicago, and possibly the highest now in the world, for the ceilings of the rooms in the upper part of the building will not be less than twenty-two feet from the floor. On the second floor a suite of handsome and convenient parlors will be fitted up for the accommodation of ladies who may be on shopping tours through the building, for it is expected that the building will contain every thing of luxury or necessity that the most extravagant female may require.

The dry-goods merchant, the jeweler, the druggist and the dentist will be there. The shoemaker, the tailor, the barber and hair-dresser will be represented. Besides, special facilities may be found for marriage or divorce without leaving the building. The study of the minister and the office of the justice will be open at all reasonable hours to tie the matrimonial knot, and there are sure to be enough Chicago lawyers in the structure who for a "reasonable fee" will readily guarantee to secure a divorce while you wait. Altogether, it will be a great structure when it is up.

The prospects for a successful Knight Templar encampment in Illinois this season are not now as bright as could be expected. The members do not seem to be yearning for any display that is likely to interfere with their regular vacation.

In the death of John J. Sproull, which recently occurred at New York, the Order of the Eastern Star throughout the country has lost one of its most devoted patrons. He was the first Master Mason ever admitted into the order, and for upward of twenty-five years his labors in the order had been unremitting. He had occupied the positions of Grand Secretary, Grand Marshal, Grand Chaplain and Grand Lecturer of the Grand Chapter, and in every subordinate body of the order, from Maine to California, his name was a household word.

The officers and members of Copestone Lodge of New York recently visited Old Well Lodge at Norwalk, Conn., and by invitation conferred the third degree. In Minnesota or Illinois this would be considered high treason. In those two States Grand Masters have arisen, who have said that to permit the work of any other jurisdiction therein is equivalent to making innovations in the order of Masonry, and they will none of it. What a commentary on our Grand Lodge system, and what a parody on the universality of Masonry. Fortunately these are exceptional cases, but they are sufficient to indicate the widely divergent tendencies of modern American Masonry under a system of absolute State supremacy.

Odd-Fellows.

One of the most important questions that will come before the Sovereign Grand lodge, which meets at Topeka, Kan., next September, will be a proposition to amend the constitution of the order, so as to admit young men when they attain the age of eighteen years. It is well known that the subordinate lodges in several States favor this amendment, because it will give the order control of a great army of young men before they become eligible for membership in the other fraternities. The proposed change may be expedient, but its wisdom is doubtful.

New York State is to have a troop of mounted hussars composed of three chevaliers from each canton in the State. The headquarters of this gallant body will be either at Albany or Syracuse. The name of the organization is to be "The Busbee Hussars," and they will make their first public appearance at the triennial cantonment in Chicago next August.

The Rebekah's through the country are preparing to come to Chicago during cantonment week in great numbers, and will enter the contest for the liberal prizes offered by the Grand Sire. The rewards are to be offered for proficiency in the exemplification of the beautiful work of this degree.

The Elks.

The members of Louisville Lodge No. 8 are already arranging plans to secure the session and reunion of the Grand Lodge at Louisville, Ky., in 1891. For this purpose a large representation of the order from that city will be in attendance at Cleveland ready to urge their claims with the most persuasive eloquence, and I am inclined to think they will get what they are after. These migratory meetings of the Grand Lodge are sure to stir up considerable interest in the order throughout the country and increase its membership and usefulness everywhere.

New York Lodge is showing signs of being restored to its right mind at an early day. Rumors of a proposition to compromise with the Grand Lodge are around, but it is safe to say that nothing short of unconditional surrender or satisfactory evidence of absolute obedience will be considered.

Chicago will be represented at Cleveland by about 800 Elks, most of whom are members of Chicago Lodge No. 4. They will leave Chicago July 6th, reaching Cleveland the following morning, and their headquarters will be at the Hollenden Hotel. McDOUGALL.

THE ART OF PRINTING.

From Gutenberg to the Perfecting Cylinder Press.

The Most Important Invention Ever Made—The Firm of Fust, Gutenberg, & Schoeffer—The First Movable Type and Screw Press.

EVERY human invention sinks into insignificance when compared with the discovery of printing. The period of its birth, late as it is in human history, may be styled the era of light—the commencement of true civilization and progress.

In the early part of the fifteenth century a young man named John Gooseflesch, who was born in the neighboring village of Sulgeloch in the year 1397, went to reside at Mentz or Mayence, with a family of the name of Gutenberg, whose appellation (quite a common custom in those days) he soon assumed and ever afterwards bore. Whilst there he became implicated in one of the insurrections of the citizens against the nobility, which during that part of the Middle Ages were so frequent and ultimately terminated in the establishment of the institutions which were the basis of the freedom of the commercial classes in Germany.

When he could do so with safety he returned to Mayence and soon joined forces with a wealthy burgher whom, in all probability, he had known before his flight. This was Herr Fust—usually but incorrectly termed Faust—and the young genius and the hard-headed business-man in partnership entered upon the undertaking to supersede the laborious occupation of the manuscript writer.

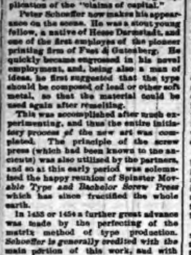
The first movable type was fashioned out of wood, but very quickly they hit upon the expedient of casting them in metal, which, being a more durable substance, was likely to increase and perpetuate their profits. Herr Fust is usually credited with this improvement, but on somewhat insufficient grounds. Probably it was only a Middle Age application of the "claims of capital."

Peter Schoeffer now makes his appearance on the scene. He was a stout young fellow, a native of Hesse Darmstadt, and one of the first employes of the pioneer printing firm of Fust & Gutenberg. He quickly became engrossed in his novel employment, and, being also a man of ideas, he first suggested that the type should be composed of lead or other soft metal, so that the material could be used again after remelting.

This was accomplished after much experimenting, and thus the entire initiatory process of the new art was completed. The principle of the screw press (which had been known to the ancients) was also utilized by the partners, and so at this early period was solemnized the happy reunion of Spinster Movable Type and Bachelor Screw Press which has since fructified the whole earth.

In 1453 or 1454 a further great advance was made by the perfecting of the matrix method of type production. Schoeffer is generally credited with the main portion of this work, and with seemingly substantial grounds.

He, it is stated, after a long course of experiments privately cut the whole alphabet in hard-metal matrices, and displayed the result of his labors and ingenuity to his employers. Fust was so delighted that he promised to give him his only daughter, Christena, in marriage—a promise which he soon afterwards fulfilled. The new son-in-law was also made the junior partner in the firm. The matrix-made type was very quickly much improved by adding antimony to the original lead.

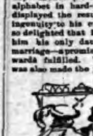


THE FATHERS OF PRINTING.

The introduction of printing into England was due to William Caxton, and his successor, Wynkin de Worde, who established for themselves a high reputation both as printers and letter founders.

How he acquired a knowledge of the art of printing is not recorded, but he must have been an apt student, for, according to De Worde, in 1470 he was already printing his first work in Cologne. In 1474 he returned to England and set up the veritable Anglo-Saxon pioneer press in the Almonry at Westminster.

About the middle of the sixteenth century the style of type now used to express an emphasized word was introduced by Aldus, and was called from the place of its origin Italic. Soon afterwards the greater plainness of the Roman characters was fully recognized, and they gradually superseded all other kinds of type for book-work except in Germany.



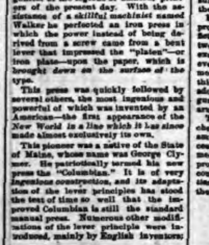
INKING BALLS.

For a long time Holland was the great type producer, but in the early part of the eighteenth century England took the lead, and that land and America are now the masters of the art.

Towards the end of the eighteenth century the first radical improvement was made by an English nobleman, Earl Stanhope. He was a personage of marked mechanical ability and the progenitor of the legions of amateur printers of the present day. With the assistance of a skillful machinist named Walker he perfected an iron press in which the power instead of being derived from a screw came from a bent lever that impressed the "platen"—or iron plate—upon the paper, which is brought down on the surface of the type.

This press was quickly followed by several others, the most ingenious and powerful of which was invented by an American—the first appearance of the New World in a line which it has since made almost exclusively its own.

This pioneer was a native of the State of Maine, whose name was George Clymer. He patriotically termed his new press the "Columbian." It is of very ingenious construction, and its adaptation of the lever principles has stood the test of time so well that the improved Columbian is still the standard manual press. Numerous other modifications of the lever principle were introduced, mainly by English inventors; the most important of these was the "Ruthven," patented by Hopkinson of London, which is still in use.



AN EARLY PRINTING PRESS.

The introduction of steam as the motive power is—with the exception of the invention of movable type—the most momentous event in the history of printing. It is the crowning discovery, and the substitution of a voluntary machine for main muscular strength has, in less than a century, revolutionized social conditions. Before, however, stating the circumstances of the application of steam power to printing, we should notice an invention, without which steam printing could never have been generally adopted. This is an improvement for inking the types by means of cylindrical composition rollers.

An Englishman, Mr. Foster, discovered a composition, an intermixture of glue, treacle, tar and isinglass, which could be made to adhere to a wooden roller, and which was fully as pliable and effective for inking purposes as the balls. The composition and durability of the rollers have been vastly improved since, but the type has still remained unchanged. All now was ready for the steam cylindrical printing machine.

After the usual groping and tentative efforts to satisfy a pressing need the man who was able to master the situation came to hand. This was Herr Konig, a German, who, being unable to obtain any recognition for his idea in his native land, emigrated to England and settled in London in 1807 or 1808. He was finally enabled to produce a small machine operated by steam power and capable of working one thousand impressions an hour—about quadruple the capacity of the most perfect manual press of that day. Three enterprising printers and book publishers—Messrs. J. Bensley, R. Taylor and L. Woodfall—supplied the necessary capital for experimentation and construction.

It is a somewhat remarkable fact that the periodical inefficiency of newspaper printing machines to supply a constantly increasing circulation with sufficient promptitude has been the cause of every progressive step in the improvement of cylinder printing. This pressure was first felt in England, and for nearly fifty years the London Times was always the steady patron of cylinder press improvers.

A machine was recently built which produces 96,000 per hour of a four-page paper, 48,000 of an eight-page, 24,000 of a sixteen-page paper. These are delivered at the head, pasted, folded quarter-page size and counted off in lots of fifty. If required a supplement can also be pasted inside the main sheets.

Another is almost a thing of life, insomuch that the press may be started to print an eight-page paper, but in a few minutes can be transformed into a producer of a sixteen or thirty-two page sheet, the folding, counting, etc., etc., automatically following the increased size. It must also be understood that these gigantic pieces of mechanism require but little service, and usually seven or eight men are fully competent to attend to the press department of even newspapers like the Tribune.

Another highly important invention connected with the advance of the typographical art is the process of stereotyping, by which all the letters forming a page of type are cast in one piece or plate of type-metal.

The process is older than the cylinder press and is believed to have been invented by William Ged, of Edinburg, Scotland, about 1720. After much perseverance, in the year 1725, he was able to form an arrangement with the University of Cambridge for casting their Bibles and prayer-books. The first plates met such a warm reception from the typos and pressmen employed at the University, and so much damage was done that the new process was quickly discarded and remained almost in abeyance until after the steam press came into vogue. Since then its adoption has become almost universal.

RAPID-FIRING GUNS.

A Sketch of Their Evolution to Their Present Perfection.

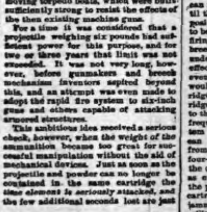
Lieutenant Seabury's Device—Some of the Advantages of His New Invention Clearly Set Forth—About Guns in General.

Toward the close of the year 1881 advertisements were issued in England, says the New York Herald, for designs of a gun that should fulfill the following requirements: The weight of the gun and mount was not to exceed 1,120 pounds; the projectile was to weigh six pounds, and to have a muzzle velocity of not less than 1,800 feet per second; the projectile and powder charge were to be formed in a single cartridge; only three men were to be required to manipulate the gun, that is, to do the loading, training and firing, additional men being of course required to keep up the ammunition supply; the gun was to be capable of firing twelve aimed shots per minute, particular stress being placed on the matter of aimed shots, the capacity of the gun for actual rapidity of fire being considerably in excess of that rate.

About the same time ordnance experts in France were impressed with the necessity for an increase in the caliber of rapid fire artillery and they advertised for a three-pounder rapid fire gun that should fulfill relatively the same conditions. The outcome of these efforts were the Nordenfeldt and the Hotchkiss rapid fire guns, one or the other of which may be found in vessels belonging to nearly every one of the great naval powers, Germany, with her Krupp system, being the most prominent exception. These guns were called for chiefly as a defense against the swiftly-moving torpedo boats, which were built sufficiently strong to resist the effects of the then existing machine guns.

For a time it was considered that a projectile weighing six pounds had sufficient power for this purpose, and for two or three years that limit was not exceeded. It was not very long, however, before gunmakers and breech mechanism inventors aspired beyond this, and an attempt was even made to adopt the rapid fire system to six-inch guns and others capable of attacking armored structures.

This ambitious idea received a serious check, however, when the weight of the ammunition became too great for successful manipulation without the aid of mechanical devices. Just as soon as the projectile and powder can no longer be contained in the same cartridge the time element is seriously attacked, and the few additional seconds lost are just sufficient to take from the system its great essential of rapidity.



VERTICAL SECTION, BREECH OPEN.

Consequently the rapid fire guns of to-day do not exceed a caliber of five inches.

For our own navy we are making guns of four inch caliber, which are powerful enough to pierce the sides of unarmored cruisers and can be fired almost twenty times per minute. The experiments with the 4.72 inches gun abroad show that it can hit a target six feet square five times in thirty-one seconds with a 45-pound shot, which when it leaves the muzzle of the gun travels at the rate of 2,226 feet per second, and goes with force enough to penetrate 16¼ inches of wrought iron.

The great advantage of the rapid fire system is due solely to details of breech mechanism and ammunition. We are fortunate in this country in possessing the requisite plant for making metallic ammunition, which in its finish and general make-up places us easily ahead of the rest of the world. Smokeless powders will soon be at hand and will contribute their share toward increasing the power of the charge while diminishing its weight. What remains to be done, therefore, is to modify the mechanism about the breech of the gun so that there will be more simplicity of parts, with a lessening of weight, while the strength is increased and the guarantees of safety from accident are assured. Ordnance experts and inventors in this country have had these points in view and have been gradually improving upon the various systems in use until they have evolved mechanism that is more practical than any in use abroad.

The very latest system is that of Lieutenant Samuel Seabury, U. S. N., which is here illustrated and which gives promise of answering the requirements by combining simplicity and lightness with safety and rapidity. The cut showing the breech-block thrown open is from the mechanism as originally designed, since which, however, modifications have been introduced that tend greatly toward attaining increased simplicity of movement with corresponding efficiency. The fact that the powder and projectile must be in one cartridge to insure rapidity in loading necessarily confines, for the present, at least, the application of the rapid fire systems to calibers having ammunition that requires only one man to handle it.

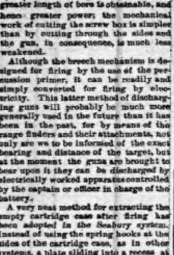
This system of mechanism is, however, readily adapted to the larger calibers, as the reduction to one motion in opening and closing the breech-block enables the simplest gearing for power to be employed.

As the cut showing the breech plug when open illustrates, the slotted screw principle is employed and the reasons for its selection over that of the sliding system are based upon the facts that a greater length of bore is obtainable, and hence greater power; the mechanical work of cutting the screw box is simpler than by cutting through the sides and the gun, in consequence, is much less weakened.

Although the breech mechanism is designed for firing by the use of the percussion primer, it can be readily and simply converted for firing by electricity. This latter method of discharging guns will probably be much more generally used in the future than it has been in the past, for by means of the range finders and their attachments, not only are we to be informed of the exact bearing and distance of the target, but at the moment the guns are brought to bear upon it they can be discharged by electrically worked apparatus controlled by the captain or officer in charge of the battery.

A very neat method for extracting the empty cartridge case after firing has been adopted in the Seabury system. Instead of using the spring hooks at the sides of the cartridge case, as in other systems, a plate sliding into a recess at the bottom of the screw box has been substituted.

The front end of this plate is so formed as to embrace a portion of the head of the cartridge, while a lug serves to engage a corresponding recess at the forward end of the breech block. At the rear end of the extractor plate is a transverse slot engaging the long arm of the extractor lever. The great advantage of this change lies in the power produced by the unscrewing of the breech block preparatory to withdrawal to loosen the empty cartridge case in the bore, while the rapid rearward motion given by the action of the mechanism in opening against the short arm of the extractor lever serves to throw the cartridge to the rear as effectively as in the smaller calibres of rapid fire guns.



HORIZONTAL SECTION, BREECH CLOSED.

The locking device for the breech block, which in the older models was in the handle, in the modified form consists of a strong panel pivoted on the rear face of the gun, which by gravity drops into a recess on top of the rack when the block is in the locking position. To open the plug simply throw up this panel and turn the handle quickly around to the right, which opens the bore of the gun and leaves every thing in readiness for the insertion of the cartridge. In this single motion for withdrawing the breech plug is to be found one of the strongest features of the Seabury system and one that seems well calculated to secure the greatly to be desired rapidity of action.

Guarding against premature explosion through the careless handling of the mechanism has been kept clearly in view by the inventor, and the trigger, which is on the rear face of the gun, can not be moved by the lock string until the return of the handle to the locked position. A second safety appliance is to be found in a cam which moves the firing pin to the rear, for until the breech block is locked this cam remains under the shoulders of the pin and effectually prevents its moving, and, even could the pin get adrift the cam would prevent it from striking the cartridge primer. In rapid loading the cartridges are not always pushed well home to their seats, and the result is quite frequently a "jam." In this system the head of the cartridge can be as far as seven inches from its proper firing position in the four-inch caliber without endangering the quick working of the mechanism, as even at that considerable distance the plug as it is being closed pushes the cartridge into its place without the least jamming.

Simplicity and accessibility of parts recommend the Seabury system for work in the field as well as afloat, as any trouble caused by sand or other material interfering with its free working can be quickly remedied and damaged pieces can very readily be replaced by spare parts without the aid of a skilled mechanic.

PERSONAL AND LITERARY.

—Rosa Bonheur is sixty-seven. She says she still has work enough in her mind to fill two lifetimes. She sold her latest picture for more than $10,000.

—More than twelve thousand letters and manuscripts of John Ericsson, the great engineer, have been put in the hands of Colonel W. C. Church to use in the preparation of his biography.

—Browning's grave was dug close to the front of Chaucer's monument, exactly between it and the monument of Cowley, in the east aisle of the south transept of Westminster Abbey, known as the Poets' Corner.

—Thomas Seymour Denton has invented the word "manuprint," verb, adjective and noun, for work done with a typewriter. It is at once more accurate and suggestive than "manuscript" for such work.

—The Sultan of Turkey recently submitted the manuscript of a comedy to a Parisian manager under a nom de plume. The play was carefully examined and displayed certain marks of crude ability, but its motif was too Oriental for even the Parisian stage.

—A new letter-press machine, for printing simultaneously in various colors is now attracting attention in France. It is the invention of Mr. Stalin, of Paris, who has taken out about forty patents for foreign countries. It is said to be the most practical apparatus of the kind yet devised and likely to greatly reduce the cost of color work.

—It is said that Goethe was a victim of La Grippe. Lewes, in his biography, says of the poet's last illness that he had taken cold, and the physician on arriving "found him very feverish with what is known in Weimar as the 'nervous fever,' which acts almost like a pestilence."

—Of Zola's new novel, "La Bete Humaine," 45,000 copies were sold on the day of the issue, a record that has not been equaled since the appearance of "Nana." The total number of books issued by Charpentier, the publisher, over Zola's signature is now 1,031,000. Besides the profits on these, Zola receives $4,000 for every novel published in feuilleton form before the book is issued.

—The free public library established in Baltimore five years ago by Enoch Pratt, at an expense of about $1,250,000, is accomplishing a great work among the reading class. Last year the number of books issued reached 461,840. The rooms are crowded daily, and it has become a great educational force in the city, being especially valuable to the poor. Besides the main library, there are five branches located, so as to accommodate all sections of the city.

—The smallest and daintiest prayer-book in the world is the "Finger Prayer-Book" which has just been issued by the Oxford University Press. It is printed in diamond and brillant type on the famous India paper. It contains 670 pages, 3¼x1 inches, and weighs only three-quarters of an ounce. It is arranged for "the chatelaine, the waistcoat pocket, or the purse," and ranges in price from 38 cents to $6.50. Though the paper is exceedingly thin, it is entirely opaque, and the type is beautifully clear.

The Capital in Summer.

"I trust that you are enough of a salamander to stand a Washington July," was the sarcastic expression in a letter recently received from a friend in Chicago. Probably the most appropriate reply to this sally would be: "I hope that you are enough of a polar bear to stand a Chicago January." If the windy city on the big lake is as comfortable in midwinter as Washington City is in summer, it has certainly been misrepresented by newspapers and travelers. There has been no more charming weather than we have had thus far this season at any summer resort in this country. Every year a great many visitors from different points come to the city of Washington to spend the summer. It is certainly a delightful point from which to make cheap and charming excursions to the scenes of the civil war, not far distant, as well as down the Potomac to Old Point Comfort, across Maryland to points on Chesapeake bay, as well as little trips to New York and Cape May. Washington ought to be and probably is the best governed city in this country. Congress controls every thing through a board of three commissioners. The Congressional Library is open the year round, while the Capitol and various departments contain so much of interest that even the oldest inhabitants have not seen the half of them. To visiting strangers, and especially to those of intelligence and inquiring turns of mind, the sources of pleasure and enjoyment in the National Capital are simply limitless.

THE NEW REGISTRY LAW.

The Commissioners of Registration Organized.

As exclusively stated in The Press of Saturday, the county commissioners of registration, appointed by the Governor under the new election law, met at the court house, Elizabeth, yesterday morning, and organized.

The commissioners are Hon. [illegible] Chamberlain of Rahway, and E. C. Woodruff of Elizabeth, Republicans; and Judge James T. Wiley of Elizabeth, and Hon. Robert L. Livingston of this city, Democrats.

Mr. Woodruff was absent. Judge Wiley was elected President, and Mr. Woodruff permanent secretary. The commissioners then adjourned until August [illegible] when they will meet, to receive the nominations from the county executive committees of the men who are to compose the election boards in the various districts of the county. FATS AND THINS STRUGGLE.

Puffed by the oxygen of elation and the wind of egotism, to twice his natural rotundity, [illegible] Captain Keller announced Friday on the ball ground at the close of his bloated team's victory over the Plainfield "Thins," that his nine were the city's champions—barring the Crescents—and were open to challenges from all ball teams of the World of their weight.

Three hundred people witnessed the game which had been advertised to be played between the Fats and the Lawyers. The latter, however, broke their faith with the public, and won in fact if they ever run for office. A team of Thins was pitted against Captain Keller's nine and an exciting contest resulted. The Fats drew their assortment of meat from the stockyards of Union and Somerset counties. The nine included Gaddis the Bounding Gazelle of Bound Brook, the elephantine Ross of Elizabeth and Smith the clay-bird breaking Hippopotamus. But the Thins could only pick from home—and they were plainly a "picked" lot.

In the first inning the score was tied at 11 to 11. But in the next four innings the Fats added 15 runs to their score with the help of the umpire and by batting two of the Thins' pitchers—Demarest and Rumpel—out of the box. Cadmus pitched the remainder of the game thereafter and held the Fats down to two runs. Another fatal factor in the struggle of the Thins was the wicked treatment they received from Umpire Martin. He is fat himself, and it was loudly [illegible] by many in the audience, that he gave most of the decisions—close and not close—in favor of his fellow plumps. It was even rumored that he had been subsidized by three Ten Boy cigars and sundry other collateral, to give the Fats the game. But such charge must be untrue, as George Thatcher's nephew played on the Thins and he had his eye on Martin.

Nevertheless there was much kicking against the decisions of the early part of the game, and to protect himself on these occasions from the indignation of the players and the public, Martin was forced to draw a large navy revolver from his Gordon sash and hold the crowd at bay. At the close of the sixth inning, however, he was compelled to retire from the field, which he did without that pleasant smile that generally widens his 12 [illegible] (Ale) countenance. The score then stood 27 to 14 in favor of the Fats, but their opponents' opportunity dawned.

A member of the Press staff was persuaded to umpire the balance of the game which he did to the satisfaction of everybody—on the thin team. But in spite of all sorts of yellow and rocky decisions against the Fats, the new umpire could only bring the score of the Thins up to 25. Other features of the game were the infield playing of Charley Smith, the batting of ex-Councilman Wilbur and the contortions of Capt. Keller on first bag. The score by innings was:

Fats	11	7	2	2	4	1	0	1	*	28
Thins	11	2	0	0	0	1	0	2	7	25

A Kind Word From Somerville.
(From the Somerville Unionist.)

The Daily Press, of Plainfield, has enlarged by adding two columns to each page. We are glad to see this evidence of prosperity.

Congratulations from Bound Brook.
(From the Bound Brook Chronicle.)

The Plainfield Press will please accept our congratulations on the evidences of prosperity manifested by the fact that it has been compelled to enlarge. He also by the addition of several columns.

Before the City Judge.

Mary Traynor of East Front street, appeared before Judge Codington on Saturday, to answer to a charge of disorderly conduct. The complainant was Jeremiah Cash, who claimed that the defendant was continually spitting in his face. Mary was fined two dollars.

Pushing the Work on the County Roads.

The work on the county road between this city and Elizabeth is progressing favorably. Contractor Wood who built the road between Plainfield and Westfield, expects to reach Cranford with the work today. Some three month's time will yet be required to complete the road to Elizabeth.

Why Other Papers Blunder.

Again must the warning be sounded for the guidance of our contemporaries—If you don't see it in The Press it isn't so! Friday's Elizabeth Herald contains an account of a runaway in this city Wednesday, and the throwing out on West Front street of "Mrs. John Day and her two little children."

As John Day is a widower, and the one who was thrown out by Wednesday's runaway is a young maiden lady—as was published exclusively in these columns—the blunder of our contemporary was not only stupid but offensive. Don't be a fool—read The Press.

Plainfield Property Changes Hands.

Changes in real estate were Friday recorded with the County Clerk at Elizabeth, as follows:

Martin Welles and wife of Westfield, to Cornelius H. Patton of Westfield, land on w s Elm street, Plainfield, 134x231 feet, $1.

Cornelius H. Patton and wife to Mary Patton Welles, same tract in Westfield, $1.

Percy F. Phillips of Plainfield, to Frederick Eugene LeCand of Natchez, Miss., land on Madison avenue, Plainfield, s.s. 100x148 feet, $1.

Frederick Eugene LeCand to Mary Frances Phillips, same tract in Plainfield, $1.

For The Championship.

Since the organization of the "Middlesex Gun Club," some four years ago, its members have met and vanquished all competing gun clubs of the State who had the audacity to contest with them, earning the proud reputation of "Champions of the State at live bird and inanimate target shooting." About a year ago, a number of gentlemen organized themselves into a club known as the "Newark Gun Club," with Jacob Pentz as their Secretary. "Jake" is an all around good fellow, and got the idea in his head, somehow, that the "Newarks" could beat the "Middlesex." One of the rules in their by-laws is to the effect that no member of the "Newark" shall contest with any other club he may belong to, when the "Newark" are contestants. As a matter of fact it must be stated that several crack shots of the State belong to both clubs, having received their education at the traps as members of the "Middlesex," so, in consequence the "Newarks" will take some good shooters on their team from the present club. Nevertheless, the "Middlesex" has lots of good timber, and will produce a team that will paralyze the "Newarks" the 7th day of August, next the date set down for the contest, which will take place on the grounds of the "Middlesex Gun Club" at Dunellen, N. J., commencing at 1 o'clock "sharp." The teams of the contest will be 15 members of each club on a side each to shoot at 10 live birds each, losers to pay for birds. It is safe to say that will be the most interesting and exciting contest ever witnessed at the traps in the State of New Jersey.

A CHAMPION TROUT CATCHER.

Jas. F. Hotchkiss of this city, has just returned from a two weeks' trip to the Adirondacks, looking over some 10,000 acres of pine timber lands with a view of purchase and sale. He was accompanied by Mr. Boyle of Michigan, an experienced land looker.

Mr. Hotchkiss says he saw large quantities of as fine cork pine as Michigan ever produced, even on Cass River, many trees being 6 to 7 feet in diameter and 130 to 140 in height. Spruce also grows in abundance of the very best quality. He also reports deer as being unusually plenty and very tame. During his two weeks stay in the woods at Little Rapids he saw no less than 31 deer; 18 in one day at the foot of Albany Lake, 7 being in one group.

He says he ate 43 meals at the Hotel, at 41 of which trout was served. Mr. Hotchkiss caught fifteen of the spotted beauties, and brought home four which weighed 2 lbs & 2 oz, 1 lb & ¾ and 1 & ½ lbs, respectively. A Press reporter had the pleasure of just gazing upon the 2 lb, 2 oz fellow, and he was a beauty. Mr. Hotchkiss shows the effects of his trip—he always had a strawberry complexion, but now it is the color of a boiled lobster.

It's a Dangerous Spot, Too.

One of the darkest spots on the face of the earth at night, is at the corner of Somerset street and Craig place in North Plainfield. Wednesday evening it was so dark at that point that a person could hardly distinguish a hand before their face.

A Decision Reached.

The committee on Plainfield's Soldiers Monument held an adjourned meeting on Thursday, and adjourned again. There were only present: Chairman Tyler, Secretary Runyon, Comrades Negley, Moore, Stewart and Olsson, and Messrs McCutchen and Glenn. The design, however, as published in The Press was decided upon, with slight changes in the size of the capital.

The Other Man Deceived.

Another paper published a denial by Mrs. Miller of the account exclusively published in The Press, of her being attacked and choked by an ex-convict. The other paper adds that the publishers of The Press were deceived.

We were nothing of the kind! We not only had the whole story correct ourselves, but Mrs. Miller's husband endorsed it before it was published.

A Choir of Young Ladies.

St. Mary's church has now a choir of young ladies of which it is very proud. This choir was organized by Mrs. Rhome for requiem masses. Among them are some excellent singers.

The leaders are Miss Josie Shaffer, Miss Lucy Rafferty, Miss Sarah Sharkey, Miss Maggie Lawler and Miss M. Sheehan. Others are as follows: Miss Katie Flanagan, Miss L. Butcher, the Misses L. and N. Casey, Miss C. C. Kelly, Miss L. McTyre, Miss M. Gaines, the Misses M. and T. Scully.

What a Whopper!

Justice Hardy and ticket agent Hummer, in their imported outing suits, went to Bound Brook fishing Friday morning, leaving ex-Marshal Becker to act as Borough Judge in the absence of the Justice.

As neither of the fishermen had returned at noon, fears were expressed that a whale had pulled them overboard, or that they had quarrelled over the jug of bait and in a struggle had fallen in the water and sunk together. But about one o'clock they wired for a freight car to bring home their fish. The Justice claims to have caught one large-mouth bass that weighs 329 pounds.

The Snyders Adjudged Guilty.

The case of the city against Jacob Snyder and his wife, Margaret, who were charged with creating a disturbance on West Fourth street on Sunday last, came up before City Judge Codington at the station house, Thursday afternoon. Snyder could not get a lawyer to defend him, and he did not therefore put in an appearance. His wife, however, was present and pleaded her own case, she having no witnesses.

Some half-dozen witnesses testified against the Snyders, showing them to be quarrelsome people. Judge Codington adjudged both of the defendants guilty, and reserved sentence.

Bridge Contracts Awarded.

A committee from the Union County Board of Freeholders, met at Westfield, Thursday, and awarded the contracts for the erection of two new bridges in Westfield Township, one of them to be located on the Springfield Road and known as the "Ephriam Clarke bridge," with a twenty-four foot span, and the other known as the "Lee Farm bridge." William T. Kirk of this city received the contracts for the iron work, and the contracts for the mason work was awarded to Westfield parties.

Mr. Kirk has been very fortunate of late in securing bridge contracts in Union county. The firm which he represents, Wilkins Bros., is one of the largest in the country, and the work performed upon the bridges by this firm has always proved satisfactory.

Hiram B. Willis' Death.

The following from the Madison, N. J., Eagle in reference to the death of Hiram B. Willis, will be interesting to many of the older inhabitants who will remember him as a former resident of Plainfield:

Hiram B. Willis was a past middle age, although up to the time of the illness which caused his death, was in fair health with every prospect of living to a good old age. For the past twenty-two years he has held the responsible position of private book keeper for Brown Brothers & Co. the New York bankers. In that capacity he proved a faithful and indefatigable worker, and to his close attention to business can be ascribed the cause of his illness and death. He was a man of strict integrity, kind and generous and a friend in whom we could place the utmost reliance. He was well read in the latest and best works of the day, and thoroughly acquainted with the scriptures. The death of such a man while an irreparable loss to his family is likewise a great loss to the community.

Mr. Willis was the only brother of Mrs. E. A. Rose and Mrs. A. M. Runyon.

Cross Again.
(The Sons from the Somerville Unionist.)

Somerville's estimated population is 3,025, not as large as North Plainfield. There are scores of people who believed it was more. They live in Somerville.—Plainfield Times. Somerville has never claimed a population exceeding 3,500, and if it has 3,025, it exceeds all claims by 125. Some people are not so smart as they think.

The West Ends are playing "great ball." They defeated the Perth Amboys on Saturday, by a score of 23 to 2. The Plainfield public are anxiously awaiting that series of contests promised them.—Plainfield Times. A series of contests has not been promised the Plainfield people this year, except by some of the Plainfield papers that knew nothing about it. The West Ends have engagements until the close of the season, and have made no promises whatever to Plainfield.

—The Somerset County Board of Registration met at Somerville Monday, and elected Elisha Coriell of North Plainfield, chairman, and Stewart Huff of Somerville, Secretary.

BOROUGH COUNCIL MEETING.

Petitions for Macadamizing Presented—Chief Martin of the Fire Department Resigns, and Mayor Place Sends in a Communication Favoring the Opening Up of Peace Street—Thomas Rutledge Elected Regular Marshal—Other Business Considered.

The July meeting of the North Plainfield Council was held July 8, with Mayor Place in the chair. All the other members were present.

After the minutes were read, corrected and approved, petitions were presented and referred as follows:

From M. S. Taylor, J. F. Wilson and others, asking for the macadamizing of Green Brook road, from Grove street to Codmus' Hill, the petitioners agreeing to pay certain sums set opposite to their names.

From Charles Smith and others, asking for similar improvements on Craig place, the petitioners agreeing to stand a portion of the expense.

Mary B. Loomis and others petitioned the Council to accept as a public driveway a portion of Westervelt avenue, to be known as "Westervelt avenue extension."

CLAIMS

were presented, referred and subsequently ordered paid as follows:

H. J. Martin, $6 20; Geo. P. Becker, $37.35; Job Coddington, $4.88; N. Y. and N. J. Globe Gaslight Co., $260.67 and $260 67; Plainfield Gas Co., $22 65; Wm. Bos, $3 50; P. T. B. Norton, $70.50 and $35.56; P. Beader, $2; P. K. Righter, $6 25; L. Conrad, $8.75.

A communication was received from H. J. Martin, tendering his resignation as Chief of the Fire Department, said resignation to take effect immediately. The matter was referred to the Fire, Water and Lamps Committee, and at a later stage in the proceedings Councilman Emmons, from said Committee, offered a resolution which prevailed, accepting the resignation.

Mayor Place then sent in the following communication, which was referred to the Street Committee:

July 9, 1890.

To the Borough Council:

I desire to call the attention of the Council to the importance of taking some action in connection with the City of Plainfield, in extending Peace street from the city limits through the borough to such point in North Plainfield as may be deemed advisable. The question is being seriously talked of by the city authorities, and Mayor Male is anxious that the street should be widened to the city limits, and that the borough act in harmony with the city to accomplish this highly important improvement.

As to the wisdom of opening Peace street through the borough—if the city will widen it to the limits—there can be no question. It would add much value to the property adjoining it, making a direct route to and from the depot, and not only this, but those living in that part of the borough would have much shorter access to the depot and city than they now have.

I am informed that many owners of property, and residents upon the proposed street within the borough, are very anxious to have it extended, and will render all the aid possible to that end.

This improvement possibly could be accomplished with but little, if any, cost to the borough, and be of great benefit to the property and residents East of Somerset street.

I therefore would recommend that the Street Committee, or a Special Committee, as in the judgment of the Council may seem best, be empowered to investigate this matter, confer with the Plainfield City authorities, and report thereon as soon as practicable.

CHARLES PLACE,
Mayor.

Mr Sebring, from the Fire, Water and Lamps Committee, reported that 500 feet of new hose had been received and that the same was satisfactory. He also reported that the committee took proper precaution to guard against fires on the Fourth, with no expense whatever to the borough. The report was filed.

Justice Hardy reported for the month 19 arrests, of which 7 were for disorderly conduct, 3 for being drunk, and the balance for trivial offences. The total fines amounted to $62 45, leaving a balance less court expenses of $51.25. The report was filed.

Mr. Smalley, from the License and Marshal Committee, reported favorably upon the matter of purchasing a strip of land 18x40 feet in the rear of the engine house, for $225, and later on a resolution was offered by Mr. Hegeman and adopted, authorizing the committee to contract for the purchase of the land, making the contract provisional for a clear title and also for a driveway leading into Emily street. The purchase price is not to exceed $225, and the land is to be used for borough purposes, principally for the erection of a lock-up.

The committee also recommended providing a suitable room, wherein Justice Hardy can hold court, and also for the appointment of a regular Marshal. Report received and recommendations adopted—with the exception of Justice Hardy's room being designated.

The Street Committee, through its Chairman, Mr. Hegeman, reported that certain portions of Willow, West End and Rockview avenues, have been turnpiked; Green Brook road has been re-graded, and the work of macadamizing Mercer avenue was begun on July 7. The total receipts have been $1,391.69; and the expenditures, $1,139 59. The report was filed.

Under the head of miscellaneous business, Mr. Hegeman offered a resolution appointing Thomas Rutledge regular marshal, for a term to expire on or before April 1, next, at the pleasure of the Mayor and Council, his compensation to be at the rate of $450 per annum.

Mr. Emmons moved to amend the resolution by inserting the name of Thomas McDonald, whose past services, he said, should be considered. After some debate a vote was taken on the amendment, and it was lost, Messrs Buckle, Needham, Hegeman and Smalley voting "No" A vote was then taken on the original resolution and it was carried, Mr. Smalley again voting "No."

Upon resolution offered by Mr. Hegeman, the Street Committee was authorized and empowered to borrow $700 for street work in anticipation of taxes.

Mr. Buckle was appointed chairman pro tem of the Street Committee, during Mr Hegeman's intended absence for a few weeks, the Auditing Committee reported favorably on the claims and they were ordered paid.

The Council then adjourned.

Bitten by a Cat.

Maud Warner, a little girl who claims Plainfield as her home, was admitted to the Pasteur Institute in New York city, July 9, suffering from a cat's bite.

There were two little holes in the child's leg and the doctor in charge claims that the wounds, slight as they are, would be more apt to cause hydrophobia than a laceration ten times as bad caused by a dog.

In talking with Dr. Paul Gibier, one of the attending physicians, the girl's mother stated that the child was petting the cat, when it turned on her and bit her leg. The cat ran under the bed, spitting and frothing at the mouth. The cat was subsequently shot. The accident only took place Monday.

Thousands of cures follow the use of Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy. 50 cents.

AGAIN THE ACMES LOSE.

In the second inning of Saturday's game, the Crescent League's ball team gave 1,000 of their friends such kaleidoscopic display of yellow ball playing as will probably never be witnessed on the grounds again. The Acmes rolled up a total of five runs without a hit. Even Billy Lee made more errors than he had in all the 16 games together of the year. Martin, also, needed a dose of little liver pills, and Wiegand, too, was way off.

Still that made no difference. Even Gregg did not lose heart when he saw his support all fall apart. He pitched great ball; the infield braced up, and Loffery, Lee, Wiegand, McIndoe and others, batted out a victory.

Curtis, of the Acmes, the whitest manager in the profession, has a great team but the Crescent League's is greater. Although in their previous Saturday's game with the Rahways, the Acmes got 12 hits, only two of the team hit Gregg. On the other hand the Crescents lined out with ease the left-handed Kesler's curves, for a home run, five two-baggers and five singles.

The Acmes held the lead until the eighth inning when Lee tied the score by his own two-base hit and a wild pitch. In the ninth, Loffery opened with a two-bagger, Weigand sent him to third with a safe hit and he came home on Jones' fly-out to centre field. The game was thus won with only one man out, Wiegand on second and McIndoe at the bat. The score:

HIS FAMILY HONOR AT STAKE.

The Injured Husband of a Borough Scandal Adds to His Own Troubles.

Jacob S. Jones of North Plainfield believes himself to be a greatly wronged husband. Disgraceful rumors deeply affecting the honor of his family are said to have been afloat a long time past. After suffering in silence till the accusations and taunts of others became unbearable, he sought out the man whom gossips had implicated in the scandal, and demanded satisfaction. The object of his wrath was Henry Phillips, an employe of R. W. Rice & Co., and, failing to reach an understanding through conversations on the street, he invited Mr. Phillips the alleged culprit and Mr. Rice as a sort of arbitrator, to his home, to seek, through amicable adjustment, to put an end to the scandal.

Those present at the resultant interview were Mr. and Mrs. Jones, Mr. Phillips and Mr. Rice. Mr Phillips denied accusations which were made, and Mr. Jones became so incensed that he struck Mr. Phillips and ordered him out of the house. A war of angry words, emphasized by an occasional tussle, followed. Mr. Phillips was moderately calm, and used no profanity, but Mr. Jones gave vent to most objectionable language, and when the row reached the sidewalk the neighbors had to listen to much that cultured ears dislike.

Because of the foul language and the blows Mr. Phillips had Mr. Jones arrested, and a trial was held before Justice Hardy in Warren engine house, Tuesday, when all those facts were produced in testimony.

A crowd of citizens stayed away from the circus and for two hours sweltered in the heat of the crowded room to listen to a review of the delectable details of the case. Justice Hardy, in laying down the law, told Mr. Jones that when Mr. Phillips entered the Jones domicile as an invited guest, Mr. Phillips was entitled to the same rights and privileges possessed within those walls by Mr. Jones, and it was the duty of Mr Jones not only to refrain from doing him injury but to protect him from harm at the hands of others.

There were, however, said the Court, mitigating circumstances which would tend to lessen the degree punishment. Mr. Jones had believed—whether justly or not—that Mr. Phillips had done the honor of his family an irreparable injury, and it was therefore easy for Mr. Jones to lose his temper and chide and fight.

Mr. Jones was fined five dollars and costs which, however, was afterwards remitted.

TO COST OVER $20,000 UNFURNISHED.

The Union County Country Club Will Begin at Once the Erection of a Magnificent Club House and Casino at Seventh Street and Arlington Avenue.

In response to notice by Secretary Wm. T. Kaufman, the members of the Union County Country Club—which has grown out of the suggestions for such a club published in The Press of over a year ago—met in special meeting at the home of Pliny Fisk, chairman of the building committee, Tuesday night at 8 o'clock.

The plans for the proposed club buildings by a celebrated New York architect, were submitted and met at once with the approval of everybody. A full description of these plans will appear in these columns later. Suffice it to say that the buildings will contain everything desired in a Club, besides a concert hall in the Casino that will accommodate 600. There will be private dining rooms, and a competent chef and steward on yearly salaries. Bowling alleys, baths, billiard and card rooms will be provided, besides a barber shop, buffet and cigar counter for members only.

There is now in the treasury of the club $30,000 that has been received for bonds, and work will be begun at once so that the Club's quarters may be open for use at the beginning of the coming season. This $20,000 is to be expended only for the grounds and buildings. The furnishings and fittings are to be paid out of the initiation fees of $50 each. The property consists of 40,133 square feet at the corner of Seventh street and Arlington avenue—formerly the Arnold estate—which cost the Club $7,250, and an adjoining lot 163 by 47 feet, giving additional depth on Arlington avenue, which cost $1,300. This leaves a balance of over $20,000 for the buildings. They will be Plainfield's greatest architectural ornament, which is saying a good deal.

This Must be Stopped.

Complaints reach this office frequently that the employes of the Electric Light company are "trimming" people's trees to suit themselves and provide uninterrupted access for their wires. On Eighth street, recently, a lineman cut a big hole through the thickest foliage of a handsome maple.

A BIG PAPER PUT TO BASE USES.

The "World" Rising Higher Every Day in the Contempt of Plainfield.

The World of Wednesday is again held up to the contempt of the people of this city, by its perfidious Plainfield correspondent. Again is evidenced the truth of the statement The Press was called upon to make Tuesday—the columns of the World are now at the mercy and service of some one who misuses the privilege and power for the villification of those against whom he has a personal spite, and for the upholding of an insubordinate and profane petty officer now in disgrace.

The public know these facts: Captain Carey was reduced to the ranks and suspended from the police force of this city for three months, for the use of obscene language to his superiors including the President of the Council and the President of the Police Board.

The Council by a unanimous vote have demanded of him an accounting concerning a sum of $200 he has drawn from the City treasury. This he failed to do, and the Council have unanimously instructed the Corporation Counsel to begin proceedings to recover the money.

At the close of his term of suspension, policeman Carey did not report for duty, and after waiting five days as provided by the ordinance, he was notified by the Police Board to appear and show cause, if he had any, for his insubordination. Upon the service of this notice he returned a filthy answer to the Secretary of the Police Board, Councilman Hetfield. And when Councilman Roberts, President of the Board, asked him courteously why he had not reported for duty, Carey replied: "None of your —— business!" At its next meeting the Council will expel him in disgrace.

In view of these truths, and many other facts as damaging to his reputation and his case, the disgust of the people with the World is natural when it publishes an article so false in complexion as that in its columns Wednesday, headed:

PERSECUTING THE CHIEF.
AN OFFICER PUNISHED FOR ENFORCING THE LAW.
The Citizens Pay His Wages.

Quality Requisite for Membership.

The new vocal society which was told about in these columns some time ago, is growing. Over 40 applications for membership have already been received, and some have been accepted. Leader Chapman first tries and passes upon the voices of the candidates before they are admitted.

Minstrel Dockstader's Backer.
(From the New York World)

Joseph B Miller, proprietor of Laing's Hotel, at Plainfield, who is embarking in the minstrel business with Lew Dockstader, is going to retire from the hotel business and devote his whole attention to the management of the new venture in which he is the chief stockholder. He furnishes $9,700 out of the $10,000 with which the company will begin business. Mr. Miller is quite popular in Plainfield, where the news of his intended retirement from the hotel business will be received with regret. The Miller-Dockstader troupe will open in Plainfield.

Changes in Borough Realty.

Recent changes in real estate in North Plainfield Township have been made as follows:

Newton B. Smalley to John Herman, property in North Plainfield, $300.

Same to Martin Codington, property in North Plainfield, $300.

Daniel H. Thickston et ux to William E. Johnson, property in North Plainfield, $3,400.

Jeremiah Manning et al to William L. Saunders, property in North Plainfield, $1.

Annie E Crum et al, ex'rs of Warner Heidelоff, dec'd, to Marie Durenmatt, property in North Plainfield, $3,400.

Nicholas H. Heideloff et ux to Marie Durenmatt, property in North Plainfield, $1.

Buried With Masonic Honors.

The remains of the late James C. Lyons were interred in the Baptist burying ground at Scotch Plains July 9 with Masonic honors by members of Jerusalem Lodge, No. 26, F. & A. M., of this city, of which body deceased was the oldest in membership. The funeral services at the house and church were conducted by the Rev. Dr. J. H. Parks, who preached an instructing and interesting sermon from Genesis XV: 15, the Rev Mr. Rich offering prayer. At the grave the Masonic ceremonies were conducted in an impressive and able manner by Past Master B. Frank Coriell.

The pall bearers were Past Masters John Chandler, Henry Woodland, Charles Yeager and Brothers I. D. TenEyck, Samuel Ball and A. B. Darby.

Who Says Lightning Doesn't Strike Twice in the Same Spot!

After the funeral of the late James C. Lyons, at Scotch Plains, last week, the will of the deceased was read in the presence of the family and near relatives. The will named Wm. C. Stanbury and a Mr. Dean, both of Scotch Plains, as the executors. The estate is valued at upwards of $30,000, over one-half of which is left to the Scotch Plains Baptist church, and the balance goes to the widow, and other surviving members of the family.

This is the second time the Scotch Plains Baptist church has been blessed in a financial way within the past few years, the church having been left in the neighborhood of $300,000 by the late France Lee.

Young People's Sociable.

There was a large attendance at the mid-Summer Sociable of the Young People's Society of Christian Endeavor of Warren Mission chapel, held in the chapel on Thursday, and too much credit cannot be given to the committee who had the matter in charge, for the able and efficient manner in which the entertainment was conducted. The following programme was rendered:

Singing—Walk in the Light .... Choir
Scripture Reading
Singing—Help a Little .... Choir
Prayer
Song—Put Your Shoulder to the Wheel ....
.... Solo, Miss B. Ingram and choir
Solo—Then You Will Remember Me.. Miss T. Smith
Recitation—The Dandy Fifth.... Miss S. Marsh

We Caution All Against Them.

The unprecedented success and merit of Ely's Cream Balm—a real cure for catarrh, hay fever and cold in the head—has induced many adventurers to place catarrh medicines bearing some resemblance in appearance, style or name upon the market, in order to trade upon the reputation of Ely's Cream Balm. Don't be deceived. Buy only Ely's Cream Balm. Many in your immediate locality will testify in highest commendation of it. A particle is applied into each nostril; no pain; agreeable to use. Such a Project Would Only Have Three Votes.

It is unnecessary to tell the people that there is no possibility of the Council buying the Hand building for a City Hall. The people haven't seen it in The Press so they know it isn't so. All stuff written to the effect that such a scheme is probable, is as false as its grammar and merely the vagary of a flighty brain.

Speer's Port Grape Wine,
FOUR YEARS OLD.

THIS Celebrated Wine is the pure juice of the dead ripe Oporto Grape, raised in Speer's vineyards, and left hang until they shrink and become partly raisined before gathering. Its invaluable

Tonic and Strengthening Properties
are unsurpassed by any other Wine. Being produced under Mr. Speer's own personal supervision, its purity and genuineness are guaranteed by the principal Hospitals and Boards of Health who have examined it. The youngest child and the weakest invalids use it to advantage. It is particularly beneficial to the aged and debilitated and suited to the various ailments that effect the weaker sex. It is in every respect a WINE TO BE RELIED ON.

Speer's Unfermented Grape Juice
Is the juice of the Oporto Grape, preserved in its natural fresh sweet state as it runs from the press by fumigation and electricity, thereby destroying the exciter of fermentation. It is perfectly pure, free from spirits, and will keep in any climate.

Speer's (Socialite) Claret
Is held in high estimation for its richness as a Dry Table Wine, especially suited for dinner use.

Speer's P. J. Sherry
Is a Wine of superior character, and partakes of the rich qualities of the grape from which it is made.

Speer's P. J. Brandy
IS A PURE distillation of the grape, and stands unrivalled in this country for medical purposes. It has a peculiar flavor, similar to that of the grapes from which it is distilled.

Why, Mary, how your baby cries!
Yes, he has colic again.
Why don't you give him Dr. Taylor's Best Soothing Syrup?"
Is that good?
Yes, for Pains, Colds, Coughs, &c., it is excellent for either young or old. Of the many kinds of medicines I have used in my family I have found none to equal it.
Thank you, Jane, I will try it. Margaret Ann, go as soon as you can to either REYNOLDS', or SHAW'S Drug Store, and get a bottle of Dr. Taylor's Soothing Syrup. 1-3-6m

IN CHANCERY OF NEW JERSEY.

To Henrietta Schlitz and Charles C. Schlitz, her husband.

By virtue of an order of the Court of Chancery of New Jersey, made on the day of the date hereof, in a cause wherein Freeman Stelle is complainant and you are defendants, you are required to appear, plead, answer or demur to the bill of said complainant on or before the nineteenth day of August next, or the said bill will be taken as confessed against you.

The said bill is filed to foreclose a mortgage given by you to the said Freeman Stelle, dated October 26th 1888, on lands in the city of Plainfield, New Jersey, and you Henrietta Schlitz are made defendant because you own said lands, and you Charles C. Schlitz are made defendant because you are the husband of the said Henrietta Schlitz and claim some interest in said lands.

Dated this eighteenth day of June in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and ninety.

Mr. Flagler, the Best [illegible] Man in the World, Starts the [illegible]

The current issue of The Journalist states that in about six weeks a new daily newspaper is to be established in New York city by H. M. Flagler, John D. Rockefeller and others of the Standard Oil groupe. A column of detail concerning the enterprise is given, and everybody in Newspaper Row is talking about it, and believes it true. [illegible], however, The Journalist seems to be mistaken. J. C. [illegible], Secretary to Mr. Flagler, writes to THE PRESS that there is no truth in the report.

The Funeral of Robert C. Page.

Called by one common bond of sorrow, a large number of distinguished people from New York, Brooklyn, Plainfield and other cities assembled in the Crescent Avenue Presbyterian church Tuesday afternoon to pay tribute to the memory of the late Robert C. Page. The funeral services were conducted by the Rev. W. R. Richards. An eloquent eulogy was delivered by the Rev. Dr. Yerkes.

The floral display was probably the richest ever seen at a similar occasion in Plainfield. The most conspicuous of the offerings was a broken column, over six feet in height, composed of roses of choicest bloom, entwined with wreaths of evergreen, and twined with rare Jerusalem leaves. This was from the New York Seventh Regiment, of which Mr. Page was a member. Another broken column was surmounted by [illegible].

The remains, encased in a costly flower-bedecked casket, were placed in the vault to await interment.

The [illegible] of Paris

Are one of the modern wonders of the world. That marvelous network of underground streams, upon which the tourist can travel by rail and boat, constitutes the bowels of the great city. This labyrinth of streams is kept with scrupulous care; for any obstruction in the flow of the sewage would be attended with serious results to the health of the inhabitants of the city above. The sewers of the human system are the liver and bowels, and in order to keep disease out of the wonderful organism of which they are a part, they must be kept always free and unobstructed. Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Purgative Pellets are the best laxative and cathartic known for the purpose. They [illegible] granules, [illegible], always [illegible].

The condition of Mrs. Kate M. Overbaugh, who was so seriously injured in a runaway accident on the mountain, Sunday afternoon, continues to improve, but it will be a long time before she will be able to leave the Hospital, where she was admitted as a patient.

Mrs. Seymour G. Smith was summoned by wire on Friday, to the bedside of her mother, Mrs. L. B. Proctor, who is lying seriously ill at her home in Hartwick, N. Y. Mrs. Smith took her children with her, and they will all remain until Mrs. Proctor is better.

Superintendent James W. Davis of the Crescent Carpet Mills, this city, has purchased the junior partner's interest in the firm of Kline & Steele, coal and lumber dealers of West Front street. The firm will hereafter be Kline & Davis, but the latter will not sever his connection with the Crescent Mills.

Dr. and Mrs. T. H. Tomlinson of La Grande avenue sailed for Europe on Wednesday last, per steamer "Germanic," of the White Star line, to make a tour of London, Belgium, Germany, Switzerland, Paris, etc., and to enjoy the beautiful scenery along the Rhine. They will return about the fifth of September.

The marriage took place, Wednesday, July 9, of Miss Hattie Johnson to Irving G. Stelle the becoming young liveryman of West Front street. The ceremony was a quiet one and performed at the bride's home, in Dunellen, by the Rev. Mr. Slosson of that place. A host of friends heartily congratulate the young couple on their happiness and bright prospects.

Messrs A. G. [illegible] of this city and Henry [illegible] of New York, left on morning for a few days' fishing on the upper Delaware where they expect to fish from the point where E. Lockwood Mellick caught the large bass two years ago which weighed 5 lbs 7½ oz. when placed on exhibition at A. M. Vanderbeek's store. A good time and plenty of fish is predicted for them.

The Rev. Dr. Yerkes of the First Baptist church, exchanged pulpits Sunday morning with the Rev. Cornelius Schenck of the Trinity Reformed church, and those who were absent on account of the weather, or otherwise, missed a most excellent discourse by the learned Dr. Yerkes on Paul's wonderful revelations, his trials and buffetings, his thorn in the flesh, and the wonders of divine grace and strength, as found in his second epistle to the Corinthians, the twelfth chapter, seventh to tenth verses.

At the regular monthly meeting held by the Camera Club on Tuesday, Mrs. Geo. H. Babcock, Mrs. J. E. Greenleaf and Mrs. Wm. H. Lyon, Jr., were elected members. The club purposed extending every facility to its lady members, and hopes to number all the ladies in Plainfield who are interested in the art, upon its roll.

THE PAREGORICS WILL PLAY THE FATS.

Indignant at Captain Keller's Brag, Captain Miller Calls Him.

Captain Tee Kay Eller's bombastic challenge to play any Plainfield ball team except the Crescents, and his fat team's claim to be the bloated champions of the World, have aroused the ire and fire of Captain Drug Joe Miller's Paregoric nine. The result is that when the two captains met in Horton's furnishing goods store, there were words, and a match was immediately arranged.

Papers duly drawn up, signed and witnessed, provide for the playing of a game on Wednesday, July 30. This agreement is signed by both captains and witnessed by ex-Councilman Coriell. The players are to be selected from the following lists:

Fat men—Keller, McMurray, Smith, McCloud, Ross, Gaddis, Wilbur, Bowman, Gordon, Evans and More. Paregorics—Miller, Horton, Duckworth, Trust, Vandertoek, Rogers, Winn, Sebring, Force and Beerbower.

The losing team binds itself to tender a supper for 22 to the winners.

OBITUARY.

EUGENE V. LORTON.

At his home on West Fifth street, about seven o'clock on Saturday evening occurred the death of Eugene V. Lorton, one of the best known and universally esteemed residents of the city, aged about fifty years.

Mr. Lorton had been in ill-health for a long time past. He was first stricken with muscular rheumatism, but the physicians in charge succeeded in breaking that up, and dysentery set in. Again the skill of the physicians was brought to bear and the latter complaint was finally checked. His latest illness was typhoid fever which resulted in his death.

Mr. Lorton was a prominent member of the Knights of Pythias, and for the past ten years he has held the position of Grand Keeper of Records and Seals of the Grand Lodge of the State. He was a member of Unity Lodge, No. 102, K. of P. of this city, and was held in high esteem by all who knew him. He leaves a widow, two daughters and one son to mourn his loss.

Mr. Lorton was, at the time of his death, a member of Grace church, the Rev. E. M. Rodman, the rector, being present at his bedside during his last moments.

Besides holding the distinguished position which he did, Mr. Lorton was a member of Wetumpka Lodge, Knights of Honor, and he was also a member of Crescent Division, Uniformed Rank, K. of P. of this city.

ROBERT C PAGE.

Robert C Page, only son of Mr. and Mrs. James Perley Page of this city, who died of consumption at Paul Smith's in the Adirondacks, Sunday, was one of the youngest members of the New York Produce Exchange. He was only twenty-three years of age, yet had been a member of the Exchange since Feb. 4, 1887. He developed unusual ability as a grain broker and was a great favorite on the board. He was a member of the Plainfield Bicycle Club, and the Seventh New York Regiment.

The Visitors Entertain Their Entertainers.

Plainfield Council Royal Arcanum received a visit from a delegation of Carteret Council, Rahway, Monday night. They accompanied Supreme Deputy Grand Regent [illegible], ex-Postmaster Gilbert Lindsley and the Rev. Mr. Hull.

Regent [illegible], of this city, presided. The visitors entertained all present with a programme of singing, speech making, etc. Later an adjournment was had for supper.

Alpha Lodge Meeting.

Alpha Lodge, No. 4, I. O. of G. T., met in regular session Monday night in their hall, corner of Park and North avenues. A report from the Chairman of the Picnic Committee was adopted. There were no initiations, but two were proposed for next meeting night. Among those present in the lodge room was State Deputy, Mr. Robertson, who afterwards entertained the members with a reading entitled "How to make meetings interesting." After songs and recitations, which were rendered by several members of the lodge, the meeting adjourned.

John have you seen that woman lately? John is astonished! What woman?

That woman picking grapes for Speer's Wine. Just read her in another column and read about it, the wines are found by chemists to be absolutely pure and equal to the best in the World. The Board of Health in large cities and leading Hospitals have adopted their use where wines are needed.

THE POLICE BOARD MEETING.

The Police Board of the City of Plainfield met at the office of their Secretary, on Saturday evening at 8:25 o'clock. Present—Messrs Roberts, Moffett, Spangenberg and Hubbard.

Ex-Captain of Police Carey and his counsel, Hon. Foster M. Voorhees, were present, in answer to a notice served on Mr. Carey to show cause why he should not be removed from the police force of the city, because of failure or neglect to perform police duty since July 1, instant, under the act of the Legislature of 1886, page 48, which is as follows:

"Provided that any member of the police force of any city, who shall be absent from duty, without just cause, for the term of five days, shall, at the expiration of said five days, cease to be a member of such police force."

In response to a question put by Chairman Roberts to Mr. Carey, as to why he had not reported for police duty on July 1 or since, Mr. Carey replied, that it was none of his (Mr. Roberts') —— business; but his counsel stated to the Board that he declined to make any statement.

Officer McCue was sworn and stated that he served the notice on Mr. Carey to appear, and that Carey used very filthy and indecent language about a member of the Police Board.

Captain of Police Geo. W. Grant was next sworn and said that Mr. Carey had not reported to him for duty on July 1 or since then and that the city was short one officer, and he had been obliged to employ special officers; that it was more expense to the city to employ a special officer than a regular.

Mr. Voorhees declined to show any cause or reason why Mr. Carey had not gone on duty. He presented the following written objections:

"Mr. Carey now objects at the close of the case against him, as he did before the opening thereof, to the proceedings of the committee in the matter, on the ground of want of jurisdiction, illegal constitution and irregular method of procedure of the committee so far as the subject matter of the notice is concerned, and the action thereunder, contemplated, and hereby tenders himself as he has heretofore tendered himself ready at all times to perform the duties of his office,

"On behalf of Mr. Carey."

Mr. Hatfield inquired as to what office was referred to, but Mr. Voorhees declined to state.

Mr. Carey was then found guilty by a unanimous vote of the Board, of absenting himself from police duty, and neglecting and refusing to perform police duty since July 1, without any cause shown.

The Board then adjudged that Mr. Carey having absented himself from his post for the space of five days and over, justify his dismissal from the force and decided to so recommend to the Common Council.

A VENERABLE COUPLE'S ANNIVERSARY.

Sunday at the home of their son—the pastor of the First Church of Christ—Wm. R and Margaret Cleaver, ate their sixty-ninth wedding breakfast, they having been married on a Sunday morning before breakfast at the home of the bride's father, John Darby, Scotch Plains, N. J., in 1821. Mrs. Cleaver is now in her eighty-eight year.

Her uncle, Ezra Darby of Scotch Plains, represented New Jersey in Congress, when the State had but one Congressman. Mr. Darby died at his post, and was buried in the Congressional Cemetery at Washington.

Mrs. Cleaver's cousin, Henry Stanbery, also of Scotch Plains' birth, was Attorney General of the United States, during President Johnson's administration. Mr. Stanbery resigned his high office for the purpose of defending his chief in the impeachment trial which has passed into history as the greatest State case of the age. President Johnson was not impeached.

Mr. Cleaver, who was born in Vermont in 1798, was a nephew of Wm. Cleaver, Bishop of York and later of St. Asaph's. Mr. Cleaver taught the village school at Scotch Plains, seventy years ago. Among those who were his pupils, are the learned A. Coles, M. D., and a well-known official of this city. Mr. Cleaver voted first for Adams, has been contemporaneous with every President of the United States, and has survived all of them excepting three. The minds of the aged couple are still sound.

A Severe Injury.

On Friday afternoon last while A. J. Winckler was superintending the repairing of a barn on Manning avenue, North Plainfield, the heavy wooden gutter suddenly fell, striking him on the face, cutting his nose, cheek and lips and knocking several teeth loose. Dr. Wm. E Mattison sewed up the cuts and Mr Winckler is doing as well as can be expected under the circumstances.

Plainfielders at Asbury.

The following residents of the city and borough are registered at Asbury Park:

Bristol—Mr. and Mrs. L. H Biglow, Jr., Ray and Gladys Biglow, Mrs. Thos. Rafferty, Mrs. Samuel J. McCutchen, Wm. M. McCutchen, Lester M. Daniel, R. M. Stelle. Metropolitan—Mrs. L. M. French and Miss French, J. A. Jackson. Leadley—Dr. D. C. Adams and family, Mrs. J. Honeyman, Mrs. J. M. Hatfield and child, J. L. Marshall and family. Brunswick—C. N. King. Sunset Hall—Max Munger. Minot House—Henry Beals.

Arrivals at Hotel Netherwood.

The following are the arrivals at The Netherwood during the past week:

W. B. Crane, E. R. Chapman, Mr. and Mrs. Jenney, Mrs. S. A. Smith, Mr. and Mrs. J. M. Gildersleeve, F. R. Bonner, H. Y. Stillman, H. L. Eaton, Thomas H. Cullen, Miss Florence Taylor, J. R. Ryer, of New York.

Mr. and Mrs. H. A. Lattin and child, Ira Perego, Miss E. L. Perego, Miss G. E. Perego, Miss Fannie Whitehouse, Mr. and Mrs. H. L. Balch and children, Mr. and Mrs. H. W. Williams and child, of Brooklyn.

Mr. and Mrs. J. W. Sanford and J. W. Sanford, Jr., of Plainfield.

Honest Words From an Honest Source.

The Christian Intelligencer of the 3d inst., said: "Amid the storm of obloquy falling from some sources upon Governors Hill and Abbett, it is pleasant to notice one good thing in each. Our Governor signed the bill exempting religious and benevolent institutions from the collateral inheritance impost, which was simply a mean and needless tax on charity. The Governor of New Jersey, despite earnest solicitation to the contrary, refused to sign the bill licensing gambling on the race courses. It is a pleasure to speak favorably of dignitaries when they do well, and both of these officials deserve well of their own citizens in these respects at least."

Mr. Hunt to Succeed Mr. Goodrich.

There was a special meeting of the Board of Education held on Monday, at which were present Trustees Kirkner, Murray and [illegible]. A communication was read from E S. Hunt accepting the position as teacher of the High school senior class, left vacant by the resignation of Mr. Goodrich.

The Board decided to remove the fence in front of the Stillman building, and it was voted upon and adopted that the Board divide the contract of coal awarded to Cook Bros., by giving half the amount to C. H. [illegible].

The following bills were presented and ordered paid when found correct: William Hand, $5; W. R. Mathes, 10; W. L. Force & Bro., 15.50; Spencer Conway, 2; Plainfield Gas Light company, 3.50.

THE FUNERAL OF E. V. LORTON.

Knightly Brethren From All Parts of the State Attend the Obsequies.

As large a body of society brethren as ever before attended a funeral in Plainfield was present at the ceremonies over the remains of the late Eugene V. Lorton in Grace Episcopal church yesterday. Knights of Pythias and Knights of Honor from various cities joined with the local lodges, and with the non-society mourners completely filled the church.

The leading Grand Pythian officers of New Jersey, of whom Mr Lorton had been one, were prominent among the visitors from other places. The local lodge, of which he had been a member, sent floral emblems, including two broken columns, one from Unity Lodge and one from Perseverance Lodge, Knights of Pythias, a crescent from Uniform Rank, Knights of Pythias, a combination of pillow, anchor and star from the State Grand Lodge, a scroll from the Knights of Honor, and an upright cross from the ladies of Grace church.

The committal service of the Episcopal church was conducted by the Rev. E. M. Rodman, and was followed by the ritual service of the Knights of Pythias, conducted by Prelate VanEmburgh of Unity Lodge, assisted by S. E. Flower. The music was of a high order, and was rendered by Arthur Freeman, organist, and a special choir consisting of Mrs. Mumford, Miss Morgan, Staunton Smith and Harold Runyon.

The pall bearers were L. B. Woolston and J. F. Buckle of the Plainfield Knights of Pythias, C. W. Kilbourne of New Brunswick, Grand Prelate, D. N. Messler of Somerville, editor of The Jersey Knight, and T. O. Doane and L. R. Blackford of the Plainfield Knights of Honor.

The remains were conveyed by train to Orange, for interment in Rosedale cemetery. The chief mourners accompanied the body to its last resting place.

THE MALIGNMENT OF ABNER P. DOWNER.

Town Gossips Blaming Him Because R. P. Moore's Rooster Took a Night Out.

R. P. Moore's game rooster seems to have passed through an unusual experience, and the mystery of the matter is the occasion of much gossip in the little village of Fanwood where all parties concerned reside. It is much to be regretted however, that the good name of Abner P. Downer is connected with the affair in a way that casts a doubt upon that gentleman's assertive claims of innocence.

The rooster, which has been the winner of many prizes and battles, is always kept and tended in a box stall especially erected and arranged for his royal nibs. Mr. Moore's own hands prepare the rooster's food and trim his spurs. Somebody—and there's where Mr. Downer's name has been brought in—took the rooster off the other night and after either running the bird through Colonel Moore's stone cracker or fighting cats with him, left him to wander home alone.

He arrived all right. His feathers were all gone though the quills remained. But why Mr. Downer should be blamed, is not apparent. A PRESS reporter interviewed a number of representative and otherwise townsmen of Fanwood, this morning, and although some confessed that Mr. Downer had grown stouter and his skin fairer since R. P. Moore had begun to breed fowls and Spring chickens had ripened sufficiently to pick, yet no one would consent to be quoted as authority for the rumor that Mr. Downer knew more than was guiltless about the strange fate of the game rooster.

THANKS, JUST THE SAME.

(From the Elizabeth Journal.)

The Plainfield Press has increased in size, by the addition of several columns. The Journal knows what is to be forced to enlarge, through the patronage of the public and demand upon the advertising columns, and we therefore heartily congratulate the Press. It is a lively paper and makes it a point to give the news. The only thing against it is its politics. We hope the paper may continue to grow greater, and its politics to grow less.

Hooked a Shad.

Jacob O. Field went fishing with his brothers Alfred and Richard, and Louis H. Brown of Broadway, below the dam, Saturday, at Bound Brook. He caught a shad on a hook and line. After a struggle of fifteen minutes he succeeded in landing the fish in the boat. It was a nice specimen of a very unusual occurrence. Mr. Field is a scientific fisherman, but this is the first time he ever succeeded in catching a shad on the hook and line.

Great Lathes to Help Make a Navy.

The magnitude of the job of making the guns for the new navy may be realized when it is said that the lathes alone for turning the gun bores will cost $125,000. The Naval Board awarded the contract to the Pond Machine Tool Co., in this city, and to fulfill the contract the company has had to enlarge its big main building by nearly one-fourth, as already stated in THE PRESS. Plainfield is probably the only place in or near New York where anything connected with the new war ships is under way.

Do You Hear Us, Rahway?

On Saturday, July 5, the Acmes defeated Rahway's ball nine by a score of 10 to 4. One of the papers of that city said, after the game:

Curtis evidently had selected the best team at his control, for in our opinion no stronger combination has played here this year. They were heavy hitters, sharp fielders, good base runners and the battery A No. 1. They played with a vim and energy and were justly entitled to their victory and all the honor of defeating the best semi-professional team in the State of New Jersey! (Do you hear us, Plainfield?)

The same team of Acmes played Plainfield's nine, last Saturday, but after presenting them with five runs in the second inning to encourage them, the Crescents knocked them all to pieces with ease. Yet Rahway classes her team with Plainfield's.

One But Not Two.

It must have been very pleasant and gratifying to Mr. C. Forester, the foreman of the machine shop of The Pond Machine Tool Company, to listen on Monday to the many expressions of satisfaction which his final decision has called forth. On Saturday he had decided to resign his position with the above firm, in order to take charge of Mr. Lea's new shop, but quiet reflection on Sunday worked the happy change and he will remain in his old position.

This will no doubt greatly modify the loss to the firm of Superintendent Thos. Lea of the same department, who having bought out a jobbing shop in New York city leaves as soon as arrangements have been made for his successor.

—The electric light which has recently been located in Exchange alley, is a much needed improvement, and is a great benefit to the people who pass through the alley on their way to and from Trinity Reformed church.

You Were Once Beautiful, Madam.

But your glass tells you that you are so no longer. Why is this? It is because you are suffering. You may "paint an inch thick," as Hamlet says, but you cannot conceal the ravages of disease. No wonder you are low-spirited. But why suffer any longer? Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription will restore the bloom to your cheek, the sparkle to your eyes, the old-time lightness to your step. It will make a happy woman of you again. It cures all ailments peculiar to your sex. The only medicine sold by druggists, under a positive guarantee from the manufacturers, that it will give satisfaction in every case or money refunded. See guarantee on bottle wrapper.

AN OLD MAN COMMITS SUICIDE.

"Bone" Soper, an old man, who has for a long time past made his home among the farmers of Piscataway Township, committed suicide on Friday night by taking a dose of laudanum.

The man last worked for a farmer named Richards, and on Friday he left home, complaining of feeling unwell, and telling his employer that perhaps he (Mr. Richards) would never see him alive again. He came to this city, purchased a vial of laudanum, and some time during the evening went into an old barn near the flax factory at South Plainfield, where he deliberately drank the laudanum and laid down and died. Soper's body was found about ten o'clock on Saturday morning. Dr. Nelson of New Market was summoned, but life was extinct.

The suicide was noted throughout the township for his profanity. The body of the unfortunate man was taken to the Piscataway Township poor farm for burial.

Mr. Soper was a man of very resolute disposition. Some time ago he froze one of his toes. It troubled him considerably and caused him great pain. He finally took a chisel and cut the toe off. At another time he cut off with the same chisel a finger which had been crushed. He was a carpenter by trade and worked at odd jobs through Middlesex county, particularly at South Plainfield. His brother, Ellis Soper, of New Brunswick, was at one time captain of a schooner and he was highly respected. The bottle was found close beside him, with the contents two-thirds gone.

Who Was It Meant For?

A large bullet was shot through the window of the Plainfield Gas Light company's office on East Fourth street, the other day. It broke the glass and imbedded itself in the wood-work a few feet from the chair that stands in front of the desk of Treasurer Harry G. Runkle.

A Suit for Damages Settled.

The suit brought by Berne Egel against Abram L. Cadmus, proprietor of the Commercial Mills in this city, for damages for false imprisonment, has been settled in a manner satisfactory to Mr. Egel.

The case of Charles Ramsberger, also for false imprisonment, it is understood is still unsettled.

Another Company to Start From Here.

Plainfield seems to be considered the minstrel's mascot. Thatcher lives here, Dockstader sought his backing here and now Gorman's company are coming for a week to rehearse, try on their new clothes, give their opening performance next week Thursday, and start on their season's tour.

Settling the Fourth of July Claims.

The Committee having in charge the Fourth of July celebration at Westfield, met Friday night and squared up all accounts incurred in connection with the public demonstration. After all claims were paid there was a balance of eight dollars in the treasury, which amount was turned over to the free reading room.

He Died Because His Brother Did.

George, one of the nine-months-old twin boys of Mr. and Mrs. Geo. Whitely of North avenue, died Tuesday, after a short illness from cholera infantum.

The other boy who was perfectly strong and healthy at the time of his brother's death, at once sickened and failed so rapidly that he was dead at five o'clock Wednesday. The saddened parents are greatly to be sympathized with.

Saturday's Races.

On the track of the Gentlemen's Driving Park Association Saturday's races were as follows:

The first race was between John Osborn's sorrel horse "Colonel" and Nat. Robbin's black horse "Doctor." "Colonel" won both heats. Time 3.00½ and 2.56

The second race was between John Hayes' brown horse "Andy" and Philip Jenner's sorrel mare "Blanche Warwick." "Andy" won first heat in 2.48 and "Blanche Warwick" the second in 2.46. The concluding heat was postponed on account of the threatening weather until next Saturday.

Charles Brewer drove J. Wesley Johnson's brown mare "Lady Thistle" a mile in 2.47¼ and repeated it in 2.42.

The One Well-Bred Man Was From Plainfield.

The Prohibition Central Committee, which met at Trenton Tuesday, expelled all newspaper men from its sessions.

Secretary W. W. Winans of Plainfield, representing Union and Somerset counties, met the knights of the pen afterwards and apologized for the ill-breeding exhibited by the cold-water men from the thirteen other counties. He said his fellow-Prohibitionists were disgruntled because they had been misrepresented at their last meeting.

Mr. Winans is engaged, with Plainfield as his headquarters, in tabulating various statistics concerning the Prohibition party in New Jersey.

A Minstrel Trust Completed.

H. J. Sayers and Harry Clapham, managers respectively for Thatcher's, and Dockstader's minstrel companies, met in Plainfield Tuesday by appointment, coming one from Hartford and the other from Wilkesbarre. They entered into an agreement dividing the territory of the United States so that there would be no interference or competition between them, after the plan originated, and so successfully carried out by Barnum and Forepaugh.

By this arrangement the two leaders of minstrelsy have assured to themselves the enjoyment of the entire profits of their line of business in the country for the season of 1891-92 and thereafter. Other organizations will trail along like the pony shows behind the two only great circuses, and eke out a living off the crumbs that fall from George's and Lew's tables.

Save Your Hair

By a timely use of Ayer's Hair Vigor. This preparation has no equal as a dressing. It keeps the scalp clean, cool, and healthy, and preserves the color, fullness, and beauty of the hair.

"I was rapidly becoming bald and gray; but after using two or three bottles of Ayer's Hair Vigor my hair grew thick and glossy and the original color was restored."—Melvin Aldrich, Canaan Centre, N. H.

"Some time ago I lost all my hair in consequence of measles. After due waiting, no new growth appeared. I then used Ayer's Hair Vigor and my hair grew Thick and Strong.

It has apparently come to stay. The Vigor is evidently a great aid to nature."—J. B. Williams, Floresville, Texas.

"I have used Ayer's Hair Vigor for the past four or five years and find it a most satisfactory dressing for the hair. It is all I could desire, being harmless, causing the hair to retain its natural color, and requiring but a small quantity to render the hair easy to arrange."—Mrs. M. A. Bailey, 9 Charles street, Haverhill, Mass.

"I have been using Ayer's Hair Vigor for several years, and believe that it has caused my hair to retain its natural color."—Mrs. H. J. King, Dealer in Dry Goods, &c., Bishopville, Md.

They Beat the Jersey City League Team.

Make no mistake about the "Allertons," who play the Crescents next Saturday afternoon. They have defeated the League team of Jersey City, besides the "Stars" of New York and other of the strongest semi-professionals.

—The next excursion from Plainfield to Ocean Grove and Asbury Park after the Methodists of this city and Dunellen, on Friday next, July 18, will be that of Trinity Reformed church and Sunday school on Wednesday of next week July 23. The committee in charge promise to make it as enjoyable as possible to all who join them. Plenty of cars have been engaged and every one will be provided with a comfortable seat, and as the excursion does not leave the Grove until 7 o'clock, a delightful cool ride home will be the result of a full day's enjoyment.

COMPETITION.

Its the life of business and the only thing that keeps it in a normal condition. We welcome it because we have confidence in the goods we offer. We only want what the word means to be properly understood. Competition is rivalry for first place between two or more parties having equal claims. Now, the truth is, that in the clothing business there is little competition with such goods as we sell. The bulk of Ready-made Clothing, manufactured for sale to the jobbers and passed on from them to the retailers, don't compete with the Clothing we sell at all. There is a good deal of shouting done about it, and its merits are insisted upon most vigorously, but it don't compete. The merchant tailors are the only houses with which our Ready-made Clothing competes, in quality, style and finish; while, of course, it has a marvelous advantage when it comes to price.

We don't claim any monopoly in making such an article as we offer, but we insist that there's art in it. There's no patent in selling as good a suit as we do for the money, all we say is, it isn't done. We'll prove it to you. Select a suit, any price you like, one that is pressed upon your notice as down to "rock bottom," "below cost," or any other term which denotes cheapness. Select such a suit, we say, in some store noted for its advertisement of bargains, and then come and let us show you a suit at the same price, and you'll have proof before your own eyes of what we claim. We don't fear competition; we've no reason to; least of all would be competition from an inferior article.

HOW CAN THE LONG BE THE SHORT ?

A line may be a very long one and yet be the shortest between given points. For instance, the St. Paul, Minneapolis & Manitoba Railway has over 3,000 miles of road; magnificently equipped and managed, it is one of the greatest railway systems of this country; for the same reasons it is the traveler's favorite to all points in Minnesota, North and South Dakota and Montana. It is the only line to Great Falls, the future manufacturing center of the Northwest; to the fertile free lands of the Milk River Valley; and offers a choice of three routes to the Coast. Still it is the shortest line between St. Paul, Minneapolis, Fargo, Winnepeg, Crookston, Moorhead, Casselton, Glyndon, Grafton, Fergus Falls, Wahpeton, Devils Lake, and Butte City. It is the best route to Alaska, China and Japan; and the journey to the Pacific coast, Vancouver, Tacoma, Seattle, Portland and San Francisco will be remembered as the delight of a life-time once made through the wonderful scenery of the Manitoba-Pacific Route. To fish and hunt; to view the magnificence of nature; to revive the spirit; restore the body; to realize the dream of the home-seeker, the gold-seeker, the toiler, or the capitalist, visit the country reached by the St. Paul, Minneapolis & Manitoba Railway. Write to F. I. Whitney, G. P. & T. A. St. Paul, Minn., for maps, books and guides. THE STAGE SUPE.

Some of the Tricks and Manners of Animated Scenery.

The Same Who Couldn't Afford to Shave for a Salary—Sorts of the Footlights—A Super Who Had Something to Say—Super Captains.

"I am thoroughly tired out," said a certain manager one day last week; "for I have spent six hours rehearsing 'supers' for 'The Dead Heart.' I have criticised scores of them, tried the voices of some and drilled others. I am [illegible] from yelling and ready to drop."

"But the work wasn't without its amusing features," put in Mr. W. F. Blande, of the O'Neill company, who had been helping to bring order out of chaos. "We saw some queer types of humanity. There was one big son of the Emerald Isle with a deep bass voice. We accepted him for the chorus, at the same time telling him that he would have to shave his luxuriant mustache.

"'Shave me mustache, is it—never!'

"'And why not?' I asked.

"'Shure, I'm afraid if I did I look like nobody.'

"And from his profile as I remember it I think his fears were well grounded."

"Talking of supers," said a newspaper man who was present, "I have been haunted by one for seven years. She is a tall, lank Scandinavian girl with a good stage face, but with an expression as blank as if nothing on earth interested her. I first saw her when there was an attempt made to lure her and some companions to the West by a scoundrel who pretended to be a theatrical manager. Fortunately the plan was baffled.

"But what I was going to say is that I have seen her on some stage or other at least once a month for seven years. I have seen her in all Mme. Modjeska's plays and in all sorts of [illegible]. She has trailed the robes of princesses across the boards of the Chicago Opera House. I have seen her in burlesque attire at the People's posing in half-clad [illegible] over the death scene of Clara Morris, and in [illegible] vanity and grace [illegible] has allowed the spectacles of [illegible]. In all the scenes of [illegible] through which she has moved she has never smiled; she had listened to [illegible] and never shed a tear. Terrible scenes have been enacted in her presence and she has never moved a muscle—never even looked surprised.

"She is a sphinx. She fascinates me. Sometimes I do not see her for weeks, and I am beginning to forget her, when she appears at an unexpected time and I gaze on her in wonder, heedless of every thing else in the play. If she would only show some sign of interest in what is going on around—if her indifferent eyes would only condescend to emit one gleam of intelligence, the spell would, perhaps, be broken.

"But no. In the seven years that she has haunted me she has never spoken a single line. It is barely possible she does not speak English. Or she may be deaf and dumb. I made all sorts of conjectures about her, but can not [illegible]. Sometimes I think of writing a romance and making her the central figure. Then, perhaps, I might lift the burden of her mystery from my shoulders to those of my readers."

THE BARON WHO WOULDN'T SHAVE.

[illegible]

kind. The stage manager thought they would do as well as whiter youngsters.

The first Murderer in "Macbeth" is not a super, but the actor who once played the part with Macready should have been one. At rehearsal he was so stupid that Macready had a nail driven into the floor to show him where to stand. That night he entered at his cue and stood anxiously scanning the boards.

"What are you doing?" whispered Macready.

"Looking for that blanked nail!" was the loud and disgusted reply; and it brought down the house.

Supers on the French stage have been known frequently to protest against appearing as "the enemy" in patriotic plays. They think it degrades them. In a melodrama called "The Battle of Waterloo," which was once produced in London, an English regiment was represented as retreating before a French one. The house would not stand this, and the [illegible] affected the retreating supers that they turned on the supposed French and threw them into the pit.

Every one knows how dull an affair is the Bosworth fight in "Richard III.," but on one occasion in London it was lively enough. It seems that a super had been hurt in the mimic fight the night before, and the stage manager had given him a half sovereign as a salve. He told his fellows of his luck and the next presentation of the fight was a massacre. What were broken heads to them when the salve took the form of half sovereigns?

Speaking of half sovereigns, the pay of a super in Chicago is twenty-five cents a night. The super captain, who takes the trouble of drilling, deducts one night's pay from the amount coming to each man. These sums of twenty-five cents are perquisites, for he has a stipend from the theater.

Some of these captains are accomplished [illegible]. Here is one of the tricks of a trade: When a super has worked four or five nights the captain discharges him on some pretext or other and takes a new man. But the captain hands in his bill for the usual quota and pockets what is due the discharged man.

Then, again, there are always young men who wish to go behind the footlights, and they pay the super captain for the chance to "go on." This is a great practice with the Harvard boys in Boston. Old Jim Taylor has been super captain for thirty years at the Boston Theater. His "tips from the boys" have provided him with a handsome competence in his old age.

In New York nowadays there are regular agencies for supplying the theaters with [illegible] of all kinds. There are [illegible] men and [illegible] women registered as professional supers. The thing is not yet so systematically managed in Chicago, although there are agents who make the supplying of supers a part of their business. But the super captain of each theater generally has a constituency from which he can draw on all ordinary occasions.—E. J. McPhelim, in Chicago Tribune.

DWELLERS IN MINES.

Queer Creatures Found in Underground Workings.

[illegible] Darkness—Trophies Collected in Various Places by a Mining Expert.

Nothing tries a man's nerves more than the glaring eyes of some unknown animal that has taken up its abode in the dark and deep underground workings of the gold and silver mines of the West. Often bears, mountain lions, wild cats, rats, birds, snakes and many other things are found in the mines and [illegible] many an interesting story. Mr. [illegible] Wosnock, now of Denver, but for several years was the mining editor of the Leadville Herald and Denver [illegible], and who has examined and reported on about 1,500 mines between British Columbia and Old Mexico, recently told the Denver correspondent of the [illegible] City Journal some interesting stories about animals he has found in [illegible]. These were all in gold and silver mines, and not coal mines.

"I once went to Mineral, I. D.," said Mr. Wosnock, "to make a report on the Black Maria mine. On entering the tunnel that leads to the workings, I stopped to strike a match, and in so doing placed my hand on one of the timbers of the tunnel. 'Don't do that,' said the superintendent to me, and then further explained to me that I was in danger of being bitten by a rattlesnake. He said that [illegible] rattlesnakes were [illegible] in that section, and that they sometimes crawled into the tunnel. [illegible] [illegible] are like causes them to be infested with bats, owls, bats and other animals.

"I had quite an experience with rats," said the expert, "in the Santa Barbara district in Old Mexico, near the boundary line between the States of Durango and Chihuahua. It was the most uncomfortable sensation I ever had in the gold and silver mines of the West. I tied my broncho to a post near by, and had descended the shaft alone. It was not very deep, and from the bottom of the shaft I followed a drift about three hundred feet. It was just wide enough for a narrow-shouldered Mexican to work in a cramped position. Near the top of the drift and above the height of my head was a streak of quartz four to six inches wide, in a horizontal position. This had been washed out, leaving a kind of groove on both sides of the drift. Well, this groove had become the abode of thousands of large, long-tailed rats, which had probably not been disturbed for many a year. Feeling my way carefully along this drift, with a feeble candle light, I seemed to arouse every rat. Their tails would strike me in the face, and when I would dodge to the opposite side of the narrow drift, it was only to encounter other long tails that would sweep over the groove. I was in no danger, but that test of rats in that mine in Old Mexico made me more nervous than all my experience in the mining regions."

PROGRESS IN SCIENCE.

Wonderful Advances Made in Various Branches of Art and Industry.

In some experiments lately made in England to test the merit of electric welding, a one-and-a-half inch iron-bar was welded both by means of electricity and by hand. The former stood a strain of 91.3 per cent. of the strength of the metal itself and the latter 89.3 per cent. The electric weld, however, showed cracks when bent cold at an angle of 90 degrees, whereas the hand-made joint stood 180 degrees of bend.

A new method for ventilating railway carriages and preventing dust from entering with the air has lately appeared in France. The more quickly the train moves the more rapidly the apparatus works. The air is made to traverse a receptacle containing water, which cools it and relieves it of dust, after which it goes through another filtering before entering the carriage.

M. Jablochoff, of electric candle fame, makes a strong argument in favor of going back to chemical reactions for the production of electricity as a motive power. The dynamo machine does not utilize more than 10 per cent. of the fuel, while more than 80 per cent. can be obtained under favorable circumstances in electro-chemical combinations.

The climate in China is said to be growing not only colder, but drier. Animals and plants accustomed to hot, moist regions are gradually retreating southward. Two thousand years ago the bamboo flourished in the forest of North China, but it can no longer be found there.

By means of a Mangin projector and the electric arc light on the summit of the Eiffel Tower, observers at a distance of 3,000 meters from the illuminated area were able to distinguish objects the size of a human being six and a half miles from the tower.

It has recently been shown by a series of experiments on dogs that while the alternating current is distinctly more deadly than the continuous, its fatal superiority is far less than some former experiments would lead us to think.

The use of the phonograph among certain Indian tribes leads to the conclusion that the main characteristics of their language can be recorded and permanently preserved either for study or demonstration with this instrument.

A new red glass has been recently produced in Germany. Besides its use for the manufacture of bottles, goblets and vases of various kinds, it is applicable in photography and in chemists' and opticians' laboratories.

A bore hole sunk at Schladebach to a depth of 5,734 feet shows a remarkable uniformity in the increase of temperature, which rose 1 deg. Fahrenheit for each 67.3 feet, the maximum at the bottom being 138.9 deg. Fahrenheit.

A piece of crown glass, 40 inches in diameter and 2½ inches thick, made in Paris for the object glass of a telescope for the University of Southern California, will require two years' labor to turn into a finished lens.

The kola nut, recently adopted as being extremely nutritious by the German army, is prepared as a beverage in the form of chocolate, and it is said to be more nutritious than either coffee or tea.

At a recent meeting of a committee of the Royal Horticultural Society, a plant was exhibited, proving that a distinct step has been made in the cultivation of the deep-blue primrose.

CLEANING A CARPET.

Lay It on a Green Grass Plat and Beat It as It Lies There.

Perhaps the most thorough way to clean a carpet, especially a Brussels carpet, is to lay it on a clean grass plat, face down, and beat it as it lies there. After being beaten thoroughly it can be dragged by the corners over the grass, which will brush off all adhering dust, and the carpet will be cleaned in the most approved manner. To beat a carpet on a line is but an imperfect way, and the work is not as well done, unless by the most patient beating, besides not being as easy as the first-mentioned way. The so-called carpet-beating machines in use in this country, are barbarous in their treatment of choice floor coverings. With, perhaps, twenty others, our carpets are tumbled about in a great cylinder, until they are folded in a thousand ways, and returned, instead of the stiff, firm carpets sent out, soft, limp articles, that have lost half their wearing qualities.

In England, Ireland and Scotland the prudent housewife compelled the carpet-beaters to discard the rotary carpet destroyer, and automatic beating machines are now used, which beat carpets as near like hand-work as is possible for machinery to do it. If living in a city, it will pay to employ men to take carpets out into the country and beat them, as above described. After comparing results, carpets will never be beaten by machinery again.

Again, don't let carpets be cleaned on the floor, as is being practiced in some cities. That slimy compound that is brushed on the carpet is only soft soap, nothing else, colored and perfumed, perhaps, with sassafras. It is true that it makes the carpet look clean, but it is well known that more or less of that soap stays in the back of the carpet, having worked its way through, along the seams and in the corners. A physician, or any one versed in chemistry, knows that this soap which stays in the carpet is resolved into rancid grease, attracting myriads of fine carpet-bugs and insects of all kinds, besides decomposing and filling the rooms with dangerous gases, from this disgusting compound of grease, rosin and dirt.—Mrs. Julia Dean, in Good Housekeeping.

SAILOR SUPERSTITIONS.

Queer Stories of the Effect of Dead Bodies on Shipboard.

It is an old sailor's superstition that a ship that carries a dead body on board is always sure to have trouble before the cruise is over, and many a time has this remark been applied by the "I told you so's" aboard the Enterprise. "It has never been known to fail" is a verdict to which the very large majority agree without question.

In a queer old book now out of date this question is asked: "Doth a dead body in a shippe cause the shippe to sail slower or and if it doth, what is thought to be the reason thereof?" The answer given, although not perhaps quite all one would desire, is cleverly enough put to admit of repetition: "The ship is as sensible of the living as of the dead, and as the living makes it go the faster, so the dead make it not go the slower, for the dead are no pleasure to alter the course of her passage, though some there be that think so, and that by a kind of a mournful superstition."

This is quite as lively, however, as most superstitions on shore and there is more or less of a shade of probability about it. Those who favor the dead claim that if the eerie knowledge of the immediate neighborhood of a dead body weighs upon Jack's spirits by constantly reminding him of that unpleasant fact which he likes to forget—that there is only a plank between him and eternity—it will surely affect his power of work, and therefore "cause the shippe to sail slower." To those who can not entertain an idea of the superstition, there may possibly be more or less of reasonableness in the above idea.

The "dead light" is the name given to the air port shutters, which are always put in and well secured at nightfall and whenever bad weather is expected, and to the uninitiated the order to put in the dead lights carries more or less of the disagreeable with it. The story is told of a gentleman coming around Hatteras when it was blowing half a gale of wind with considerable sea, who, upon hearing the order to put in the dead lights, rushed off to his berth in a fever of repentance and began saying his prayers, or at least what he thought were his prayers, with such rapidity and in so loud a voice as to attract his next-door neighbor, who, thinking that something must certainly be the matter with his friend, whom he had never before known to go to the length he had then reached, rushed in to the other's room to find out what it was all about, and was still more surprised to find that it was not his prayers but the Greek alphabet he was repeating. Fear and hurry to prepare for the next world had proved rather too much for a faithful adherence to what was taught him in his Sunday-school days, although upon his friend's intrusion he said: "The ship is going down, and I'm praying to be saved."

This yarn is no worse than that of the learned divine to whom the story is told that he devoutly thanked Heaven whenever he heard men cursing and swearing in the forecastle. It appears that the captain had frequently impressed it upon him that such was the nature of the sailor man that he never was profane when he was in danger of drowning, so that, if he ever heard an unusually heavy amount of swearing, he could rest assured that matters would soon assume a more favorable aspect. In consequence of this, whenever there were appearances of particularly bad weather, the clergyman always walked quietly forward and patiently awaited the profane language that experience told him he would soon hear coming from the men's quarters. When he had heard enough, he would walk aft with a satisfied air, feeling assured in his mind that no danger was to be apprehended.

This swearing is one of Jack's silly habits, and he is never particular about waiting for an object to decorate with his expletives, but is quite like the Scotchman in the story, who "didna swear at ony thing in particular, but just gied to the middle of the road and swore at large."—N. Y. Times.

General Dix's Famous Order.

Concerning General Dix's famous dispatch: "If any man attempts to haul down the American flag shoot him on the spot!" General Sickles said to a reporter a day or two ago: "On receipt of the news from New Orleans that an attempt had been made to seize a revenue cutter, General Dix impulsively wrote that splendid dispatch with the true ring of patriotism and fight in it. But he no sooner saw it in black and white than he began to hesitate and doubt. He first consulted the Attorney-General, and the result of their deliberations was approved by the latter but a final resolve was had on Dix's part to submit the message to the President before sending it. On the way to the White House I met the two officers, and General Dix showed me the dispatch as he had written it, and, stating the circumstances, added that the Attorney-General approved it. 'Then send it at once,' I said. 'The Attorney-General's approval is sufficient.' Still General Dix hesitated, when I said to him: 'General, if you send that dispatch the President will approve of it as highly proper and in the right key. If you show it to him it will never be sent.' It was sent, Buchanan did approve it, and the North was wild over it for weeks. General Dix narrowly escaped imperishable fame on that occasion."

How to Choose Kid Gloves.

The durability of kid gloves depends on how they are put on the first time. If you want a kid glove to fit buy it leisurely and with judgment, and put it on slowly, taking care to fit every part. It is better not to use a stretcher. The expansion should be made by the hands, so as to secure a perfect fit at every point. Gloves of the proper size need no stretcher. Choose gloves the fingers of which correspond with your own in length, work in the fingers first, then the thumb, and finally smooth them down until they fit every part. A glove that fits well generally wears well. If they do not come down well or if they are so long as to wrinkle they will chafe out easily. When fingers are so small as to need the stretcher the body of the glove is strained out in drawing over the hand.—Dry Goods Chronicle.

IT WOULDN'T WORK.

A Jaded Tourist's Discouraging Experience in the Suburbs.

A tough-looking customer with a dilapidated valise in his hand stopped outside the gate in front of a house in the suburbs a day or two ago and called to the woman who was sitting on the porch:

"Madam, will you oblige me with the information whether or not you keep a dog?"

"What difference does it make to you, sir?" she responded.

He took a dog-eared note-book from the valise and made a memorandum of it.

"Refuses to answer," he said. Raising his voice, he called out again:

"Man of the house at home?"

"Never you mind!" retorted the woman. "I'm running this house just now. Any thing you want?"

He appeared to be on the point of making another entry in his greasy memorandum-book, but thought better of it and put it back in the valise.

"I have asked these questions, madam," he said, "not necessarily for publication but as a guaranty of good faith. If I understand you correctly you positively refuse to answer?"

"You understand me exactly. It won't pan out. The lesson man has already been along here, sir."

"I inferred as much," rejoined the tough-looking customer, with a shade of sadness in his tones. "Under the circumstances it would not be worth while to ask you, I presume, if you have any eligible cold victuals to give out?"

"It would not."

"Just so," said the jaded tourist, and he lifted his hat, took a careful survey of the surrounding dwellings, and followed his nose a little farther down the street, to a house that seemed to give forth an odor of fried chicken.—Chicago Tribune.

THEY SOUGHT REVENGE.

Blue Jays Furiously Attack a Horse That Broke Up Their Nest.

Along one side of a field on the Myers farm there is a thick growth of bushes, some of which grow high and strong, says the Lancaster correspondent of the New York Sun. Many kinds of small birds find this thicket most favorably for their nesting places, and in the spring cattle and horses that pasture in the field browse on the sweet and tender young foliage. The owner of the farm turned in the field to pasture a few days ago a number of cattle, among them two bay horses. The farmer was working in the field, not far from the thicket, when he heard blue jays making more noise than is usual even with these noisy birds. Looking up to see what the trouble might be, he saw four blue jays engaged in a fierce assault on one of the horses. They were darting at him from all sides, pecking at his face, striking him in the neck and sides and about the head in a manner that was evidence enough that the horse had offended them in some aggravated way. The poor horse ran first one way and then another to escape the fury of the excited birds, but he was headed off whichever way he turned by the birds dashing fiercely in his face and assailing him with beak and claw. Fearing that the sharp-billed and persistent jays would blind the horse, the farmer hurried to his aid. Even after he arrived on the scene and took the horse by the mane and led him away from the spot, the infuriated birds hovered about and followed him for a long distance, making frequent descents upon the horse's body, and inflicting blows that made him wince and jump as if he were being deeply prodded with a spur. The farmer led the horse to the other side of the field, and the birds returned to the thicket, where they held noisy consultation at a particular spot and seemed to be in great tribulation. To discover, if possible, what had aroused this extreme anger of the blue jays against the horse, the farmer went over to the thicket, and at the spot where the clamor of the jays was so great he found the dead bodies of three newly-hatched blue jays. The old birds circled around him furiously a moment, and then dashed away across the field to where the horse had resumed its feeding, and renewed their attack on him. The farmer hurried back to the protection of his horse again. The poor animal was dashing frantically about, while the birds pecked and struck him at every vulnerable point. The farmer rescued the horse a second time, and the birds flew back to the bushes. Every time the horse was left to himself, however, the birds would renew the attack on him, and the owner of the horse was at last compelled to take the animal back to the barn. The jays made no attack on the other horse, which was feeding not far from the thicket. The next day the horse that had excited the animosity of the blue jays was turned in the lot again, but he had been there only a short time when the birds discovered his presence and attacked him as fiercely as they had the previous day, and he was taken home. A road passes on the other side of thicket and is constantly traveled by teams. On the second day of the attack of the jays on the bay horse he was hitched up to drive to a neighboring village on the road mentioned. As he was being driven past the thicket he was set upon by blue jays again, and the result was that the driver could not hold him and he ran away, breaking the wagon to pieces, and endangering the life of the driver. As this state of affairs, if continued, promised to be disastrous to the farm and the farmer, the offending jays have been hunted down and shot. The only explanation that can be given of this enmity of the blue jays against the horse is that while he was browsing along the edge of the thicket he pulled down a branch on which a family of blue jays had their nest and shook the young ones out of the nest to the ground. The jays and neighboring jays sought revenge upon the despoiler of this nest, and hence the bitter and unrelenting fight they made upon him.

WAR BETWEEN TURTLES.

A Singular Contest Among Three Ill-Mannered Jersey Reptiles.

Some boys who were gathering watercresses in a pool beside the Passaic river near Avondale, N. J., recently witnessed a singular battle among three turtles. Two of the combatants were common water turtles, each about the size of a man's hand, and they were arrayed against a small but exceedingly vicious snapper, hardly half the size of one of its opponents. When the boys arrived on the scene of action the batt. had evidently been raging for some time, for all the reptiles seemed to be pretty tired. One member of the dual alliance occupied a masterly position. It was holding the snapper's small tail in its mouth, and though the jaws of the common turtle are not usually very formidable it maintained its grip with the tenacity of a bulldog.

The snapper had taken the other turtle by its wrinkled throat, and it would soon have brought that part of the combat to an end had it not opened its jaws every few moments to try to see what it was that was chewing so vigorously at its rear. Owing to its anatomy this was, of course, impossible, and each time it turned to renew operations against the enemy in front that cautious creature had drawn its head deep into its shell, and, though it did not attempt to run away, the snapper, hampered as it was behind, found considerable difficulty in pushing its own smaller neck into the aperture and dragging out the reluctant forequarters of the water turtle.

At last the snapper seemed to understand where the remedy for its trouble lay, and the next time it seized the lacerated throat it took hold to stay. The water turtle's eyes bulged, and then the lids slowly closed. It was soon dead, and then the snapper brought its whole strength to bear upon its tail, which it tried to pull into its shell. It might have succeeded, but the lads were becoming impatient, and they slaughtered the two survivors with their stick. Throughout the battle the turtles had not noticed their presence.

NERVOUS DISEASES.

Great Progress Made in the Treatment of Ailments of This Kind.

Nerves must be renewed through the medium of the nuclei which are in the inner side of the sheath discovered by Schwann. These fibers receive impressions and expend stimulus. The process of degeneration in a nerve is first a destruction of the myeline, multiplication of the nuclei and loss of continuity of the axis cylinder. There are not, as previously supposed by some, a special set of nerves which have as their function the creation of trophic conditions, the motor and sensory nerves are of themselves able to produce such a condition.

The return of sensibility to a part of the body supplied by a nerve which has been cut quite through does not indicate positively that the nerve has been reunited; the power of muscular action and other evidences are also required. When nervous power has also been lost and partially restored hope must not be abandoned, even if progress is slow, because months may be required for the recuperating process. Feeling generally returns sooner than muscular power. Nerves which have been injured may have pieces taken out and the sound end stretched till they meet, when they will reunite. Even nerve grafting according to this author may be possible.

No benefit has been conferred on victims of St. Vitus dance by surgical experiments on the nervous system, but when epileptic fits occur, because of an injured nerve, these fearful spasms have been stopped by dividing the injured nerve between the injured part and the higher ganglion. Tetanus is not found to be caused by injury to the nerves. The best cure for facial neuralgia is found to be nerve stretching, and is much better than cutting the nerves.—Journal of Anatomy and Physiology.

—Let a person, not overstrong, subject to frequent colds from the slightest exposure, the victim of chronic catarrh, sore throats, etc., begin the practice of taking a sponge bath every morning, commencing with tepid water in a warm room (not hot), and following the sponging with friction that will produce a warm glow over the skin, and then take a five minutes brisk walk in the open air.—The Household.

—Pie-plant Pudding.—Slice as for pies, spread slices of bread on both sides with butter, remove the crust. Put a layer of bread in the bottom of a pudding dish, then a layer of pie-plant, abundantly sweetened, a few bits of butter, and a very slight sprinkling of flour. Fill the dish with alternate layers of pie-plant and bread, cover while baking. After thirty minutes remove cover and brown the top, serve with a sweet sauce.—The Housekeeper.

ADULTERATED SPICES.

How Pepper, Cloves and Ginger Are Doctored By Dishonest Dealers.

Adulteration has become an art in which the knowledge of science and the ingenuity of trade are freely exercised. Pure spices are debased for pecuniary profit by adding to them inferior or spurious articles, or by taking from them one or more of their constituents. The objects of adulterations are to increase the bulk or weight of the article, to improve its appearance, to give it a false strength and to rob it of its most valuable constituents.

People know so little about spice that it can be adulterated with very slight chance of discovery. An expert, however, can tell at once. The head of the spice department of a grocery firm said:

"To be sure of adulteration one needs only to look at the price lists of certain firms which sell spices. The price of a ground spice is often less than that of the unground article, which is absurd on its face. This means that the ground spice has been heavily adulterated with some cheap material. Some go so far as to advertise adulterated goods and evade the law by calling them compounds.

"Black pepper is adulterated with a substance called pepper dust, made from cocoanut shells and also with buckwheat hulls, charcoal, white meal and mustard bran. Cocoanut shells, when ground up very fine, are used very generally as an adulterant of spices, as there is no taste to interfere with the flavor of the spice. Buckwheat hulls, otherwise worthless, are a source of profit to millers, as they are worth two and one-half cents per pound for adulterating purposes. The charcoal gives a black appearance to the pepper."

Put a sample of the best Malaga pepper beside a poor quality of black pepper and the Malaga pepper can readily be distinguished because of its lighter color. Mix some white meal with the common pepper and it becomes so like the best pepper that it can hardly be told apart, it not only adulterates the pepper, but to all appearances improves its quality.

White pepper is adulterated with white meal, terra alba and rice flour. Terra alba is fine marble dust, and enormous quantities are exported from Italy for purposes of adulteration. Gypsum, sand, starch, mustard, husks and various kinds of meal are also used for adulterating pepper, but not to so great an extent as the things mentioned. Cayenne pepper is adulterated with white meal, venetian red and salt, the three being ground together. The salt gives a brighter color to the red, which is itself a poisonous article. This doctoring is practiced on African pepper, a dull red pepper, worth only eight cents a pound, in order to bring it up to the brilliant color of Natal pepper, worth thirty cents a pound. The fraudulent article can be detected by placing a small quantity on a sheet of white paper and rubbing it with the finger. The venetian red will make red marks on the paper.

Ginger is adulterated with meal, rice flour, starch, cayenne pepper and manila rope. Ginger root has a very fine, hair-like fiber running through it, and this is found in the ground article. Country people will not buy it unless they see the fibers, and bits of manila rope are used to take their place in the false article. The cayenne pepper makes the taste sharper. A drop of ammonia will expose this compound by turning it red. Chrome yellow, a poisonous substance, is sometimes used for coloring.

Cloves are adulterated with clove stems worth two cents a pound. These clove stems are the little green twigs from which the cloves are plucked. Cloves are also adulterated with pepper dust, and allspice is also treated in the same way.

Considerable ingenuity is shown in adulterating cinnamon and nutmeg. Old crackers or flour are baked brown in an oven and ground up fine, and this is mixed with the ground cinnamon and nutmeg. In adulterating mace, venetian red is mixed with the cracker dust.—Boston Commercial Bulletin.

Senators Who Need Protectors.

One of the very wealthy men who came to Washington recently as a Senator instituted a search for some man as private secretary, who was especially familiar with the cranks and schemers of all sorts, saying frankly to his friends that he wanted a man to protect him from schemers of all classes. Heretofore he has always been considered quite competent to take care of his own business and he has been able to accumulate a magnificent fortune by the exercise of his own judgment; but ever since he came to Washington as a Senator he has felt that he needed a protector. Another one of the new Senators feels that he must have a retainer about him all the time who will anticipate his every want. He wants a man who will bring his shoes and slippers to him, put on his coat for him, anticipate what he should have for breakfast and have it already ordered for him, and have his bath ready for a morning plunge as soon as the great man awakes; and yet only a very short time ago this same Senator used to black his own boots, shave himself and brush his own clothes.

POPULAR SCIENCE.

WHAT NEXT?

Leather Tanning by Electricity Is Now an Accomplished Fact.

A French firm (MM. Worms & Bale) has succeeded, after long endeavors, in applying electricity to the art of tanning in such a way as is claimed to accelerate the process. We are now able, says the Electrician, to give some further information as to the method adopted, and although our knowledge of the art does not enable us to offer any opinion as to the precise value of the invention, yet we are very hopeful that it will ultimately afford an important outlet for electrical apparatus. What is actually done is very simple. The raw-hides are placed in large cylinders which revolve upon horizontal axles. Provision is made for passing a current through the drum, the electrolyte being a decoction of tannin. (Further electrical details are at present wanting.) The drum is kept slowly revolving until the process is complete. The time required varies with the nature of the hide. Light calf-skins, sheep and goat-skins, which used to require from four to six months, are said to be completely tanned in twenty-four hours. Horse and ox hides require from seventy-two to ninety-six hours, while by the old-fashioned bark process they would have taken twelve months or even more.

As to the quality of the leather, several French leather merchants have stated that it is above the average in strength and has all the solidity and suppleness of the best samples. Specimens of harness, etc., made from this leather will be shown at the Paris exhibition. Furthermore, in addition to the economic value of the immense saving of time, it is stated that the working cost per pound of dry leather will be only 3¼ to 4 cents, as against 7 to 8 cents per pound, which is the figure now reckoned by the Bermondsey tanners. The number of hands required is said to be only about one-fifth, and the capital expenditure is largely reduced. It is evident that if only half this be true, there is, to say the least, "something in it."

As to the scientific aspect of the question, the exact nature of the role played by the electric current is not at all clear. Prof. S. P. Thompson, who has examined the process, suggests that the effect may be in some way to open the pores of the hides and so permit a more rapid access of the tanning solution, and also that its chemical activity may be increased by the electrolytic action. Mr. A. Zwierschowski thinks that the current renders the gelatine more soluble, so that it is able to combine more rapidly with the tannin.

M. E. Leonardi, in a recent number of the Revue Internationale de l'Electricite, mentions several schemes of this nature, all of them failures, the earlier ones necessarily so, from the lack of an economical means of producing current while others suffered equally from a lack of electrical knowledge on the part of the "inventors."

THE danger to life and property from sparks emitted from electric wires has been so well recognized in London that it is recommended that the city authorities take the matter in hand and see that the wires are properly insulated.

THE British Museum has received information that a tomb, believed by archaeologists to be that of Cleopatra, has just been found on the site of a recent excavation in Egypt. The sarcophagus was covered with exquisite carving, and was found in a chamber ten feet long, by two and one-half feet wide, and of corresponding height, and at a depth of twenty-five feet.

A LIGNITE sugar refinery has been established in Philadelphia for utilizing "black strap," the refuse of molasses. Hitherto this substance has been used in making rum, but the product has always been in excess of the demand. The inventors claim that the process will revolutionize the sugar industry. It is clarified through pulverized lignite.

A PROMINENT medical journal calls attention to the growth of the "naphtha habit" among the female employes of rubber factories. The inhalation of naphtha fumes produces a peculiarly agreeable inebriation. Naphtha is used to clean rubber; and is kept in large boilers, to the valve of which the employes obtain access and breathe the fumes. The habit was introduced from Germany, and is chiefly found in the New England States.

THOSE living in localities where mosquitoes are troublesome may make a trial of the following recipe for expelling these pests from the house: Take a piece of gum camphor, in size about the third of a hen's egg, and slowly evaporate it by holding it in a shovel or tin vessel over a lamp, taking care that it does not ignite. The smoke will soon fill the room and expel the mosquitoes, and it is said that they will not return, even though the windows should be left open all night.

Artificial Gutta-Percha.

Dr. Purcell Taylor, of London, claims to have succeeded in making a new insulating material, having all the properties of gutta-percha but with a higher dielectric resistance. The new substance, which is to be called "purcellite," is, according to the writer, very tough and elastic. A piece of iron covered with it, he states, was hammered out flat then bent and twisted until it broke, without even cracking the covering. The cost, it is added, is only about 1-40 that of gutta-percha. It may be made any color, and either flexible or rigid.—Scientific American.

DANGERS OF HYPNOTISM.

It Is Apt to Impair the Moral and Emotional Control of Patients.

At Nuremburg a case of some interest was tried in the police court. A commercial traveler while in a restaurant told the waitress to look steadily at the white of his eye and hypnotized her. On a second occasion he repeated the experiment; but this time the sleep was so profound that a medical man had to be called, who had the utmost difficulty in rousing the girl. The commercial traveler was accordingly summoned to appear before the magistrate, and the severe sentence of eight days' imprisonment was passed on him, which will probably be efficient in checking similar performances in that region. In France the practice of hypnotizing people for amusement seems to be very common, and unpleasant consequences are frequently reported.

At a supper party in Paris one of the company hypnotized a girl, and was unable to rouse her. She was consequently taken to the house of a medical man, and after a time she recovered consciousness. The whole party was taken into custody by the police, and were not released until next day. Even when hypnotism has been practiced by competent medical men for remedial purposes, unpleasant accidents and ulterior consequences have again and again occurred; so much so that an order has been issued by the French Government prohibiting surgeons in the army and navy from practicing it. The Lancet, which notes the foregoing instances, says that it ought to be distinctly understood, both by the profession and the public, that hypnotism is not devoid of danger at the time, and not infrequently has permanently impaired the moral and emotional control of patients. A medical man is bound, before recommending hypnotism for a patient, to weigh the question as carefully as he would that of the advisability of administering an anaesthetic.

CHAPTER CCXXIV.

An Act ceding to the United States jurisdiction over a lot of land situate in Atlantic county, and exempting the land from taxation.

Whereas, the United States are about to purchase a lot of land situate in Atlantic county, near Absecon inlet, for a site for a buoy depot; therefore,

1. Be it enacted by the Senate and General Assembly of the State of New Jersey, That jurisdiction of the said lot of land and its appurtenances, when it shall have been purchased for the said purpose, is hereby ceded to the United States of America; provided, that all civil and criminal process lawfully issued in this state may be executed in said land in the same manner as if jurisdiction had not been ceded as aforesaid.

2. And be it enacted, That the said lot of land with the appurtenances and the buildings thereon shall hereafter be exempted from all taxes so long as it shall remain the property of the United States.

3. And be it enacted, That this act shall take effect immediately.

Approved May 28, 1890.

CHAPTER CCXXV.

An Act ceding to the United States jurisdiction over a lot of land situate in Cape May city, and exempting the same from taxation.

Whereas, The United States is about to purchase a lot of land situate in Cape May city, for a site for a legal house; therefore,

1. Be it enacted by the Senate and General Assembly of the State of New Jersey, That jurisdiction of the said lot of land and its appurtenances, when it shall have purchased for the said purpose, is hereby ceded to the United States of America; provided, that all civil and criminal process lawfully issued in this state may be executed on said land in the same manner as if jurisdiction had not been ceded as aforesaid.

2. And be it enacted, That the said lot of land, with its appurtenances and the buildings thereon, shall hereafter be exempt from all taxes so long as it shall remain the property of the United States.

3. And be it enacted, That this act shall take effect immediately.

Approved May 28, 1890.

CHAPTER CCXXVI.

A Further Supplement to an act entitled "An act to regulate the practice of courts of law," (Revision), approved March twenty-seventh, one thousand eight hundred and seventy-four.

1. Be it enacted by the Senate and General Assembly of the State of New Jersey, That any unincorporated company, stock company or association consisting of two or more persons, united together for business purposes, and having a recognized name may be sued by such recognized name in any of the courts of this state in any action affecting the common property or the joint rights and liabilities of such company or association; all process or other papers in such suit shall be served on the president or on any officer for the time being of such company or association, or on the agent, or manager of such company or association, or upon any person being in charge of the business of such company or association, and such suit shall have the same force and effect as regards the joint rights, property and effects of such company or association, as if it were prosecuted in the names of all the members or associates in the manner provided by law; such suit shall not abate by reason of the death, resignation, removal, withdrawal or legal incapacity of any officer or officers of such company or association or by reason of any change in the membership thereof.

2. And be it enacted, That when judgment shall be obtained against the defendant in such suit, execution may issue thereon in the same manner that executions now issue upon judgments against corporations; and the sheriff or other officer may, by virtue of such execution, levy upon and expose to sale all the common property of such company or association, not by law exempt from sale under execution, whether the same be held in the name of such company or association, or by the directors, stockholders or trustees thereof, in trust for such company or association.

3. And be it enacted, That nothing in this act contained shall be so construed as to prevent any person having any cause of action against any such company or association, for which the members thereof, or any of them, are or may be personally liable, from proceeding against the members so personally liable as heretofore; nor shall any judgment obtained against any such association or company by virtue of the provisions of this act, after execution issued thereon, and returned, in whole or in part, unsatisfied, be a bar to any action to recover the residue thereof against such member or members as may be personally liable therefor.

4. And be it enacted, That nothing in this act contained shall be so construed as to give such companies or associations any of the powers or liabilities of corporations, except as herein set out.

5. And be it enacted, That this act shall take effect immediately.

Approved May 28, 1890.

CHAPTER CCXXVII.

An Act to amend an act entitled "An act to provide for the erection or purchase of armories for the national guard in incorporated towns, boroughs or police, sanitary and improvement commissions in this state," approved February fifteenth, one thousand eight hundred and eighty-eight.

1. Be it enacted by the Senate and General Assembly of the State of New Jersey, That the act to which this is amendatory be and the same is hereby amended to read as follows:

1. Be it enacted by the Senate and General Assembly of the State of New Jersey, That all townships, towns, incorporated towns, boroughs, or police, sanitary and improvement commissions of this state, not now having an armory for the use of the national guard, and in which there may be any regularly organized and enrolled regiment or company, are hereby authorized to build and erect or purchase in said towns, boroughs or commissions a suitable armory for the use of the national guard at a cost not exceeding the sum of ten or not less than five thousand dollars, but that in towns or townships not incorporated the legal voters of such towns or townships may, by a vote of a majority of those voting at any spring election or annual town meeting or at any special election, to be called for that purpose, determine what amount of money shall be raised, and that said towns or townships a sum less than five thousand dollars may be voted and appropriated.

2. And be it enacted, That for the purpose of procuring a site and providing for its erection, or for the purchase of a suitable building already erected, the mayor or president of the governing body of any such town, township, incorporated town, borough, or police, sanitary and improvement commission shall nominate and appoint, with the advice and consent of the town committee, common council, board of commissioners or other governing body, three commissioners, who shall be residents and freeholders in said town, borough or commission; that said commissioners shall have power to purchase a proper site or building already erected for said armory and to alter or remodel the same; and in case a building [illegible]

CHAPTER CCLXXII.

An Act granting the consent of the state of New Jersey to the purchase or condemnation by the United States of certain lands for the purpose of erecting public buildings in the city of Newark, county of Essex.

1. Be it enacted by the Senate and General Assembly of the State of New Jersey, That the consent of the State of New Jersey is hereby given to the purchase or condemnation by the United States of one or more pieces of land situated in the city of Newark, county of Essex, not exceeding two acres in quantity, on which to erect buildings for post-offices and other public purposes; and the said United States shall have, hold, use, occupy and own the said land or lands when purchased or condemned, and exercise jurisdiction and control over the same, and every part thereof, subject to the restrictions hereinafter mentioned.

2. And be it enacted, That the jurisdiction of the state of New Jersey, in and over the said land or lands mentioned in the foregoing section, when purchased or condemned by the United States, shall be and the same is hereby ceded to the United States, but the jurisdiction hereby ceded shall continue no longer than the said United States shall own the said land or lands.

3. And be it enacted, That the said consent is given, and the said jurisdiction ceded, upon the express condition that the state of New Jersey shall retain concurrent jurisdiction with the United States in and over the said land or lands, so far as that all civil process in all cases, and such criminal or other process as may issue under the laws or authority of the state of New Jersey against any person or persons charged with crimes or misdemeanors committed within said state, may be executed therein in the same way and manner as if said consent had not been given or jurisdiction ceded, except so far as such process may affect the real or personal property of the United States.

4. And be it enacted, That the jurisdiction hereby ceded shall not vest until the United States shall have acquired the title to the said land or lands by purchase, condemnation or grant; and so long as said land or lands shall remain the property of the United States, when acquired as aforesaid, and no longer, the same shall be and continue to be exonerated from all taxes, assessments and other charges which may be levied or imposed under the authority of the state.

5. And be it enacted, That this act shall take effect immediately.

Approved June 13, 1890.

CHAPTER CCLXXV.

A Further Supplement to the act entitled "An act respecting conveyances, approved March twenty-seventh, one thousand eight hundred and seventy-four."

1. Be it enacted by the Senate and General Assembly of the State of New Jersey, That where any executor, administrator with the will annexed or trustee is required to obtain the written consent of any person or persons to the execution by such executor, administrator with the will annexed or trustee, of a power for the sale, conveyance, acquittance or release of any lands, tenements or hereditaments in this state, such consent, if the making and execution thereof be acknowledged or proved, and such acknowledgment or proof be certified in the manner prescribed for the acknowledgment and proof of deeds of conveyance of lands, tenements and hereditaments, shall be received in evidence in any court of this state as if the same were then and there produced and proved; and every such consent, being so acknowledged or proved and certified, shall and may be recorded in the same manner as deeds of conveyance of lands, and the record of any such consent made and executed, and acknowledged or proved and certified and recorded as aforesaid, and the transcript thereof, duly certified by the proper officer, shall be received in evidence in any court of this state, and have the same effect as if the original consent were then and there produced and proved.

2. And be it enacted, That this act shall take effect immediately.

Approved June 13, 1890.

CHAPTER CCLXXVI.

An Act to enable boards of education of cities of the second class to appoint city superintendents of schools.

1. Be it enacted by the Senate and General Assembly of the State of New Jersey, That any board of education of cities of the second class in this state shall have power to appoint a person of suitable attainments to be city superintendent of schools, define his duties, and fix his term of office, not to exceed three years, and his compensation, which shall not be changed during his term of office.

2. And be it enacted, That the city superintendent of schools shall hold office for the said term, and until his successor is appointed, subject to removal by the board of education on complaint for cause stated.

3. And be it enacted, That this act shall take effect immediately.

Approved June 13, 1890.

CHAPTER CCLXXVIII.

A supplement to an act entitled "An act to regulate the action of replevin" [Revision], approved March twenty-seventh, one thousand eight hundred and seventy-four.

1. Be it enacted by the Senate and General Assembly of the State of New Jersey, That writs of replevin may issue out of any district court in this state in all cases where the value of the goods and chattels of which replevin is sought does not exceed the jurisdiction of the court at the time such writs may issue, and the practice in replevin suits in the district courts shall be that prescribed by the act to which this a supplement.

2. And be it enacted, That all suits of replevin brought in any district court since the twenty-seventh day of March, one thousand eight hundred and eighty-two, in which the value of the goods and chattels sought to be recovered does not exceed the jurisdiction of such court at the time such suits were begun are hereby declared to have been within the jurisdiction such court.

3. And be it enacted, That this act shall take effect immediately.

Approved June 13, 1890.

CHAPTER CCLXXIX.

A Supplement to an act entitled "An act for the punishment of crimes" [Revision], approved March twenty-seventh, one thousand eight hundred and seventy-four.

1. Be it resolved by the Senate and General Assembly of the State of New Jersey, That if any person shall carry away with intent to steal, or unlawfully appropriate, any turkey, goose, duck, chicken or other domestic fowl, by whatever name known or designated, which is the property of another, he shall be deemed to be guilty of a misdemeanor and on conviction thereof shall be punished by a fine not to exceed one hundred dollars, or imprisonment at hard labor for a term not exceeding three years, or both, at the discretion of the court.

2. And be it enacted, That all acts or parts of acts inconsistent with this act be and the same are hereby repealed, and that this act shall take effect immediately.

Approved June 13, 1890.

CHAPTER CCLXXX.

A Supplement to an act entitled "An act to incorporate benevolent and charitable associations," approved [April ninth, one thousand eight hundred and seventy-five.

1. Be it enacted by the Senate and General Assembly of the State of New Jersey, That it shall be lawful for the members of any mutual association or corporation heretofore or hereafter incorporated or organized under the provisions of the act to which this a supplement, to provide for and create a capital stock of such association or corporation, upon consent in writing of all the members of such association or corporation, and to provide for the payment of such stock, and to fix and prescribe the rights and privileges of the stockholders therein.

2. And be it enacted, That this act shall take effect immediately.

Approved June 13, 1890.

CHAPTER CCLXXXI.

A Supplement to an act entitled "An act relative to guardians and minors" [Revision], approved March twenty-seventh, one thousand eight hundred and seventy-four.

1. Be it enacted by the Senate and General Assembly of the State of New Jersey, That when it shall be made to appear to the chancellor, upon the application of the guardian of a minor or minors, lunatic, insane or feeble-minded persons, that the lands of, and the interests and estates therein of, such minor and minors, lunatic, insane or feeble-minded persons are encumbered in whole or in part by mortgages, taxes, tax sales, assessments, water rents, judgments and other liens, and that it would be to the advantage of the estate of such minor or minors, lunatic, insane or feeble-minded persons, that the said mortgages, taxes, tax sales, assessments, water rents, judgments and other liens should be paid off, satisfied and redeemed, it shall be lawful for the chancellor, and he is hereby authorized to order and direct that the guardian of such minor or minors, lunatic, insane or feeble-minded persons be authorized to pay the same from the proceeds of the sale of securities and other personal estate belonging to the estate of such minor or minors, lunatic, insane or feeble-minded persons, but in case there shall not be sufficient securities and other personal estate belonging to the estate of such minor or minors, lunatic, insane or feeble-minded persons, to pay off, satisfy and redeem the said mortgages, taxes, tax sales, assessments, judgments and other liens, then it shall be lawful for the chancellor to order and direct that the guardian borrow on bond secured by mortgages on the whole of the lands and of the interests and estates therein of such minor or minors, lunatic, insane or feeble-minded persons, or on such part or parts, portion or portions of said lands, estates and interests, as the chancellor may direct, such sum or sums of money as shall be sufficient in amount to pay off, satisfy and redeem said mortgages, taxes, tax sales, assessments, water rents, judgments and other liens, upon such terms and conditions and in such form as the chancellor may determine.

2. And be it enacted, That this act shall take effect immediately.

POETRY OF THE PRESENT.

Took No Risks.

The knot was tied, the pair were wed,
And then the smiling bridegroom said
Unto the preacher: "Shall I pay
To you the usual fee to-day,
Or would you have me wait a year
And give you then a hundred clear,
If I should find the marriage state
As happy as I estimate?"
The preacher lost no time in thought,
To his reply no study brought,
There were no wrinkles on his brow;
Said he: "I'll take three dollars now."
—Merchant Traveler.

To-Day.

I am at peace with all of life to-day—
(So long I've sailed a troubled, angry sea!)
O, precious thought! can I have found the way
Will lead me back to sweet tranquillity?
Lost faith, lost hope, lost love can I to find?
If this be so then surely God is kind.

A strange new strength seems to my spirit lent,
A subtle something—child of tear and sigh—
That comes as quiet as the rose at morn
Unfolds its petals to a troubled sky,
Serene amid the elemental strife—
So waked my soul unto a fuller life.

The summer skies were never half so blue,
The birds sang never half so sweet a lay—
So long, so long the time, I didn't know
A joy so tranquil as I know to-day.
I wonder if 'tis so with other lives,
Or have I only come to live again!

"God knows the heart," ah! pitied to view
That seething furnace of [illegible] must be,
Where passions still their hearts' [illegible]—
Hot-fingered [illegible] that weave man's destiny—
But He to-day upon my heart has laid
A soothing hand and I am unafraid.

A life of worldly pleasure unrestrained,
Compared to this To-day of peace, were naught.
So long my heart has struggled, overpained,
So long my soul a quiet refuge sought—
Supernal bliss! in this new day I find
Sweet recompense for all that lies behind.
—Charles Eugene Banks, in Arkansaw Traveler.

An Untimely Accident.

In a hammock slowly swinging,
Where the fireflies are winging
Underneath the trees,
Sit a youth and maiden slender,
And with conversation tender
Warm the evening breeze.

He is telling her his passion—
Urging her in lover fashion
To become his wife.
She is listening, coy, unwilling,
But she doesn't miss a thrilling
Word, you bet your life!

So when, certain of his bliss, her
Lover forward bends to kiss her,
And will not desist—
With his arm around her stealing
And his brown eyes so appealing,
How can she resist?

But he misses the sweet token;
For before the words are spoken
That will seal his bliss,
Snap! the hammock rope is parted,
And the lovers, broken-hearted,
Feel too mad to kiss.
—N. O. Picayune.

Day Dreams.

If I were fair as some young eastern queen,
If love's sweet music throbbed in every tone,
If every day, and all glad hours between,
I claimed by right of beauty for my own
The hearts of men who bow before one shrine
Of golden curls, and fathomless, sweet eyes,
White throat and crimson lips, could these be mine,
Oh love, be sure that I would only prize
The gift when it would make me fair to you;
And if you would not kiss my throat and hair,
And lend your head to see my eyes were true,
And smile to see your image ever there,
And if perchance you touched my finger tips,
Your pulses would not faster ebb and flow,
Ah! worthless then were curls and crimson lips,
And violet eyes, and brow and throat like snow.
—Lola Marshall Dean, in Atlanta Constitution.

Quiet Ways Are Best.

What's the use of worrying,
Of hurrying,
And scurrying,
Everybody flurrying,
And breaking up their rest,
When every one is teaching us,
Preaching and beseeching us,
To settle down and end the fuss,
For quiet ways are best?
The rain that trickles down in showers
A blessing brings to thirsty flowers;
Sweet fragrance from each brimming cup
The gentle zephyrs gather up.
There's ruin in the tempest's path;
There's ruin in a voice of wrath;
And they alone are blest
Who early learn to dominate
Themselves, their violence abate,
And prove, by their serene estate,
That quiet ways are best.

Nothing's gained by worrying,
By hurrying
And scurrying;
With fretting and with flurrying
The temper's often lost;
And in pursuit of some small prize
We rush ahead, and are not wise,
And find the unwonted exercise
A fearful price has cost.
'Tis better far to join the throng
That do their duty right along;
Reluctant they to raise a fuss,
Or make themselves ridiculous.
Calm and serene in heart and nerve,
Their strength is always in reserve,
And nobly stands each test;
And every day and all about,
By scenes within and scenes without,
We can discern, with ne'er a doubt,
That quiet ways are best.
—N. Y. Evangelist.

The "Original Package" Again.

She sat and she penned to her lover a note—
This Miss who would soon be a Mrs.—
And she kissed the white paper upon which she wrote
And marked with the pen all the kisses.

He got the sweet note from the girl he would wed,
Unloaded the love and the "tonnage,"
But he longed for the two lips, responsive and red,
The dainty "original package."
—Columbus Dispatch.

Which?

Two seeds by the sowers were dropped as they passed—
The one grows daily with noble increase,
The other but molders and rots away;
The one bears foliage, flowers and fruit,
The other a loathsome, dank decay;
Yet round each one was the warm earth's vest,
And the sheltered dark, where things grow best.
Which seed, O sower? did your hand cast?

Two thoughts by the speakers were uttered broadcast—
The one is aglow with purity, strength;
The other a foul and blighting breath.
For the one is Love, true, tender, divine;
The other is Sin, whose harvest is death.
In the dark of a heart each one was born,
The light of life, and the lie forsworn.
Which thought, O speaker! through your lips passed?
—Hannah Coddington, in S. S. Times.

Do You Know Him?

He takes offense at what you say,
Although you say it well;
It seems he always thinks you may
Mean more than words can tell.
He frowns and pouts if you laugh,
Looks puzzled if you sigh;
He's not a fellow you can "chaff,"
He's such a mighty "I."

'Tis plagued hard to talk at all
To such a man as that;
He makes your mildest jokes look small
By wondering what they're at;
He finds in every word that's said
A something that can bite—
Because his world contains one head,
So every cap must fit.
—Eva Lovett Carson, in Judge.

Our Aid to Ireland.

A distinguished Irish-American, recently visiting Washington, said to a correspondent: "It is no wonder that the Irish are friendly to the Americans, and worship them almost. Within the past fifty years over $100,000,000 have been sent into Ireland by the friends and relatives of the Irish in North America. The sums annually sent have increased every year since 1878. The United States Government is prayed for every night and morning by many an Irish peasant. The rent of many a farm in Ireland is regularly paid by members of the family who are solving the problem of life in America, while the old folks remain at home on "the ould sod."

FASHION'S FADS.

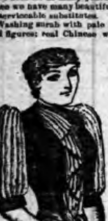
What the Queenly Dame Will Wear for Summer.

Gowns Light and Cool—Hats That Are Poems of Loveliness—Jackets and Wraps—Masculine Shirt Fronts All the Rage.

[Special New York Letter.]

Cotton gowns of new design and coloring are made up with as much care and originality as was formerly expended on the summer silk. Ginghams and zephyrs of fine quality and uncommon patterns are trimmed with real Irish point and Maltese lace—batiste comes in stripes and flowered patterns, and is draped to the figure over a silk lining with the artistic elegance and simplicity that betokens true skill. Foulards have somewhat lost their popularity—like every thing else in this country. A fashion can not be the exclusive right of "the lady born and bred." They have become too cheap and common to retain the position they have held for so many years. But in its place we have many beautiful and equally serviceable substitutes.

Washing surah with pale fine stripes and figures; real Chinese washing silk; genuine seersuckers; light-toned Louis XVI. silks in dainty pompadour designs, and sicilliennes and bengalines of rare beauty.



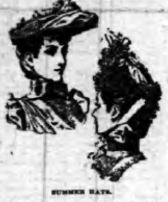
ZOUAVE JACKET.

Black lace, net and grenadines have made their appearance in full force. Fish-net is quite passe, and Brussels net in various qualities is in much better taste. Plain net is trimmed with broad black velvet ribbon, and for evening wear looks well with fine gold passementerie. Plaited or shirred skirts to hang plain over a silk underskirt finished with a foot-plaiting to protect the lace is the generally-accepted fashion.

A Zouave or Figaro jacket is a very useful little garment. It is simple and easily made. Very expensive ones are to be had, made of metal passementerie, gold braiding and jetted net, but pretty ones can be made at home at small cost.

With a lace or net skirt and several fancy blouse or surplus waists, a zouave jacket gives variety to the costume, in fact entirely changes its character. The one illustrated here is black velvet patterned with silver braid and worn over a gray bengaline blouse and skirt. As we all know the regular summer styles by this time perhaps it will be acceptable to devote some space to a few of the novelties and finishing touches of our costumes.

Deep lace ruching and embroidered frills of lace are made up into boas (with a smaller ruche at the top) and furnished with strings to tie at the neck. As the dress collar is cut low this season there is really some sense in this fashion borrowed of midwinter. It does not look well to go into the street with too much neck visible, and this dainty trifle is easily adjusted and is moreover becoming to most women.



SUMMER HATS.

The summer pereline is also a useful wrap. A yoke of guipure lace extends in one piece into a standing collar. Armure silk is shirred into this and then laid in loose plaits to fit the figure. Passementerie of Tuscan straw is used to trim some of the silk toilets sent from Paris; also russet-brown silk with veinings of gold are seen, but garnitures of fine cork deftly cut and dyed in delicate tones is, perhaps, the greatest novelty of all.

For young ladies there is a pretty fancy for the unlined blouse waists of Brussels net in black or dotted Swiss in white, to be worn over a low-necked and short-sleeved slip-waist. The net extends up to the neck, where it is shirred into a frill, the same as the wrists. The effect is very simple and girlish. The most fashionable hats are fragile, airy creations—transparent, allowing the hair to be seen through a lace work of stems, tulle, net, braid or passementerie or an entirely open crown. The brims are also fragile, being either left unlined altogether or faced with finely-shirred tulle or lace to carry out the filmy effect.

Horse hair twisted into fancy plaits is much used and fancy straws and chips are dyed peculiar and novel shades.

Flowers are superabundant. Hats seem overflowing with these dainty reproductions from nature. Two pretty models are shown here—one a flower bonnet showing the twists of hair on the crown, and the other a stylish hat of entirely new shape.

The masculine looking shirt front that hailed from the other side early this spring—came, saw and conquered the public taste to such an extent that every other woman one sees on the street has arrayed herself therein, and well dressed ladies have had a few times wear out of the imported article, and then left it severely alone, for her less exclusive sister. Of course as a habit shirt and for certain sporting costumes hey will remain in use, but when the SUMMER PERELINE.

"rage" commences a fashion loses whatever of piquancy it may have originally possessed.

The sailor hat is still with us, and I am glad for what it lacks in grace it makes up in utility—if only women who have reached the age where they are "standing with reluctant feet where the brook and river meet" would know enough to put away childish things and not make themselves look ridiculous by wearing their daughters' headgear. If any thing is likely to call forth the inward derision of the multitude it is to see a woman, "fair, fat and forty," strutting along in a sailor hat. And yet we see it every day.

Why don't they borrow the baby's pinafore too, and call a little attention to their wrinkles and passe complexion and figure.

Ill-natured remarks, you say. Well, perhaps they are; but if you don't have to view old mutton masquerading as spring lamb every day of your life, be thankful that you can keep your respect for the judgment in dress of women of "uncertain age." F. F. B.

ABOUT CORK TREES.

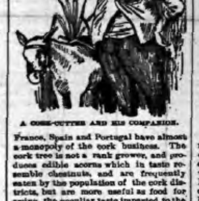
Precious Forests Which Produce Material for Stoppers.

How a Crop of Cork Is Grown and Harvested—Preparing the Cork for Market—Difficulties in the Manufacture.

Many as are the kinds of wood used for mechanical purposes, there is but one, says the St. Louis Globe-Democrat, and it not properly a wood, but a bark, which can be employed for the purpose of stopping bottles. Its employment for this purpose dates only from the past three hundred years, for before that time wine and other liquors were kept in casks or jars, from which large quantities were drawn at a time. But after the invention of glass bottles it became the fashion to employ them for the use of the vintners, and as the packages were small the whole contents of a bottle might be consumed at a sitting, and thus the small flask was a great convenience. At first the bottles were stopped with tow dipped in pitch, then with pieces of wood, and finally with the bark of the cork tree, and in spite of numberless inventions and devices to supercede it this substance has retained its popularity.

The cork tree is a sort of oak, growing 20 to 35 feet in height, and with a beautiful evergreen foliage. It grows most luxuriantly, and produces the best bark in Portugal, the mountains of Spain and France, the higher districts of Lombardy, the mountain plateaus of Algeria and the north of Africa, and throughout extensive tracts of Asia Minor and parts of Turkey. It has been introduced into India with success, and is also grown in Ceylon, Siam and some of the Pacific islands. The disposition of the British Government to introduce into the colonies whatever plants may prove of advantage has led to the planting of cork trees on the high lands of South Africa and in Australia, while American enterprise has induced the experiment of its growth in several of the Southern States and in California. Still, however, the tree flourishes best in Spain, Portugal and France, which may be considered its proper home, and from these districts the best qualities of cork are obtained.

The cork tree will grow anywhere from 500 to 3,500 feet above the level of the sea, and requires a moderately dry climate for its best development; not too dry, for then the growth of the tree is stunted, nor yet too moist, otherwise the foliage will be extremely luxuriant and the bark deficient. These conditions being best met in the countries already alluded to, the result is that France, Spain and Portugal have almost a monopoly of the cork business. The cork tree is not a rank grower, and produces edible acorns which in taste resemble chestnuts, and are frequently eaten by the population of the cork districts, but are more useful as food for swine, the peculiar taste imparted to the flesh rendering the pork and bacon of Southern France and Northern Spain a choice dainty in the country markets.



A CORK-CUTTER AND HIS COMPANION.

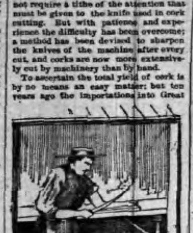
The tree may begin bearing at any time between fifteen and twenty-five years; but the first crop is worthless for commercial purposes, being coarse, knotty and sometimes full of seams and cracks. It is known as "virgin cork," and is extensively employed for roofing, fencing, and the like. The second crop is much better than the first, but is still unavailable for sale, except for the purpose of making the Spanish-black, which is merely the charcoal of cork.

The third and succeeding crops are the true cork of commerce, and the tree will bear ten or twelve consecutive crops. Not, however, in consecutive years, for the bark is of slow growth, and eight to ten years must elapse before the second crop can be gathered from the same tree. When the cork-cutter deems that the tree is ready to be shorn of its bark an incision is made round the trunk near the ground and another just beneath the lowest branch. Vertical incisions are then made through the bark, care being taken not to cut into the tender, living bark beneath the cork, otherwise the tree would be killed. A peculiar knife, having two handles, or an axe made for the purpose, is then employed to remove the slabs of bark from the tree, and if taken off with proper care the plant is not harmed by the operation; on the contrary, the removal is beneficial, for the cork is really a dead bark, and sometimes the cork-cutters prefer, after making the incisions in the tree, to allow the cork slabs to separate themselves, which they do in a few months.

After the slabs have been taken from the tree they are naturally concavo-convex, following the shape of the trunk. They are laid in a ditch, or trench of water, and heavy stones placed upon them to make them flat. After the warp has been taken out they are dried in the sun and charred in fire to render the substance of the cork more compact and to conceal superficial defects, and it must be confessed the cork-growers are clever at this, as manufacturers sometimes find to their cost, for cracks and holes in the slabs are filled up with adhesive earth, and thus a beautifully smooth and even piece will sometimes be found commercially worthless. After charring and again pressing the cork is packed into bales, and is ready either for manufacture or for export.

Until comparatively recent years, all corks were made by hand. The cork-cutter used a knife some six inches long and nearly four in breadth, of the finest steel, very thin and capable of being brought to a razor edge. Holding the piece of cork in his left hand and the knife in his right, with a couple of semi-circular cuts he produced the finished corks, their length and diameter depending upon the thickness of the slab. The cork is never cut from the tree until it is at least three-quarters of an inch thick, and corks cut from the slab vary in length from that to two inches. Great difficulty was experienced by the inventors in perfecting machinery for the manufacture of corks, from a curious and little anticipated obstacle—the impossibility of keeping the knives sharp. It is a singular fact that cork, although so porous and yielding a substance, dulls a knife to an incredible extent, so that hand-cutters are accustomed to sharpen their knives after every stroke; tools for cutting metals do not require a tithe of the attention that must be given to the knife used in cork cutting. But with patience and experience the difficulty has been overcome; a method has been devised to sharpen the knives of the machine after every cut, and corks are now more extensively cut by machinery than by hand.

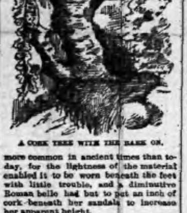
To ascertain the total yield of cork is by no means an easy matter; but ten years ago the importations into Great Britain from Portugal, Algeria, Spain and France were 7,000 tons of the partially prepared material, valued at $1,000,000, and there were besides 5,638,000 pounds of the manufactured product. Nearly $1,000,000 worth of cork is annually imported into the United States, and, as other countries use the substance in proportion, the total product is estimated at from $12,000,000 to $14,000,000.



FACING THE CORK SLABS.

Cork has many qualities which adapt it to other uses than that of stopping bottles. It is extremely porous, but the pores do not open into one another, and so it is almost impervious to water; while it is elastic in the extreme, and so buoyant that "as light as a cork" has been a proverb ever since the article was known. Its many good qualities have therefore commended it in the manufacture of other articles than that of stoppers. Cork soles for shoes are impervious to water, and the thick soles of Chinese shoes have for ages been made of this material. Improvements in the machinery for cutting it have enabled slices the 124th part of an inch thick to be cut from the block, and those thin veneerings have been used to advantage in the manufacture of hats and many other articles, while the shavings of cork and the saw-dust from the material mixed with oil form a component part of several floor coverings. As floats for nets, cork has long been used. While in a dry and powdered condition, it makes the best possible stuffing for mattresses, and these on board ship are invaluable for life-preservers.

The value of cork was as well known to the ancients as to ourselves. Pliny speaks of "cork jackets," by which, as he states, those inexperienced in swimming could float on the water as readily as the most clever expert, while its use for the soles of shoes or of sandals was more common in ancient times than to-day, for the lightness of the material enabled it to be worn beneath the feet with little trouble, and a diminutive Roman belle had but to put an inch of cork beneath her sandals to increase her apparent height.



A CORK TREE WITH THE BARK ON.

In countries where the cork tree is indigenous, the slabs of bark are used in many ways which seem extremely novel to us who are accustomed to regard it as a scarce and high-priced product. In Spain bee-hives are made of it, while the French forester, just north of the Pyrenees, employs it to make cups, buckets and even plates. In Lombardy it is used in the ornamental parts of buildings, and even of churches, while the Turks and Algerians, by slicing the bark thin, can employ it to shingle their houses; while in other forms it is used in the manufacture of saddles, of boats and in a variety of other ways.

The Habit Justified.

Parrott—Tell me, Grafton, why do you always wear a single eye-glass?

Grafton—Well, to tell you the truth, old fellow, it's to conceal my glass eye.—Texas Siftings.

Washington's Future.

When Prof. Goldwin Smith was recently writing up his impressions of Washington, he said: "A wonderful change has come over the city during the last twenty years. It used to be nothing but the meeting place of Congress, but now it is becoming the favorite place of residence for people unconnected with politics or the Administration, and a corresponding change has taken place in its outward appearance. It is blossoming out into a gay and beautiful city. It is becoming the dwelling place of a very cultivated, and thoroughly catholic society, which seems likely to draw to itself much that is choicest in the United States." Prof. Smith is perfectly right, and the truth of his statement will become more and more apparent, and very rapidly, too, as the years go by. When the National Library building opposite the Capitol is finished so that the students from the Methodist University, Columbia University, Catholic University, and Georgetown University, as well as the various law and medical schools, can have access to that great inexhaustible storehouse of knowledge, Washington will become a great literary center which will surprise the old world as well as the people of this Republic. This country is yet destined to produce many eminent men in the field of letters, who will come from all parts of the Republic to the National Capital and step forth into fame on the banks of the Potomac.

From Sire to Son.

An old college president says: "I have seen pupils graduate, receive congratulations of friends, and then drop out of sight. Years afterwards I have been struck with the similarity of features of some new pupils, and often forget myself and call them by names which were familiar to me many years before. They are the children of those who had gone out from under my control in the long ago. It is wonderful to see, not only the transmission of form and feature, but the similarity of acquired habits which are conveyed from generation to generation." Instances were related also, showing that the written records of the children are almost identical with the records made many years before by their parents. There are more things to be learned concerning our race, and its characteristics, than any of us have yet dreamed in our philosophy.

An Advantage.

"Do you burn gas or oil here?"

"Oil, as a rule; but you'll get the gas bill just the same. We give you all the modern improvements."—Harper's Bazar.

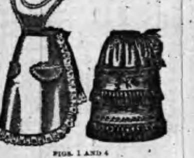
THE HOUSEHOLD.

A SET OF APRONS.

They Are Pretty and Any Ingenious House-Wife Can Make Them.

Mrs. Davis says that her first work after house-cleaning is to make up her aprons for the year. She looks as "dressed up" in her aprons as some women do in their Sunday gowns, and, while I was looking at her patterns, two thoughts popped into my head. The first was that I should make a set of aprons for a wedding present to a friend, who is soon to be married, and the other was that there were readers of the Housekeeper who wore aprons who would be interested in knowing how Mrs. Davis made hers.

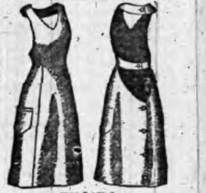
Fig. 1 shows a dainty little affair that I tell Mrs. Davis is of no use whatever; but when she puts it on, as she always does just before sitting down to tea, one thinks it a most charming accessory to her toilet. She has made two this year of linen lawn; one is trimmed with lace, and one with embroidery. She also has dainty aprons made without bibs, and some of her "tea-aprons," as she calls them, are decorated with ribbon bows.



FIGS. 1 AND 4.

The "cook apron" represented by Fig. 2 is made of plain white muslin. She has six of these aprons, for she says she can not eat if she wears a dirty apron while doing her baking. Fig. 3 is her kitchen apron, which is always made of strong gingham, or navy blue calico of the best quality.

Her sewing apron is a very fancy affair. It is represented by Fig. 4. It is made of black farmer's satin, forked with yellow silk and trimmed with a fringe which she made of black and yellow silk. It is shirred at the top and tied at one side with strings of yellow ribbon. These aprons are all easily made and are pretty when worn while doing the work for which they were made; but like any other garment, are ridiculous "out of season."

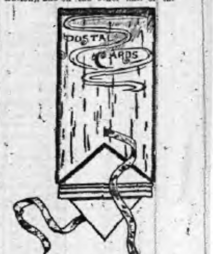


FIGS. 2 AND 3.

POSTAL-CARD CASE.

It Is Easy to Make and Handy to Have Around, Provided You Have Use for It.

Cut a piece of birch-bark a little over twice the width and length of a postal-card. On one-half of the wide side make a deep pointed end, which when turned down serves as a cover (see illustration), and on the other half of the same side, cut out a piece not quite as large as the pointed cover.



POSTAL-CARD CASE.

Next fold the birch bark across through the center, which will bring the pointed cover over the opening. Overhand the edges of the case together with bright colored silk.

Cut a little slit in the bark as seen in the illustration, and a corresponding one in the under side of the case. Pass a narrow, bright ribbon through the two slits, fastening it on one side with a few fancy stitches, and having the other and longer end loose.

When the package of postal-cards is put into the case, it will carry down the ribbon with it to the end of the case, and, when the ribbon is drawn up, the cards will be drawn into view with it. Leave the ribbon long enough to tie with a bow and ends, when the case is closed.

The case can be made of Whatman's rough water color paper and decorated with some sketchy designs, if birch bark is not to be had; or it may be made of cardboard, covered with any pretty silk.—Youth's Companion.

Will Be Wedded.

It is said that big Ben Le Fevre, who was for many years a member of Congress from Ohio, will soon be married. He is a bigger man than Grover Cleveland and he carries a heart and brain commensurate with his size. It is said that his bride is a wealthy young woman of New York who has just returned from a two years' trip abroad. It seems that General Le Fevre and this young lady have been acquainted for a number of years. The course of true love never did run smooth, you know, and it has run decidedly rough in this case. Despite the fact that both are free, white and twenty-one, and each of them possesses an ample fortune, there have been many family stumbling blocks in the way which have prevented the consummation of their desires for several years. There is no doubt, however, that they will soon be married and when the happy day comes round there will be congratulations and presents from every State in the Union.

ITS TRUE INTENT.

Mr. Blaine in his open and adverse criticism of the McKinley or Republican tariff bill, as passed by the present House of Congress, declared: "There is not a section or a line in the entire bill that will open the market for another bushel of wheat or another barrel of pork."

Of course not, because the McKinley tariff project was never designed by its authors to enlarge the needed bounds of trade and commerce, and establish foreign markets for home products, but to restrict and dwarf them, and instead of benefiting labor, agriculture and the legitimate industrial interests of the country, to lay the burden of unnecessary and oppressive taxation upon the necessaries of life and the ingredients of general prosperity.

That was its design and that it will accomplish.

It is not for the good of the honest masses, nor for the honor of country.

It is an out and out partisan measure, artfully framed, under the alluring guise of protection, for the specific purpose of rewarding those who for mercenary self interests contributed large financial means for the success of party.

They paid their money and must now have it back with a heavy bonus, as per contract.

And the farmers, tradesmen, mechanics, artisans and laborers of the United States, wage-earners of all classes, will have to meet the enormous charges.

In the language of a prominent Western public man, not a Democrat, "the McKinley tariff act is a most [illegible] scheme to rob the masses for the favored few."

ABSURD.

To be absurd is to antagonize common sense.

A genuine statesman is never absurd, that is the natural adjunct of [illegible] politicians, many of whom, in these modern days, are absurd enough to imagine they know what statesmanship means.

Absurdities are of rank growth and appear to have found congenial soil in the present Congress of the United States.

What absurdity to squander millions upon millions of the people's money for building and equipping a fleet of costly naval vessels, and then sending them at an enormous annual expense, meandering over the globe and [illegible] in foreign ports, when scarcely a vestige of our once grand and fortune-yielding merchant marine remains to be [illegible] and guarded.

American commerce is dead, dead of tariff protection.

And again,—

How colossally absurd to vote [illegible] of subsidies to steamship owners, for the alleged purpose of resuscitating high-taxed American commerce, and at the same time enacting a prohibitory tariff to cut off ocean trade and prevent those very steamers from securing living freights.

Such is a brief example of Congressional absurdity in this enlightened age, and the one hundred and fifteenth year of American Independence.

Plenty more can be produced.

The Surrogate to Take Testimony.

The will of Lucy H. Burlingham, of this city, came up in the Orphans' Court in Elizabeth before Judge McCormick on July 16. The will is contested by the children of Mrs. Burlingham's sister. They have filed several caveats against admitting it to probate. Mrs. Burlingham died without issue and left property estimated at about $15,000. A hearing will be held this week before the Surrogate for the purpose of taking testimony.

THE EMANCIPATION OF THE HORSE.

Plans to Give Beasts of Burden a Day of Rest.

Plainfield humanitarians, believing that the horse, man's best dumb friend, is subject daily to great abuses, have determined on a course of action having as its purpose the gradual and complete emancipation of the worthy four-legged creature.

The matter of check-reins has already received some attention at the hands of officers of the local Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals, and by persevering methods it is hoped that the evils of high checking may be greatly lessened. Just now, however, particular attention is to be devoted to the matter of Sunday driving. Plainfield's good drivers, and the good drivers of the surrounding county, tempt many people, every pleasant Sunday, to a several hours' spin over the hard and level roads behind their own steeds or those of the livery stables. Many of these Sunday-driven horses, it is claimed, are in use every day of the week, and do hard work the year around with seldom, or never, a day of rest. Those interested in having such practice abolished hold that the present State laws are sufficient to compel observance of the Scriptural injunction concerning the Sabbath rest for man and beast, and they purpose instigating proceedings against some of the guilty ones, and establishing the strength or frailty of the code. If the existing laws are insufficient, or by reason of disuse have become a dead letter, they will make strenuous efforts to secure the revival of the terms of the old laws or the passage of a new law, under which conviction for Sunday driving may easily be procured.

There are in Plainfield some consistent Christians who own horses but who always walk Sundays and never drive. This often occasions personal discomfort, but as a consequence the horses are able to give splendid service every week day.

The Sunday observance prosecutions will, it is said, be conducted at private expense by parties outside of the local society. Zealous officers of the society have endeavored to do good, but have been so handicapped and crippled by opposing forces within their own organization that disruption is feared.

Concerning the horse and his troubles, it is a fact interesting to note that a worthy Plainfield woman is devoting her time to selling the wonderful book "Black Beauty," the "Uncle Tom's Cabin of the horse," among cultured people interested in horses, and will purchase with the profits of her sales copies for free distribution among local coachmen and hackmen.

A PLAINFIELD PLUMBER ON TOP.

Pike's Peak Itself Was Not High Enough for Daniel, so He Climb the Flag Staff.

(From the Sunday Plaindealer.)

On the Monday following convention week, quite a number of the delegates from the East, who still remained in Colorado, either at Denver, Colorado Springs or some other picturesque abiding place, made up a party to visit Pike's Peak, the highest point in the Rockies, and which attains an altitude of 14,450 feet above sea level. The New York delegation was well represented, and many others of the United States had delegates present, while from New Jersey came Mr. D. W. Littell, Plainfield's plumber, who was attached for this occasion to the Empire State. After sundry balls to play snow ball and admire the scenery, the beauties of which were pointed out by the intelligent guides who accompanied the party, and incidental pauses, to get breath—though no one would acknowledge it—the summit, where snow lay ten feet deep, was reached. The highly rarified air played havoc with the breathing apparatus of the party, and even caused nose-bleed in some instances.

It might have been thought that this was high enough for any one, but one choice spirit—that same D. W. Littell—inspired, doubtless, by the motto of the State that had included him in its delegation, was dissatisfied with his altitude, and commenced to shin up the flagstaff that rises fifty feet high above the summit of the mountain. It was a long pull, but Brother Littell got there, as usual, and performed sundry gymnastic gyrations on the top of the pole, achieving a feat that no Eastern man had ever accomplished, although several had essayed it on prior occasions, and eclipsing all other foreigners who have undertaken the task. Descending to terra-firma, the athletic and venturesome plumber brought with him a piece of the flagstaff and a fragment of wire as mementoes of the occasion and of his daring, and he has promised to distribute pieces thereof as relics among those who accompanied him to the top of Pike's Peak.

Delegate Littell, joined the other visitors in the collection of mineral and other specimens for preservation as curios. That it is a cold day when New Jersey is left was fully exemplified on this occasion. Brother Littell found the finest specimen of the lot, a magnificent golden topaz, weighing about 9 pounds, 8 inches high, with six sides, each 4½ inches wide, and a pyramidal top. It is a beautiful crystal and of considerable value.

The Laws of the Last Session.

With the two chapters given below and this week's supplement, the publication of the laws of the last session of the Legislature, as called for by ordered in THE CONSTITUTIONALIST, is completed:

CHAPTER CCCIX.

An Act to amend an act entitled "A further supplement to an act entitled 'An act to reorganize the fire and police departments in the cities of this state [illegible]'" [illegible]

1. Be it enacted by the Senate and General Assembly of the State of New Jersey, [illegible]

2. [illegible]

3. And be it enacted, That this act shall take effect immediately.

Approved June 14, 1890.

CHAPTER CCCX.

An Act amending "An act to provide for the [illegible]," approved [illegible] one thousand eight hundred and eighty-[illegible] [illegible]

1. Be it enacted by the Senate and General Assembly of the State of New Jersey, [illegible]

2. [illegible]

3. And be it enacted, That this act shall take effect immediately.

Approved June 14, 1890.

A Prize of $100,000

Is a good thing to get, and the man who wins it by superior skill, or by an unexpected turn of Fortune's wheel, is to be congratulated. But he who escapes from the clutches of that dread monster, Consumption, and wins back health and happiness, is far more fortunate. The chances of winning $100,000 are small, but every consumptive may be absolutely sure of recovery, if he takes Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery in time. For all scrofulous diseases (consumption is one of them), it is an unfailing remedy. It is guaranteed to cure in all cases of disease for which it is recommended, or money refunded.

SPOILED HIS RIVAL'S BEAUTY.

The Sad Tale of a Shattered Nose and Vanished Dreams of Bliss.

Not every gallant swain walking Plainfield's streets today with discolored proboscis is concerned in this tale of true love and life, but one young man, at present hid from the gaze of man and woman in the solitude of his darkened, griefstrewn room, where he nurses a highly-inflamed nose and a deeply-injured heart, is directly implicated in the story.

He was one of Plainfield's most popular boys—a member of the clubs, a successful beau at mass, ever welcomed in good society. Of the many fair creatures who liked him there was one sweet damsel whom he loved to distraction and who seemed devoted to him. Last Friday night he parted from her with fond expressions of tender passion. Saturday morning he worked in his office doubly hard, so that he might have the afternoon to himself, and take her out carriage driving. At noon Saturday he met a dark-haired youth who had always seemed to be an ardent friend, but who was in secret a jealous rival. The light of love shone from the eyes of the accepted suitor, and he good-naturedly accepted the offer of the other to show him a new trick in facial contortion. In an instant the young amateur villain had grasped the hero's nose firmly between his strong fingers, close against the bones under the eyes. By a sudden severe pull he forced all the blood in the nose to the fleshy point. The red life-current spurted forth upon the white shirt-front of the crafty trickster.

"Alas, what an accident!" he said; "see my ruined laundry." The injured party looked in the glass and moaned. As the villain hastened away he gave vent to the regulation chuckle, then hied himself to the lady-love who held in heart if not in reality plighted her troth to the possessor of the damaged nose. To her he recounted a black-hearted bit of fiction, relating how the absent one had been living a double life, and telling how the fact had just been exposed through facts learned from a brawl in which he had been implicated.

Saturday afternoon the mutilated lover spent in nursing his nose. Sunday evening the member was still puffed up and purple, but the ardent youth could not refrain from calling on his inamorata. He was a sight; she shrieked when she saw him, and fled from his presence, having, as she believed, had living proof of the reality of the villain's tale.

Therefore an engagement which might soon have been announced may possibly never be. The man with the ruined beauty hides from the presence of even his own family. Presently he will recover and vow bitterly that he doesn't care. Before the week is over the successful villain, if his plans do not miscarry, will be swinging in the hammock of the fair, capricious one, eating caramels with the girl whose first love was so easily killed.

MIRACULOUS ESCAPE.

A Train Strikes the Team Mr. Cole Was Driving, But Only a Horse is Killed.

As train No. 11 on the Central Railroad of N. J., due here at 11:39, was nearing County Line crossing at White House, this morning, a team of horses driven by George Cole, became unmanageable and started to run away.

Mr Cole and his son, who were in the wagon, did their best to stop the frightened horses but could not do so and the team and train met at the crossing. The engineer blew his whistle and did all in his power to stop the train, but could not before it struck the team. One horse was killed but the other was unhurt. Neither Mr. Cole nor his son sustained any injury.

Councilman Spangenberg Orders Them Away.

A gang of about twenty tramps encamped near Netherwood, have been committing a number of petty depredations in the vicinity, which some have blamed upon the indigent Italian Coonts who are employed by Col. Moore on his water works. Councilman Spangenberg invaded the tramp camp, Sunday morning, and discovered traces of neighborhood thefts. He ordered the tramps to leave at once or they would be arrested.

The timid ladies of Netherwood are assured that Col. Moore's noblemen are perfectly harmless, and so tame they will eat out of his hand—if they get a chance.

Trotting by Gentlemen's Horses.

On the track of the Driving Park Association, Saturday afternoon, the following exciting heats were contested:

First race—John Hayes' "Andy," Peter Osborne's "Blanche Warwick," and Chas. Brower's "Sweepstakes." Andy won both heats in 2:45 and 2:47. Sweepstakes second.

Second race—Mr. Fosher's bay horse "Fosher," John Osborne's "Colonel," and Nate Robbins' "Doctor." Fosher won both heats. Time 2:32 and 2:33½. Colonel second.

Charles Brower drove "Lady Thistle" a mile in 2:43¼ and repeated in 2:42.

A Wayward Boy Causes Anxiety.

Mrs. Kate Keefe of West Sixth street, is greatly worried over the continued absence of her fourteen-year-old son Michael from home. Michael's mother has not seen him since Saturday, and she cannot account for his remaining away and giving her so much anxiety. He was always given kind treatment, and had no cause for running away. The lad is reported to have been seen going with other boys towards Scotch Plains. It is thought that they may be taking a Summer outing in their own peculiar way in the woods. When they get hungry and homesick they will doubtless return.

The Knights Go In for Local Option.

The Supreme Lodge Knights of Pythias, concluded its sixteenth biennial session, at Milwaukee, Friday. Assemblyman Ulrich, George H. Polhemus, John C. VanDyke, Joseph Shepherd, Edward J. Flannery and other well-known Knights of this city were present upon the occasion.

Before adjournment the long-talked-of liquor question was settled. A long and bitter debate was entered into between the Prohibition representatives and the Local Option men. The latter finally won, the Supreme Lodge deciding that the various Grand Lodges were to judge whether saloon-keepers should be admitted to membership in the lodges subordinate to them.

Some Base Ball Grumbles.

The men who patronize the seats in front of the ladies' grand stand on the Crescent League grounds do a great deal of smoking during the game, and not all of them smoke good cigars. Almost invariably the smoke is blown by the breeze back into the ladies' faces, and the matter has become an affair of considerable offense—so much so that several of the offending parties have remained away from recent games.

The treatment of the Allerton players Saturday by a few visiting spectators was the subject of much criticism by kind-hearted Plainfielders. The inferior playing of the Allertons, and the consequent loosening of excitement, was of course apparent to all, but some so far forgot good breeding as to hurl shafts of ridicule at the visiting nine, and though the Allertons accepted circumstances with the utmost gentlemanly good nature, some feared that they might get the impression, from the actions of the few, that Plainfielders didn't know how to behave themselves.

Weakly infants, the mother's care and solicitude, are made strong by Mellin's Food. It is rich in muscle and bone-giving constituents in the form which is adapted to their digestive powers.

BEAT IN THE BEGINNING.

The "Allertons" Bring Out a Strong Team but Are Frightened to Death at the Start.

Wade, captain of the Metropolitans; Hoey, also of the Mets; Murray and Lever, who played on the Acmes when they defeated the Crescents in April; Carr, pitcher of the "Stars" and "Monroes," and other strong players formed the Allerton team that came to Plainfield, Saturday. Wade, who brings the Metropolitans here on August 23 said he came out to find what Plainfield's team was made of. He left full of information and anxiety.

The people again complained because the Crescents won. Why they should blame the home team for that, is not apparent. The Crescent League's managers have brought the strongest teams in the business to Plainfield, and will continue to do so. If the Crescents can't be beat, everybody should be proud instead of complaining.

The Allertons, Saturday, were frightened out of the game before it commenced. Wade was so nervous at short, that he made some very bad throws to first, still tha did not lose the game. Everybody hit the ball except Gillis and Walker, and the hits were bunched. The batting of the Allertons, however, was scattered. Though they made only three less hits than the Crescents, they died on the bases. They had to earn every one of their three runs. In the sixth inning four beautiful hits by the Allertons were so finely fielded that they only netted two runs; and in the ninth they could only get one run off of two singles and a two-bagger. The Crescents played a perfect game. Although Captain Wiegand is charged with dropping two balls that were nicely thrown to him, it made no difference in the result. The score was:

The Dishonesty of the Paper and the Calibre of the Cheat, Grows Bolder and Greater.

For the information of the people that in their dealings they may steer clear of those whose chosen ways are the ways of sneaks and pickpockets, THE PRESS every few days publishes a record of the items stolen from its columns to light up the columns of the news of the evening following.

The record is also published for the information of our other contemporaries that they may measure the uprightness and manliness of one of their profession who will stoop so low as to try to build up his publication by the theft of the labor and brains of others.

The following is the boldest offence of the kind yet. A quarter of a column stolen word from word. Read the evidence side by side, and you will despise the paper and its owner more than ever—if that is possible:

At the outbreak of the war of the Rebellion he volunteered for service, and was mustered in August 2, 1861, as Major Assistant Adjutant General. He became Colonel Add'l Aide-de-Camp June 1, 1862, and Brigadier-General of Volunteers March 13, 1865, and was mustered out of the volunteer service March 20, 1866, having served with great distinction through the war, and still holding himself in readiness for engagement in the regular service. A large portion of the Rebellion period he spent as aide and adjutant-general to General Dix. He was with Gen. Acting under medical advice, he retained from active business pursuits and surrendered himself to a well-earned enjoyment of his wealth and family happiness. The Parlor Match Again.

A resident of West Seventh street was lighting a match for his cigar after breakfast, Sunday morning, when the burning head snapped off, flew into an open drawer and in an instant everything was ablaze. With much difficulty the fire was smothered.

Struck by a Piece of a Railroad.

A gang of men on the Central Railroad were at work on the tracks in the suburbs of Plainfield, July 16, when one of the men was struck in the face and severely cut and bruised by the end of a steel rail projecting from a moving hand-car. He was taken to his home.

Our Neighbors at the Sea Side.

MISPLACED SYMPATHY.

Judge Bartine Sets Aside Justice Hardy's Bail as Excessive, and Releases the Candy Store Thieves.

(From the Union-Gazette.)

On Sunday, July 6, Mrs. Hall, who keeps a candy store in North Plainfield, caused the arrest of three boys: Edward Prentice, aged 10 years; Cornelius Splaine, aged 9 years, and Charles Bartron, aged 14, on a charge of stealing a box of candy and three pies, valued at $4, from her store. The boys were committed to the borough lock-up until Monday, when they were committed by Justice Hardy to the county jail in default of $300 bail each, to await the action of the September grand jury. The parents of all the children are poor; the Prentice boy's father is a laborer at Short Hills, near Summit; Splaine's father is a coachman for Mr. Ross of Plainfield; Bartron's father is a mason. The combined efforts of the three parents failed to secure the required bail of $900.

The children were locked up in the upper part of the jail, where they spent the time in sobbing and moaning. They saw no one but Jailor Wilson until Friday afternoon, when the attention of a Unionist-Gazette representative was called to their case by J. N. Schenck of North Plainfield. A visit was made to the jail where the children were seen. They at once confessed, with tears running down their cheeks, that they were guilty of the act. The youngest of all had secured a key to the back door of the store and they had taken the candy, pies and soda water, with which they started a store of their own along the street, selling the stuff to each other for pins and pebbles. They managed to eat and drink all the articles, and, boy-like, supposed it was a smart thing to do.

On Saturday Judge Bartine was seen, who expressed himself very forcibly concerning the action of a justice in requiring such a large amount of bail, and also compelling boys of that age to languish in jail for two months to await trial. He said he would release them in $50 bail each. The Unionist-Gazette telegraphed to the parents, and Mrs. Prentice and Mr. Bartron came up, and on their recognizances the children were released. An idea of how poor the parents are may be had from the fact that they had not enough money to pay the children's fare to their home. The amount necessary for the purpose was contributed by Judge Bartine, whose considerate action in this matter shows he has a bigger heart than some Justices of the Peace.

GENERAL VAN BUREN'S FUNERAL.

The Gallant Officer of Mexican and Civil Wars Laid Away to Final Rest.

A large number of people who during the lifetime of the late Brigadier-General Daniel T. VanBuren, had been personal or military friends, gathered in Grace Protestant Episcopal church on Saturday to witness the last rites over the remains of the departed.

It had been Mrs. VanBuren's request that the military order of the Loyal Legion of the United States, which had given expression to profound sorrow at the news of the General's death, would not attend in a body but in a less formal and more friendly way. The insignia and badge of mourning of the members of the Legion was conspicuous among the mourners, but all who wore it had known the General in former days, and were present with feelings of profound sorrow at the loss of so brave a soldier and so good a citizen.

The committal service of the Episcopal church was read by the Rev. E. M. Rodman. The casket was covered with beautiful floral emblems. One was a cross of ivy leaves and roses, laid on two magnificent branches of osage palm. Another was a cross of purple immortelles and a crown of roses, lilies and smilax. A third was a sickle of roses and a sheaf of wheat.

The pall-bearers at the funeral were the vestrymen of Grace church, at their own request. These were E. L. Finch, E. B. Clark, O. T. Waring, W. E. Lowe, C. P. Bull, W. R. Cock and E. N. Erickson.

ONE WAY OF KEEPING HER PURE.

A Father Proposes to Expose His Daughter in Court, and Drive Her to Prison, As a Means of Saving.

An irate father dragged his daughter to the police station Thursday evening and charged her with gross immorality. The girl was only fifteen years old, and her face seemed expressive of innocence, but the man said she frequented bad places and that he had just dragged her from a disorderly house. Since she was determined to be bad, he said, he was bound to have her exposed through the Courts.

The girl said that she was not wicked. Her father had been beating her and she had been forced to flee for refuge to a house where she knew her brother was. She never thought that the place had a bad character, and her only motive for the visit was to find safety.

Because the girl was not taken in custody the father became greatly angered, and said that on Saturday he'd have her on the road to prison. He hasn't yet appeared in Court.

The Rev. C. B. Mitchell One of the Speakers.

The annual camp meeting services at Mount Tabor will begin on August 20. On the first day the services will be under the direction of the Women's Christian Temperance Union. Among the speakers will be Dr. Berry, of Chicago; Dr. Doherty, of the Sunday School Union, and the Rev. C. B. Mitchell, of Plainfield.

Don't Make the Street Your Waste-basket.

A horse owned by the Adams Express company is under treatment for injuries inflicted by a nail on which it stepped in the street. This is the fourth of this company's horses recently injured in this manner. Though a nail be perfectly straight, one horse stepping on it bends it, and it easily penetrates another horse's foot. To throw things into the street is a bad practice, and often results seriously.

There Has Been no Brief Submitted.

A rehash of the action of the Police Board in the Carey case, with the testimony taken, and Counselor Bergen's reply—all of which was published months ago in THE PRESS—has just been set before the public again as Carey's Attorney's "brief" to the Supreme Court. This is another of the falsehoods used by that side in its efforts to make its case appear honest and substantial. Carey's Attorney has submitted no brief at all, and seems to have given up the case as a bad job long ago.

Great Games Coming.

The games scheduled by the managers of the Crescent League's team to be played in this city to the first of September, are great ones. Look at the list:

July 26—Trenton's team that defeated the Crescents, June 28, by a score of 7 to 4.

August 2—The Ridgewoods—formerly the "Brooklyn L's"—with Livingston, formerly of the Crescents to pitch for them.

August 9—Gorhams, the champion colored nine of New York.

August 16—Stars of Newark, who defeated the Crescents in an eleven inning game, April 12, by a score of 4 to 3.

August 23—Metropolitans, the former champions of the United States.

August 30—The celebrated Cuban Giants (colored).

During August, if money can induce them to come to Plainfield, a game will be played by the Crescents against the New York League team.

PLAINFIELDERS BADLY TREATED AGAIN.

Somerville's Base Ball People Growl at Their Patrons From This City, and Hustle Them About.

The West End ball team at Somerville, July 16, played its seventh contest in the league that has been arranged between itself and three clubs who are its inferiors in every way. The contest is a ridiculous one. There will be no glory in winning it, and it is a losing league financially. That day's visiting team was the Bayonnes, and the West Ends won by a score of 8 to 3.

There were less than 100 paying patrons present, almost half of whom were Plainfielders who will go a long ways to see Harkins' wonderful pitching and to enjoy the fine playing of Conkling on first, short stop Bergen, second baseman Carbonell and the phenomenal Williams. All were much pleased with the strong and brilliant game of the Somervilles and united their applause to that of the West End rooters. Although there were low murmurs all around to the effect that the West Ends could shut out the Crescents, and the Plainfield people were a lot of rowdies, and the Crescents stole the game from the Hacketts, yet the visitors were not molested until they started to leave the field.

To reach the gate all occupants of the grand stand must go behind the catcher on the outside of a wire netting. As the Plainfield party passed along that way in full view of everybody on the bleachers and grand stand, they were shouted at to "Go on!" "Get Out of That!" "We don't want you there!" etc. Councilman O. L. Jenkins, Dr. Charles B. Thiers, Messrs Lyman, Hallock, K nny and others of the Crescent League members walked on without a word, but some of the hotter-headed Plainfielders were inclined to resent the uncalled for and discourteous treatment they were subjected to. Thereupon a man called "Cal McMurtry" left his seat at the scorer's stand and announced that if they didn't get out he'd put them out.

This unpleasantness, however, was soon forgotten by the Plainfielders when they remembered what a contrast it was to the genial and generous treatment they had received when they arrived, at the hands of Manager Mack. He showed himself a gentleman in every way. As to "Cal's" action, a number of the Somervilles tried to explain it away afterwards. A. W. Demarest, the former fielder of the Crescents, was told that the Somervilles did not want the Plainfielders to get behind the catcher and watch Harkins' curves. Such a silly excuse, however, served no purpose, because they could not take the curves away and besides they could be told of such a rule without being shouted at in a body from fifty feet away to "Go on out!" They were simply insulted because they came from Plainfield. The writer was told by a man with a red neck: "We know who you are and I know who I'm talking to; and I ain't talking to much." But neither the managers of the West Ends, nor the Somerville people, are to blame for such a man's talk.

MR. GRATTON SWELLS UP AGAIN.

He Tells How His Dog Drank Water, Stood in the Sun Until Steam Was Up and Then Bust.

When the local news-market is dull Wm. Gratton of Plainfield, is always prompt to volunteer contributions to the daily paper. The heat never diminishes the ardor of Mr. Gratton's imagination, nor does the cold congeal it. His inventive capacity knows no Summer, no Winter; it is ever on the alert.

The well-informed people of Plainfield still recall Mr. Gratton's story of the heated term of 1889, when he was chased down the Watchung Mountain-side by a large hoople-snake, which rolled faster and faster towards him and sank its fangs into the hoe-handle with which he struck at its speeding form. The hoe-handle, elastic-memoried people recollect, swelled up and was converted into a telegraph pole, with serpent's teeth-prints showing like spur-holes from end to end.

This swelled-up tale was the last of Mr Gratton's pleasant little novels that season. The Winter gave a brisk news-market throughout, and Mr. Gratton took a long-needed rest. At the first sign of dullness in the Spring, nowever, he was ready with a story of how he captured two cinnamon bears in a squirrel-trap in the borough forest-lands. The literary people received this historical sketch with joy, and looked forward to a flourishing Gratton short-story season in the heated term. Nor does Mr. Gratton seem disposed to disappoint the appreciative public. On Thursday he again produced another of his famous works. The only thing the matter with the new tale is similarity. It is another swelled-up affair. Still, it is not discreditable to the author.

"'Twas Thursday"—says Mr. Gratton—"You know how hot it was, yourself. My little dog drank six quarts of water in six consecutive gulps. Then he stood in the sun. The intense, paralyzing heat of the solar rays caused a wonderful transmogrification. The dog became, as it were, a sheet-iron boiler. The water consumed by the dog was rapidly generated into steam. Suddenly the noise of a tremendous explosion rent the air. The dog was torn into millions of pieces—two millions—I counted them. The force of the shock hurled from its upright position to a prostrate one, a horse in an adjoining field. The horse was maimed for life. There it goes now; see how it limps!"

Mr. Gratton says that he is determined to be known as the greatest imaginative poet of the day—or his name shall be Ananias.

Let This Law be Enforced.

Among the new laws passed last Winter is one relating to smoking by boys, which should be rigidly enforced. It provides that on and after the first of September next no child actually or apparently under sixteen years of age shall smoke or in any way use cigars, cigarettes or tobacco in any form whatever, in any public street, place or resort; and that any violation of this act shall be a misdemeanor, punishable by a fine of not more than $10, nor less than $2 for each offense.

Reputable dealers throughout the length, breadth and depth of our glorious land fortunately keep the genuine Hires' Root Beer in stock. Did you ever try it? It is easy to make, and ever so delicious, and it is such a safe drink.

Shot the Horse.

George Gould of Westfield, accidentally shot one of Liveryman Burtis' best horses Tuesday. Gould had hired the horse to drive to Rahway and was returning from that place when his revolver of 44 calibre, which he was carelessly handling, exploded and the ball buried itself deep in the animal's flank. A veterinary surgeon is doing what he can to save the horse's life.

—Mr. and Mrs. Richard A. Boyce of the Somerset House, are enjoying a much needed vacation at Mimon Top Hills of Somerset. During their absence Charles B. Bailey, late of San Francisco, Cal., will courteously attend to the wants of the patrons of the Hotel.

We Caution All Against Them.

The unprecedented success and merit of Ely's Cream Balm—a real cure for catarrh, hay fever and cold in the head—has induced many adventurers to place catarrh medicines bearing some resemblance in appearance, style or name upon the market, in order to trade upon the reputation of Ely's Cream Balm. Don't be deceived. Buy only Ely's Cream Balm. Many in your immediate locality will testify in highest commendation of it. A particle is applied into each nostril; no pain; agreeable to use. Price 50c.

When Baby was sick, we gave her Castoria.
When she was a Child, she cried for Castoria.
When she became Miss, she clung to Castoria.
When she had Children, she gave them Castoria.

A FIRE DEPARTMENT FARCE.

How They Turn Out Over the Brook When Property and Life is in Danger.

The need of artificial warmth in the middle of July, was the unusual cause of much excitement about Sunday school time, over the brook, Sunday afternoon. A fire was kindled in the grate at the home of Mr. Richards, on Willow avenue, but as swallows had recently filled the unused chimney with their nests, the open draft was choked and smoke filled the attic. Somebody passing saw smoke pouring from the upper part of the house, and sent forth an alarm. Ass't Foreman Schlereth and an assortment of ex-firemen and citizens, including Councilmen Emmons and Buckle, made an effort to drag the Borough Department's apparatus to the spot. They could not make much headway with the steamer, however, until Wm. Smith, who built the very chimney that was smoking, loaned his pony to help pull.

While on the way to the fire a shower came down, and all hands on the hose carriage rope left it standing in the middle of the road while they sought shelter under A. VanDeventer's porch. After the rain held up they started for the fire again but their services were not required.

The engine-house stalls are still used as cells for drunks and disorderlies, and the fire horses, consequently, are always stabled somewhere out of reach just when they are wanted. The Department over the brook is somewhat unfitted to cope with a real fire, but it seems as if nothing would awaken the Borough Council to the fact than just such an expensive lesson.

The Reason Gallagher Let 'Em Go.

Michael Gallagher of Bound Brook, who struck Peter Meyers of Raritan and broke his nose, just outside of the Pond Machine Tool company's works, as told exclusively in THE PRESS, claims he did it in self-defense. They had some words inside the shops, and the latter threatened to "do" Gallagher when he got him outside.

Gallagher is little, but Oh! When a man twice his size says he's "got it in for him," Gallagher will keep an eye on him. Consequently when they met face to face out of doors, Gallagher put up his "dukes" for protection and then hit the big fellow between the eyes. Meyers was badly hurt, but strange to say did not whip his adversary. Gallagher at first offered to pay the doctor's bill and the wages for any time Meyers might be laid up, but having heard since that the latter is talking behind his back, Gallagher now says he'll do nothing for him.

Raising the Figures.

Besides the increase in valuation by the several assessors in the county, a committee appointed by the Board of Assessors recommended that there be added to the real estate valuations as follows: Cranford, $20,000; Linden, $115,000; Rahway, $117,000; Summit, 75,000. This recommendation was adopted by a vote of 8 to 2.

John have you seen that woman lately? John in astonishment! What woman? That woman picking grapes for Speer's Wine. Just see her in another column and read about it, the wines are found by chemists to be absolutely pure and equal to the best in the World. The Board of Health in large cities and leading Hospitals have adopted their use where wines are needed.

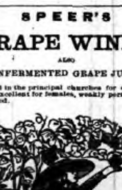
Used in the principal churches for communion. Excellent for females, weakly persons and the aged.



ADOPTED IN HOSPITALS AS THE BEST FOR INVALIDS.

Speer's Port Grape Wine,
FOUR YEARS OLD.

THIS Celebrated Wine is the pure juice of the dead ripe Oporto Grape, raised in Speer's vineyards, and left hang until they shrink and become partly raisined before gathering. Its invaluable

Tonic and Strengthening Properties
are unsurpassed by any other Wine. Being produced under Mr. Speer's own personal supervision, its purity and genuineness are guaranteed by the principal Hospitals and Boards of Health who have examined it. The youngest child and the weakest invalids use it to advantage. It is particularly beneficial to the aged and debilitated and suited to the various ailments that effect the weaker sex.

It is in every respect a WINE TO BE RELIED ON.

Speer's Unfermented Grape Juice
Is the juice of the Oporto Grape, preserved in its natural fresh, sweet state as it runs from the press by fumigation and electricity, thereby destroying the exciter of fermentation. It is perfectly pure, free from spirits, and will keep in any climate.

Speer's (Socialite) Claret
Is held in high estimation for its richness as a Dry Table Wine, especially suited for dinner use.

Speer's P. J. Sherry
Is a Wine of superior character, and partakes of the rich qualities of the grape from which it is made.

Speer's P. J. Brandy
IS A PURE distillation of the grape, and stands unrivalled in this country for medical purposes.

It has a peculiar flavor, similar to that of the grapes from which it is distilled.

OFFICIAL PAPER OF THE STATE, THE COUNTY AND THE CITY, AND HAS THE LARGEST CIRCULATION OF ANY PAPER PUBLISHED IN THE COUNTY OF UNION.

[illegible] A. DEMAREST, - - City Editor.

—Sewing agent J. A. Haines has acquired and mastered a brand-new bicycle.

—A daughter was born to Mrs. August F. Sampson of [illegible], Monday morning.

—The Hotel Netherwood's ice bill for June just past, was $200. For the same month of last year it was $75.

—Arthur Brock and wife of this city, last week transferred to Frederick G. Johnson, a lot Northwest side of Elm street, 300 feet from Rock avenue, 66x115 feet, for a consideration of $600.

—Charles Williams, of this city, was sentenced to one year in State Prison, on Wednesday at Elizabeth court, for stealing and selling some chairs and other movable property from The Crescent building.

—The attention of those boys who persist in playing base ball in the streets of the city, is called to the fact that there is an ordinance prohibiting the same, and that those who engage in the pastime are liable to arrest and imprisonment.

—Michael Gallagher, of Bound Brook, who is employed in the Pond Tool Works, had some words with a fellow workman Friday, and at noon outside the building struck the latter, it is said, without warning in the face and broke his nose.

—Richmond street is receiving the attention of the Street Commissioner. The thoroughfare is being macadamized and a grade made so that the water will run off. It will make a good street when completed and reflect credit on Mr. Hooper.

—Ed. Hoover, the smokestack artist whose ambition is to paint a ring around the moon, returned to Plainfield Saturday and imbibed so freely and painted the neighborhood of [illegible] street so red a hue that City Judge Codington on Monday fined him $10.

—A little girl was taken before City Judge Codington on Tuesday, charged with throwing stones at a house on West Second street. There had been a children's squabble, and an angry mother was determined that the [illegible] should suffer. The girl was only seven years of age and a cripple. The Court promptly dismissed the case and the child's accuser had to pay the costs.

One of J. Fred. MacDonald's most valuable horses is dead. It was somewhat overworked during one of the hottest days of last week, and prostration set in. The best of veterinary service was secured and the horse was tended day and night, but he eventually died after much suffering.

What Perseverance and a Little Fly Can Do.

W. H. Cornell, the Dunellen butcher, stopped at Taylor's Hotel on Thursday. He tied his horse and went inside for his usual custom. While gone the horse, bothered by an attentive and persistent fly, slipped the bridle, ran around the pole, kicked the whiffle tree apart the wagon, threw out the meat and—that's all.

Little Girls Give Poor a Helping Hand.

A very pretty lawn fair was given by Miss Nellie Martin, assisted by the Misses Emmons, the Misses Kathan, the Misses Williams, and Miss Arnold, yesterday afternoon. The threatening weather interfered considerably with the patronage, but the little Misses cleared nearly ten dollars, which they will give to a needy Plainfield family.

It is said that a man by the name of Clark who lives at Dunellen and was employed by the Central Railroad as switch-tender near the Singer Works, drew his wages July 16 and left with five dollars and a letter telling for large-home, and then left. Three month's rent unpaid and a grocery bill on the books, are a part of his liabilities.

OBITUARY.

DANIEL T. VANBUREN.

Gen. Daniel T. VanBuren, one of Plainfield's best known citizens, died at his home, 47 East Ninth street, at a late hour July 20. He had suffered a long time from heart trouble, which was greatly aggravated by the death of a favorite son, Francis, fifteen months ago.

Daniel T. VanBuren was a son of the famous jurist, Judge VanBuren of Kingston, N. Y., which was the home of the General's boyhood. When about twenty years of age, in 1842, he entered the Military Academy at West Point, and was graduated four years later, entering the United States Army July 1, 1847, as Second Lieutenant of the [illegible] Artillery. He was promoted to First Lieutenancy Feb. 14, 1849, and served until his resignation, March 31, 1855. At the outbreak of the war of the Rebellion he volunteered for service, and was mustered in August 1, 1861, as Major Assistant Adjutant General. He became Colonel Add'l Aide-de-Camp June 1, 1862, and Brigadier-General of Volunteers, March 13, 1865, and was mustered out of the volunteer service March 20, 1866, having served with great distinction through the war, and still holding himself in readiness for engagement in the regular service. A large portion of the Rebellion period he spent as aide and adjutant-general to General Dix. He was with Gen. Dix throughout almost his entire campaigns, including the engagements at Fortress Monroe and Norfolk.

After the close of the war the General retired with a most honorable military record, to private life. Acting under medical advice, he retired from active business pursuits, and devoted himself to a well-earned enjoyment of his wealth and family happiness. His wife, one of the most cultured of women, is a member of the Gouverneur Morris family, a direct descendant of the famous statesman. One of his warmest personal friends was Col. Wm. [illegible] Waring. The later days of the General were often spent in reminiscent talk, with the Colonel, of memories of boyhood days and war-times.

OLIVER RUNYON.

Oliver Runyon, who left Plainfield about thirteen years ago, died July 13 in San Francisco, aged 75 years and 23 days. He leaves a wife and one son, Wm. M. Runyon, who was living at the East Front street, the late home of Randolph Titsworth, M. D., deceased, whose daughter is the wife of young Mr. Runyon.

Oliver Runyon was a lifelong resident of this vicinity up to the time of his departure for the West, and was engaged in the business of undertaker and furniture dealer. He has two sisters living, Mrs. Julius Runyon of [illegible] avenue, and the widow of David Manning of South Plainfield. The former is the widow of Mrs. Oliver Runyon's brother—sisters and brothers having married one another.

Thousands have been cured of indigestion and loss of appetite by a single bottle of Ayer's Sarsaparilla. The use of this medicine, by giving tone and strength to the assimilative organs, has made innumerable cures of chronic dyspepsia. Price $1. Worth $5 a bottle.

The wedding of Robert F. R. Huntsman to Miss Leontine Linsigneolo is announced to occur Monday, August 4, at the home of the bride's parents, Mr. and Mrs. George A. Linsigneolo. Invitations have been issued only to immediate relatives, as Mrs. Linsigneolo is still in mourning for her mother.

A large number of the representative German people of the city and borough, with many American friends too, met at the home of Mrs. Bach, on Somerset street, Tuesday, and from there went in a body to surprise Mrs. V. Utzinger, of Grand View avenue, upon the occasion of her birthday. About sixty were present. Never was there an affair of the kind more successful. Music, recitations, dancing and supper were parts of a long evening's enjoyment that all participated in. Mrs. Utzinger is very active in all charitable and church work, and deservedly popular. She was the recipient of many handsome gifts.

AFTER THE HIGH-CHECKERS.

Henry Bergh and Scott of the S. P. C. A., Seek to Relieve Mr. Waring's Team, Which They Claim are Cruelly Treated.

The liveliest kind of a time may be expected in local circles over the determined action taken by two officers of the Plainfield Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals, Wednesday, when a clergyman and an artist laid hands on one of the most aristocratic teams in town.

A first step in the matter of lessening the evils of high-checking among Plainfield horses was taken in early June. The affair received proper attention at the hands of THE PRESS, and in the New York Evening Post of June 12, appeared the following:

> A crusade for the emancipation of the horse has been begun in Plainfield, where the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals has acquired great strength and where five Bands of Mercy among the younger generation have just been organized. A prominent officer of the local society and a special agent of the State society is Dr. H. G. Stephenson, a venerable humanitarian, eighty-five years of age. Of late the Doctor has busied himself going about the streets ordering ladies in their carriages to modify such portions of their horses' harness as seem to inflict cruelty, and as in most cases the ladies laugh or grow angry at him and haughtily refuse to accede to his demands, he has entered on a more determined course. He is especially bitter against such fashionable follies as docking tails and high-checking, and most of his efforts are being directed against the society people of the place. He has written letters to some of the offenders, including O. T. Waring, a Standard Oil magnate, who has many trotters of his own, and who is President of the Plainfield Gentlemen's Driving Park Association. Dr. Stephenson avows that he will show no favor, and, though Mr. Waring is very wealthy and influential, will prosecute to the utmost all cases against him. If those to whom he has written pay no attention to his demands, he will institute legal proceedings. He is entirely familiar with the anatomy of the horse and charges that tight check-reins—which with cruel blinders and other barbarous things are greatly in vogue among Plainfield's people—produce blindness and throat and spine diseases, besides seriously affecting the highly important salivary glands, and thus interfering with digestion. Cases of sore eyes and blindness from the use of "blinkers" pressing against the eyeballs are also reported. The local society has ample funds to aid the Doctor, against whom the people implicated are in high dudgeon. The Doctor could do no better than to circulate the wonderful book, "Black Beauty," which has attracted so much attention in England.

What THE PRESS and the Post contained was heartily endorsed, later, by Dr. Stephenson, but another paper contained the following malicious paragraph:

> The New York Post of yesterday publishes reflections on Mr. O. T. Waring and others of this city, intimating that they are to be prosecuted by the Plainfield Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals. Mr. Julian Scott, a prominent officer of the Society, desires us, in simple justice to Mr Waring to say that the story is false. Mr. Waring is abundantly able to bring the publisher to account for accepting statements from an irresponsible "fake" writer, with an established reputation for unreliability.

The writer of the above seemed very eager to do "justice" to Mr Waring, but seemed less ready to do justice to the newspaper correspondent whom he vilified. The local representative of the Post wrote to the editor who published the above, a fair and courteous letter stating that the article in the Post was true, the eminent officer, Mr. Scott, to the contrary notwithstanding, and offering undeniable proof, if the paper was so anxious to be just, of the truth of every assertion. The letter concluded with the paragraph:

> As to my being "an irresponsible fake writer with an established reputation for unreliability," that is a matter which through different glasses has a different appearance. There are still, it is said, some people who refuse to believe that the form of the earth is globular.

Of course the paper refused to publish the correspondent's fair-minded letter, because it twinged the editor's conscience.

This morning the Rev. T. Logan Murphy, one of the officers of the local Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals, got in the company of Mr. Scott, who raised the cry of "False!" and with this same Scott's assistance seized Mr. Waring's horses on the public street, loosened the check-reins, and lectured the colored coachman till the scared darkey trembled and turned pale. They told him that if ever again he appeared on the streets driving horses checked so cruelly high they would haul him up before Justice Nodyne and make a tremendous example of him.

The horses whose tight reins had been relieved, of course couldn't find voice to thank their emancipators, and it is safe to say that neither will the Waring family thank the Plainfield Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals for raising such a hubbub over their private affairs.

Summer Visitors.

The following are the arrivals at Hotel Netherwood for the past week:

Cowperthwait, Miss Mary Cowperthwait, Brooklyn; James Shackleton, East Orange, N. J.

FIFTY YEARS OF WEDDED BLISS.

Mr. and Mrs. Doane Celebrate Their Golden Wedding Day.

The golden milestone in the wedded life of Mr. and Mrs. S. Osborn Doane, of 41 East Fourth street, was reached on July 16, and the event was appropriately celebrated that evening, when the bride and groom of a half century received at their home a limited number of invited friends.

Most of those present at the golden wedding were relatives, and of those six were Mr. and Mrs. Doane's own children, thirteen their own grandchildren. Mrs. M. E. Sargeant of Brooklyn, a sister of Mrs. Doane, and Thomas Bagot, an uncle of Mrs. Doane, both of whom witnessed the original wedding in New York city fifty years ago, were also among the guests.

The children and grandchildren presented the host and hostess with a purse of gold, and other relatives and friends made appropriate gifts. The husband's gift to his wife was a massive plain gold wedding ring.

The evening was very happily spent. Music and refreshments were provided, and everyone was royally entertained. A feature of the event was a christening service, conducted by the Rev. C. B. Mitchell, who was present with Mrs. Mitchell. The children christened were Maria Rogers Doane, age two and one-half years, and Franklyn Clyde Doane, age four months, daughter and son of Mr. and Mrs. J. B. Doane.

The following suggestive verses, sent by a relative, were read by the Rev. Mr. Mitchell to the assembled guests:

THE GOLDEN WEDDING DAY.

Just fifty years ago, dear wife,
Since you and I were wed.
Today's our golden wedding day.
Where can the years have fled?
Am I that shy and awkward youth?
Are you that maiden fair?
With silver threads among the curls
That once was golden hair?

I never can forget the day
That made you all my own.
Your lips like tempting cherries ripe,
Your cheeks like roses blown,
Your sweet eyes shining bright as stars
In fancy yet I see;
And you that day than all the world
Were dearer far to me.

And yes, dear heart, I know that I
Love better far today
Than e'en I loved that maiden fair
The wife that's old and gray.
And I will pray that you and I
May walk life's golden sands,
Until we reach that better place,
The house not made with hands.

A SOCIETY GIRL'S PLIGHT.

She Has Occasion to Tell Some Nice Young Men They're Horrid.

An awkward predicament happened to a young lady well known in Plainfield society, Thursday. She and her sister were anticipating callers, and were arranging for a quiet little surprise for their friends, in the dining room, where they were arranging with their own fair hands seasonable refreshments. One of the damsels was bending over the dumb-waiter. The other stood near the door, surveying with satisfaction the dainty "spread."

Suddenly the door bell pealed, and simultaneously a crash of thunder sounded. The timid creature at the dumb-waiter screamed and gave a nervous feminine jump, just as her alert sister sprang for the vestibule, to admit by her own sweet self the welcome guests. Just as she opened the door she heard muffled cries from the dining room, and by instinct divining what had happened sought to persuade the valiant young men to wait till she had gone to her sister's rescue.

The gallant swains were too willing, however, and in blissful ignorance rushed into the dining room. Crimson with blushes, they hurried out again, and with abject apologies told their one hostess that they guessed the other hostess wanted to see her more than she did them. The girl who had fallen headlong into the dumb waiter stopped struggling and kicking and permitted her sister to help her out, and tearfully confronted the young men and told them they were horrid. Then they all sat down and ate iced cream and behaved themselves. The dumb waiter will never hold so precious a load again. It is ruined beyond repair.

PLAINFIELD THEIR MECCA.

Capitalists Know What Town Will Repay Their Investments.

F. M. Bacon, of the Real Estate Trust, has just closed a contract for the sale of the largest tract of unimproved property sold in this city in a number of years. The purchaser is Mr. A. Keyser of Salt Lake City, who purposes making large improvements.

The property is situated on Broadway and runs through to Berckman street. It has large frontages on Broadway, Putnam avenue, Hillside avenue, Hill street, Stiger place, Webster place and Berckman street. It was formerly known as the Stephen Vail estate, but of late has been owned by M. F. Marckley. Mr. Keyser is a wealthy gentleman of large experience in the development of property. He will soon make that part of the city bloom.

Mr. Bacon thinks that the future prospects for the city of Plainfield were never brighter than now. His opinion is that the population of the city can be doubled in five years. Mr. Bacon is negotiating with two other parties who will buy large tracts for the purpose of development as soon as public improvements such as water works, sewerage, street railways and other improvements are a certainty.

DEATH OF MRS. LEAL.

An Estimable Plainfield Woman Dies Suddenly Away From Home.

The sad news of the death of Mrs. John Leal, wife of the well-known and popular instructor, Prof. John Leal, Principal of Leal's school, West Front street, has just reached this city from Saranac Lake, N. Y., where Mr. and Mrs. Leal were spending their vacation.

Mrs. Leal was a most estimable woman and had a host of friends. She performed in private many noble deeds, and will be greatly missed in charitable and social circles.

The death, which was very sudden, occurred on Tuesday. Mr. and Mrs. Leal had been in the Adirondacks about a month.

DRANK DEADLY POISON.

An Esteemed Citizen Almost Kills Himself by Accident.

Dr. H. G. Stephenson, the octogenarian veterinarian, is recovering from the effects of a dose of poison which nearly cost him his life. Being troubled with a slight temporary illness, he poured out, in his own dispensing room, what he thought was a dose of beneficial medicine. He had no sooner swallowed the mixture, however, than he found he had taken a fatal dose of deadly aconite, extract of the poisonous wolf's-bane. The dread discovery did not cause him to lose his presence of mind, and he coolly administered with his own hands an antidote, and promptly sought a physician, who continued the treatment. His own nerve and good care of others prevented an unpleasant illness from terminating in an agonizing death.

It Hasn't Stopped Growing Yet.

A mammoth sunflower plant, fourteen feet tall, is the pride of Samuel Hedden of Duer street, North Plainfield. It isn't in bloom yet, either, and may overtop his neighbors' houses before it satisfies its own ambition.

PLAINFIELD'S NAUGHTY POLICEMEN.

Two Fair Visitors Think They're Awful Horrid, but the Hackmen are Lovely and Nice.

Plainfield's policemen are great horrid brutes, in the opinion of Jennie Lyrer and Wilhemina Sauerbach, and Plainfield's hackmen are angels with pearl-white wings, but whether or not Jennie and Wilhemina are prejudiced for the hackmen and against the policemen remains to be seen.

Not often do those two fair ones visit Plainfield. Indeed, their visit last week was only the second visit of their lives. Alighting from the train, and passing through the neat but not gaudy station, they were impressed by the sight of a long row of hackmen with cherubic faces, and fretting steeds eager to be away, and carriages emblazoned with the insignia of heraldry. Jennie and Wilhemina had no sooner reached the sidewalk than they found themselves in conversation with two gallant gentlemen whose respective trappings bore the Wm. Callahan and Peter Peterson coat-of-arms. The interview must have been a pleasant one, as, indeed, all interviews with Plainfield's genteel liveried noblemen ought to be and doubtless are; at any rate, when that vigilant policeman, Patrick Lynch, tripped blithely up and chided Mr. Callahan and Mr. Peterson for keeping their vehicles nearer the curbstone than the city ordinances permit.

Callahan and Peterson resented the interference of Lynch, who placed them under arrest. Thos. Farley another hackman, was also arrested, charged with taking a customer away from another hackman by leaving his horse, which the ordinances say must not be done.

Callahan, Peterson and Farley were arraigned before City Judge Codington the following morning. A delay was secured by counsel. In the afternoon Jennie and Wilhemina, who had to leave town that evening, were permitted to give their testimony in the case. They freely aired their opinion of Policeman Lynch's lack of chivalry, and of the brutal instincts of Plainfield's policemen generally, and landed the hackmen to the skies as "the most perfect of gentlemen," "and which they acted lovely and nice, and the policemen was horrid, they must say, so there!"

When Police Captain Grant delved back into ancient history and told Jennie and Wilhemina how in olden times the hackmen at the railroad station used to tear to shreds everyone who wouldn't give each man a fare, and how the municipal government of which he and Sergeant Lynch were representative champions had put an end to such practices, Jennie and Wilhemina chorused the opinion that "in them days the policemen must have been awful bad."

The trial of the three angelic Jehus will be continued next week. The majesty and dignity of the law admit of no undue haste.

BEATEN BY HIS CAPTOR, HE SAYS.

A Borough Citizen Charges an Officer With Outrageous Assault.

Shameful injuries inflicted on the body of Patrick Agency of North Plainfield are said to be the work of Louis Conrad, a Borough Special Marshal, whom Agency accuses of having beaten and kicked him brutally.

Agency, as told in THE PRESS, was recently arrested by Conrad for drunkenness, was taken before Justice Hardy, and sentenced to pay a fine of five dollars or go to jail for five days. At first he refused to pay the fine, but after a consultation with his counsel, Craig A. Marsh, he decided to part with the money and seek redress. In an affidavit he told a story greatly differing from that of Conrad, and on reading the affidavit Justice Crossley issued a warrant for Conrad's arrest on the charge of assault.

Agency claims that when arrested by Conrad, the officer without any provocation whatever, beat and kicked him unmercifully, and the physician who has since attended Agency will testify to the seriousness of the injuries inflicted.

Agency will proceed against Conrad on the criminal charge of assault and will sue for damages besides. He is still lame and well-nigh helpless, and cannot move without great pain. He says that Conrad was most unmerciful to him, and he considers that the case is aggravated by the fact that the alleged assault was committed under pretense of authority.

Conrad claims that he used no more violence than was necessary to subjugate Agency. Agency claims that there was no justification whatever for the beating.

Special Marshal Becker, to whom Agency's injuries have been shown, says that he was once run over by a heavy wagon but was not nearly as badly hurt as is Agency.

Conrad charges that Agency, when arrested, was one of the most abusive of prisoners, fought, kicked and lay down in the street and forced the Marshal into violent methods. It is further alleged that the beating which Agency received is no worse than the one which he inflicted on his wife just before his arrest.

DEATH OF MRS. OVERBAUGH.

Injuries Inflicted in the Recent Runaway, Terminate Fatally.

Mrs. Kate M. Overbaugh died at Muhlenberg Hospital early Friday, of injuries received in a runaway accident Sunday afternoon, July 6.

The runaway was caused by the breaking of the harness while Mrs. Overbaugh, Mrs. Amos P. Gray and two children were returning from a pleasure-drive to Washington Rock. The horse dashed down the mountain-side and threw out all the occupants of the carriage. Mrs. Overbaugh had a leg fractured, both ankles dislocated, a knee-pan laid open, her collar-bone fractured, and her spine injured. She lingered in great suffering, despite medical skill, and death seemed a welcome release.

The funeral of Mrs. Kate M. Overbaugh, who died early on Friday morning last, at Muhlenberg Hospital, from heart failure, superinduced from injuries received in a runaway accident in Washington Valley, on Sunday, July 6, took place from the residence of her son-in-law, Amos P. Gray, No. 65 West Second street, Monday morning at 10 o'clock. The Rev. Cornelius Schenck, pastor of Trinity Reformed church, this city, read from the Scripture and offered prayer, after which the remains were taken to the Scotch Plains Baptist church, where the pastor, the Rev. Mr. Parks, spoke comforting words to the large circle of mourning friends.

The remains were interred in the burial ground of the above church.

The floral display was very appropriate, consisting of a cross with the words "Our Mother," and other emblems.

Mrs. Overbaugh was the only child of Mrs. Phebe Fox who still survives her, being in her 88th year, and who, at present, resides in Washington Valley. Mrs. Overbaugh leaves eight children, four sons and four daughters, to mourn her loss.

—A horse owned and driven by Jeremiah Manning got the reins under its tail, in front of the Coward building, on Park avenue, Wednesday, and backed the wagon, which was loaded with hardware, into the sidewalk. The wagon was overturned, and the contents strewn about in the street, but Mr Manning jumped and prevented a runaway by catching his horse by the head.

A Serious Mistake.

To "clean out" the bowels by strong purgative medicines, that weaken them, is a grave mistake. Take those reliable little sugar-coated "Pleasant Purgative Pellets," prepared by Dr. R. V. Pierce. They are mild, but prompt in relieving sick headache, bilious attacks, pain in region of kidneys, torpid liver, and in restoring a healthy, natural action to the stomach and bowels. 25 cents a vial. One "Pellet" a dose.

NEGRO'S FATAL BLOW.

A Brutal Assault Results in a Terrible Disease and Death.

Relatives of Wm. Connett, who died last Saturday, believe that his death resulted from injuries received in an assault a year ago, and they will make an effort to have the guilty parties arrested and punished.

Mrs. John H. Stevens, a sister of Connett, tells the following story:

Connett was passing along East Third street, on his way home one evening, when two colored men stopped him, and one of them, whom he recognized, and whose name was Randolph, asked Connett what grudge Connett had against Randolph. Connett replied that he had none. "Yes you have," said Randolph, "else why do you carry a pistol and say you will fix me?" Connett laughed and said "I haven't any pistol." No sooner had he uttered the words than Randolph, as Connett told her, hit him on the head with a sandbag and gave him a terrific blow in the side. Connett was knocked senseless. When he recovered consciousness people were bending over him. He was bleeding from nose, mouth and ears. The negroes had stolen his watch and chain, but had been frightened away before they could secure his money. He valued the watch highly, and as soon as he was able to go out he went to Randolph, accused him openly of the assault and robbery, and demanded his watch. Randolph returned the stolen property, and Connett did not prosecute him.

The victim of the negroes' assault never became entirely well. For a time he seemed to be improving, and was able to go on the streets, but the fearful blow he had received in the side had caused internal bruises which gradually developed into cancer of the stomach, and though six of Plainfield's best physicians attended him his life could not be saved. His friends announce themselves determined to have his death avenged.

HOLY CROSS CHOIR PICNICS.

Their Annual Outing at Boynton Beach as Great a Success as Ever.

The third annual picnic of Holy Cross church choir to Boynton Beach occurred July 16 and was a repetition of the former successes. The party consisted of nearly fifty persons and the time was delightfully spent in boating, riding, bathing and athletic pastimes. The principal event of the day was a base ball game between two teams of the choir, christened respectively "Decani" and "Cantoris."

The "Decani" nine, captained by Wm. Hardy, was made up as follows: Hardy, p; Mackey, c; T. Spencer, 1b; H. Spencer, 2b; W. Spencer, 3b; Sutphen, ss; Tallamy, lf; H. Dencklau, cf; Westervelt, rf. The "Cantoris" team was captained by William Martin and consisted of Perry, p; Vail, c; Holmes, 1b; Taggart, 2b; Williams, 3b; Martin, ss; Schutt, lf; C. Dencklau, cf; Kellogg, rf.

The contest was an exceptionally interesting one and abounded in good batting and bright fielding. The "Cantoris" team started out heavily handicapped by the lead their opponents secured in the first inning, but they put up a plucky uphill game and came off victors as is shown in the score:

Decani	5	0	1	2	1	1	2	0	0	1—12
Cantoris	1	0	1	0	2	2	1	2	3	1—13

LIGHTNING LET LOOSE.

It Almost Kills a Young Woman and Tears Open a Roof Opposite.

Cassie McDavitt, a young servant girl in the employ of Dr. T. S. Davis, had just closed one of the windows of the house, Thursday night, during the worst of the storm, and had her hand on the metal catch, when a vivid flash of lightning and a deafening clap of thunder dazzled and startled everyone in the neighborhood.

Dr. Davis heard something fall and hurrying to the spot found the girl lying on the floor. She was insensible. After much effort the Doctor succeed in reviving her. No serious permanent results are feared. Today she is almost entirely recovered although her arm is still somewhat benumbed.

At the same time the above casualty occurred, the home of Mrs. A. D. Lansing directly opposite Dr. Davis' at the corner of Park avenue and Sixth street, was struck and a large hole torn in the roof.

Funeral of R. T. Lincoln.

Rufus Tyler Lincoln, only son of Dr. Rufus P., and Caroline T. Lincoln, died at Winnipeg, Manitoba, July 15. Funeral services over the remains were held at the residence of Mason W. Tyler, this city, on Saturday at four o'clock.

The deceased, whose age was about sixteen years, was a nephew of Col. Tyler. A brother of the Colonel officiated at the services. The music was by a special choir, consisting of Mrs. J. K. Myers, Miss Alice Holmes, E. E. Runyon and Arthur Freeman.

The Charter and the Altar to be Draped.

At a regular meeting of Unity Lodge, No. 102 K. of P., held at their Castle Hall on the evening of July 16, 1890, the following resolutions were unanimously adopted:

WHEREAS, It has seemed pleasing in the eyes of the Supreme Chancellor of the Universe to remove from among us our esteemed and dearly beloved Brother, Eugene V. Lorton, by calling him to that Supreme Lodge on high, therefore be it

Resolved, That while this Lodge bows in humble resignation to the will of the All-Wise Ruler, we deeply mourn the loss of our deceased Brother, and are deeply sensible of the fact, that in his death we lose one whose example it will be well for us all to emulate, and whose memory should ever be kept green in our hearts.

Resolved, That the sympathy of this Lodge be, and is, hereby extended to the family and relatives of our deceased Brother.

Resolved, That as a token of respect to the memory of our deceased Brother, the Charter and Altar of this Lodge be draped in mourning for the space of 30 days.

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be spread upon the minute book of this Lodge, and that a copy of the same be sent to the family of our deceased Brother, and published in each of the daily papers.

The evils resulting from habitual disease are many and serious; but the use of harsh, drastic purgatives is quite as dangerous. In Ayer's Pills, however, the patient has a mild but effective aperient, superior to all others, especially for family use.

Sick Headache

IS a complaint from which many suffer and few are entirely free. Its cause is indigestion and a sluggish liver, the cure for which is readily found in the use of Ayer's Pills.

"I have found that for sick headache, caused by a disordered condition of the stomach, Ayer's Pills are the most reliable remedy."—Samuel C. Bradburn, Worthington, Mass.

"After the use of Ayer's Pills for many years, in my practice and family, I am justified in saying that they are an excellent cathartic and liver medicine—sustaining all the claims made for them."—W. A. Westfall, M. D., V. P. Austin & N. W. Railway Co., Burnet, Texas.

"Ayer's Pills are the best medicine known to me for regulating the bowels, and for all diseases caused by a disordered stomach and liver. I suffered for over three years from headache, indigestion, and constipation. I had no appetite and was weak and nervous most of the time. By using three boxes of Ayer's Pills, and at the same time dieting myself, I was completely cured."—Philip Lockwood, Topeka, Kansas.

"I was troubled for years with indigestion, constipation, and headache. A few boxes of Ayer's Pills, used in small daily doses, restored me to health. They are prompt and effective."—W. H. Strout, Meadville, Pa.

Woman's Smiles and Woman's Tears.

One to enliven, the other to soften the hearts of mankind. An old bachelor once said women were either "all smiles or all tears," but this cannot be true for what would there be "'twixt a tear and a smile." Women have enough to bear to make them "all tears" and enough to hope for to make them "all smiles." When afflicted with nervousness, sick headache, and the numerous diseases peculiar to their sex there is necessity for contemplation, and for "tears," but when they consider that there is a sure remedy in Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription for all such complaints, there is reason for "smiles."

Thought the Borough Was Canada.

Joseph Kletz, a Pennsylvania wanderer claiming to be on the way to Corning, N. Y., but unable to state how he got so far out of his way as New Jersey, was taken before City Judge Codington on Friday, on the charge of drunkenness. He said he had never been intoxicated before coming to Plainfield, where he fell in with the first bad company of his life, and went astray. The Judge told him that if he found Plainfield so bad a place he'd better leave town at once. He promised to go far away, and went over to North Plainfield.

COMPETITION.

Its the life of business and the only thing that keeps it in a normal condition. We welcome it because we have confidence in the goods we offer. We only want what the word means to be properly understood. Competition is rivalry for first place between two or more parties having equal claims. Now, the truth is, that in the clothing business there is little competition with such godds as we sell. The bulk of Ready-made Clothing manufactured for sale to the jobbers and passed on from them to the retailers, don't compete with the Clothing we sell at all. There is a good deal of shouting done about it, and its merits are insisted upon most vigorously, but it don't compete The merchant tailors are the only houses with which our Ready-made Ctothing competes, in quality, style and finish; while, of course, it has a marvelous advantage when it comes to price.

We don't claim any monopoly in making such an article as we offer, but we insist that there's art in it. There's no patent in selling as good a suit as we do for the money, all we say is, it 'ot done. We'll prove it to you. Select a suit, any price you like, ine that is pressed upon your notice as down to "rock bottom," "below cost," or any other term which denotes cheapness. Select such a suit, we say, in some store noted for its advertisement of bargains, and then come and let us show you a suit at the same price, and you'll have proof before your own eyes of what we claim. We don't fear competition; we've no reason to; least of all would be competition from an inferior article.

HOW CAN THE LONG BE THE SHORT ?

The way to be a very long one and yet be the shortest between given points. For instance, the St. Paul, Minneapolis & Manitoba Railway has over 3,000 miles of road; magnificently equipped and managed. It is one of the greatest railway systems of this country; for the same reasons it is the traveler's favorite to all points in Minnesota, North and South Dakota and Montana. It is the only line to Great Falls, the future manufacturing center of the Northwest; to the fertile free lands of the Milk River Valley; and offers a choice of three routes to the Coast. Still it is the shortest line between St. Paul, Minneapolis, Fargo, Winnipeg, Crookston, Moorhead, Casselton, Grafton, Fergus Falls, Wahpeton, Devils Lake and Butte City. It is the best route to Alaska, China and Japan; and the journey to the Pacific coast, Vancouver, Tacoma, Seattle, Portland and San Francisco will be remembered as the delight of a life-time once made through the wonderful scenery of the Manitoba-Pacific Route. To fish and hunt; to view the magnificence of nature; to revive the spirit; restore the body; to realize the dream of the home-seeker, the gold-seeker, the toiler, or the capitalist, visit the country reached by the St. Paul, Minneapolis & Manitoba Railway. Write to F. I. WHITNEY, G. P. & T. A., St. Paul, Minn., for maps, books and guides. If you want a free farm in a lovely land, write for the "Great Reservation" read it and resolve to accept the golden HAND OF FORTUNE!

LOST IN LONDON.

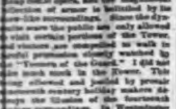
An American Visitor Who Found It Charming.

In Fact, He Says That It Is the Best Way to See the Great City—A Meeting with London Toughs.

[Special New York Letter.]

ONE OF the best methods of finding interesting places in London is to lose your way. If you keep to the well-known arteries of trade and fashion you will be entertained, it is true, but you will miss a great deal that is old, historical and fascinating. The guide-books are of very little use, they never are. They tell you to go to the Tower and Westminster Abbey, and Buckingham Palace, and Mme. Tussaud's and all the other wax-works, for as a matter of fact, in these latter days, the Tower-of-London with all its historical associations is decidedly wax-works. It is a show place, pure and simple, and the strong room with its regalia, the crown and scepter, the globe and coronation bowl, though we know that they are genuine, look gilt and tawdry. The gentlemen warders, the "Yeomen of the Guard," in their absurd clothes, seem to have come out of a cheap comic opera, and the magnificent collection of armor is belittled by its show-like surroundings. Since the dynamite scare the public are only allowed to visit certain portions of the Tower, and visitors are compelled to walk in doleful procession closely watched by the "Yeomen of the Guard." I did not care much much in the Tower. This being elbowed and jostled by prosaic nineteenth century holiday makers destroys the illusion of the fourteenth century surroundings. In Westminster one is continually pestered with guides and non-sympathetic curiosity hunters.

But get lost in London and you are almost certain to stumble over something curious and interesting. There is no real danger in getting lost, because wherever you may go the hansom cab is always with you. These most convenient vehicles meet you at every corner, and a half a dozen hail you in the course of a block. When you get tired of walking you have but to hold up your finger and whistle, and cabby is at the curb ready to whirl you to your destination in one of those "easy chairs on wheels," as an enthusiastic American called them. They thread their way in and out among the carriages and drays of the crowded, narrow streets in the lower part of the city, dash round corners and through short-cut alleys and land you at the place you want to reach in a surprisingly short time. And, contrary to the generally-accepted idea, I have always found cabby to be a good-natured, obliging fellow; rarely given to overcharging and appreciative of a very modest "tip." He is in marked contrast to the Parisian cocher, who is a surly rascal, and who takes his pour boire with the air of one conferring a favor, and is certainly a great improvement upon our American cabmen, whose method of charging seems to be to "size up" his prospective customer, guess how much money he has, and then demand all he thinks he will pay.



AN ORGAN-GRINDING NOBLEMAN.

I was just debating upon the advisability of hailing a cab one day last summer, when as I turned the corner I came upon a most curious-looking old structure. I had been wandering for about an hour through Smithfield and Clerkenwell, having visited Smithfield market, the great meat market of London, looked at the tomb of John Milton in St. Giles Church, in which church, by the way, Oliver Cromwell was married, wandered about the Charter house schoolhouse where Thackeray was educated and where Colonel Newcome died, and through Grub street, now known by the euphonious, but less reminiscent, name of Milton street. I had seen enough for one morning, and as I had not the remotest idea of how to get home my thoughts were turning cabward when I saw the queer old Gothic gate. I had just been inspecting a considerable portion of the old Roman wall of London which still stands in St. Giles church-yard, and I am enough of an archæologist to know that a Gothic gateway has nothing to do with a Roman wall, and this gateway was pure Gothic. It looked like the entrance to some feudal castle, with its round towers and narrow windows and pointed arch.

I applied to a passing "bobby" who informed me that it was St. John's Gate, and further, that if I would knock at a small side door they would let me see Dr. Johnson's chair and table which are preserved in a room over the gate. It is surprising what an old tramp Dr. Johnson must have been. There is hardly an ale house in old London where they do not show you Dr. Johnson's "favorite corner," and his chairs and tables are as plentiful as are Washington's headquarters in the State of New Jersey. These Dr. Johnson relics are genuine, however, I fancy. The old doctor was a good deal of a Bohemian in his day, and he used to write pretty much anywhere that he could find a convenient place.

I knocked at the door which was presently opened by a sleepy-looking youth with a pen behind his ear. He led the way up the narrow winding stairway in the tower and into the Gothic chapel-looking room over the gate. There were in it some old pictures, a couple of suits of armor, a dozen or more chairs and a massive oaken table. One of the chairs was Dr. Johnson's, the sleepy youth was not certain which, but, as they were all alike, it did not much matter.

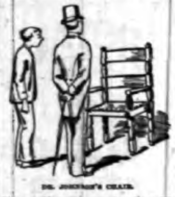
By dint of patient questioning, I learned from the sleepy youth that the gate and the Norman crypt in St. John's Church, a few steps away, are the only relics in London of the once powerful order of St. John of the Hospital, an order older than the Knights Templar, and at one time more powerful. It originated in 1048, in a hospital established at Jerusalem, for the reception of pilgrims to the Holy Sepulchre, and the hospital being dedicated to St. John the Baptist, the members of the order were known as Hospitaller Brothers of St. John the Baptist of Jerusalem. The order increased in numbers and influence; they fought in the crusades and established other hospitals all along that long road, always with the hosts of enthusiasts, which led from Europe to the Holy Sepulchre. They were, at the zenith of their power, divided into eight languages or sections—Provence, Auvergne, France, Italy, Aragon, England, Germany and Castile. Each section had several priories, and each priory a number of commanderies.

In England the priory at Clerkenwell, of which St. John's Gate is the visible remainder, was rich and powerful, and the head of the priory had a seat in the Upper House of Parliament and was known as the First Baron of England. In Southern Europe they were driven by the victorious Saracens from one point to another, having for many years their headquarters on the island of Malta, and during this occupancy losing their original title and becoming known as the Knights of Malta, under which name some remnants of the order still exist in Spain and Italy. In England they were slowly shorn of their possessions and power, but they still exist, still hold some valuable property, including St. John's Gate, and, what is most curious, they still support a hospital in Jerusalem. It gives one an idea of the age and stability of British institutions when one comes upon the tangible evidences, the business offices, of this semi-masonic, semi-charitable organization founded in 1048, nearly five hundred years before America was discovered, and still carrying on its work in 1890.

"'ANSOM, SIR!"

But organized charities are a strong feature of London life. There are societies for every thing under the sun. Societies for the purpose of distributing tracts to the soldiers and societies for reading the Bible to soldiers' wives; societies for the regeneration of cabmen; societies for the reformation of bargees. I was standing in Charing Cross station late one evening when I noticed a rather pretty but rustic-looking girl sobbing bitterly. It was very evident that she was lost and I felt sorry for her. I was hardly in the position to offer her any assistance without having my motives misinterpreted, but I determined to stand around and await developments. Presently one of the station guards spoke to her, went to the telephone, and shortly a pleasant-looking woman in the garb of a religieuse arrived in a hansom and after a few moments' conversation with the girl took her off in the cab. I learned from the guard that there is a society in London, managed by an Episcopalian sisterhood, which takes care of young girls who arrive in London in the evening and who do not know the way to their friends. They have a house where the wanderers spend the night and in the morning they are taken to their destination.

In America such a society might be a superfluity but in England they have plenty of work to do. Young girls come to the great city from the country. They miss a train or friends neglect to meet them and they do not know how or where to go to spend the night. London, which seems a mysterious labyrinth to a fairly well seasoned rounder like myself, must possess countless terrors to the young girl, fresh from the country, who sees a great city for the first time and knows nothing of it except the tales of its wickedness. To be sure if they were sensible they would so arrange as not to be left alone in London in such a plight, but then none of us are always sensible.



DR. JOHNSON'S CHAIR.

This organized charity system has been made the butt of humorists for years but it has accomplished a vast amount of good among the poor of London. The People's Palace, that noble monument to Walter Besant's "All Sorts and Conditions of Men," has done a vast work in educating and elevating the poor. I know Whitechapel and "the Mint" in London and I am tolerably familiar with the east side of our own New York city, and I have no hesitation in affirming that for genuine downright filth, squalor, wretchedness and vice New York can give London points and win the game.

I went through Whitechapel and the adjacent slums with a detective, who was detailed for this service through the courtesy of Chief Inspector Shore, of Scotland Yard, to whom I had a letter of introduction from Superintendent Murray, of New York. I visited the scenes of the famous Whitechapel murders. I dove in and out among the narrow lanes and blind alleys, and I scandalized my guide by scraping acquaintance with a lot of "house-breakers," he said. "Wyhos" we would call them in New York, and announcing my intention of "doing the town" under their guidance. He said I would be killed, but I went with them; saw more than he knew, and when I left them I promised, if they came to New York, which I hope they won't, to show them sights in the Mulberry Bend and on the east side of the Bowery which would make their hair curl. There is a vast amount of poverty and vice in Whitechapel, the latter being largely responsible for the former, but there is not the same reckless disregard for human life that we see in similar quarters in New York.

The English tough will kick his victim's face to a jelly—he is an awful brute; but he don't shoot or stab him except on rare occasions, and the English tough has a most comical and wholesome respect for an American. He fancies that every traveler from the States carries a revolver with which he can shoot the spots out of a card at thirty yards and a bowie knife with which to scalp his victim. Read George Sims' "Horrible London," or "Low Life Deeps," by James Greenwood, and you will get a fair idea of the seamy side of London life, albeit something overdrawn; then come to New York, go through the Italian quarter in Mulberry Bend, visit the Polish Jews in their attics in the great dumbbell tenements, and you will see a depth of degradation beside which the worst in London is comparative respectability. I am firmly convinced that this condition of affairs is owing not to the superior character of the British tough but to the persistent efforts of organized charity.

There was one interesting episode growing out of my rather shady Whitechapel connection which is worth the telling. I had explained to the genial house-breakers that I was an American newspaper man in search of material, and they tried their best to furnish it.

One evening I was strolling up Oxford street when I met one of the party. He did look uncommonly tough when in the confines of respectability. He approached me touching his cap.

"Hi beg pardon, sir, but hi think as 'ow there's somewhat you could write hup—hin the 'Op Vine."

"What's that?" I asked.

"Hin the 'Op Vine, the Viscount 'Inton is there," replied the tough.

"The Viscount Hinton? Who may he be?" I asked.

"'E's the nob as grinds the horgan."

I sought the Hop Vine, a large public house, and there, sure enough, was the Viscount Hinton with his piano organ. He is a bright-looking man of about five and thirty. He goes about the city accompanied by his wife and trundles a great piano organ, the front of which bears an immense sign flanked by two coach lamps. The sign reads:

I AM
VISCOUNT HINTON
ELDEST SON OF THE EARL OF POWLETT.
HAVING BEEN CAST OFF BY MY FATHER THROUGH NO FAULT OF MY OWN
I HAVE ADOPTED THIS METHOD OF EARNING AN HONEST LIVING.
SEE BURKE'S AND DE. DEBRETT'S
PEERAGES.

I made the acquaintance of the Viscount, not a very difficult matter, and got a good deal of more or less valuable information from him. The remarkable thing about him is that his statements are true, and when his father dies he will come into the title, the estates and will be entitled to a seat in the House of Lords. It seems that when the Earl of Powlett was Viscount Hinton he was a pretty hard case. He married a pretty bar-maid, on a wager, it is said, and subsequently the present Viscount Hinton was born.

The Earl, who, by that time was heartily sick of his bargain, tried to disown all responsibility for the youngster. The mother sued him, and as the child was born in wedlock the courts adjudged the child legitimate, ordered the gay and festive Earl to support and educate the youngster and bring him up as befitted his station. All went well until the low-born mother died and the noble Earl promptly mated with one of his own station. Then other additions to the British nobility began to arrive, but according to English law the oldest son inherits the title and estates. When young Hinton arrived at the age of twenty-one, the Earl tried to buy him off, but the young man would not sell out and he sued his father for an allowance. The suit was denied and they've been squabbling in the courts ever since.

The Viscount is a clever fellow and might easily make a living in some less obtrusive walk in life, but he prefers the piano or organ because it annoys the old Earl. When the old gentleman attends some particularly swell social affair the Viscount is on hand on the sidewalk with his organ and he makes it pleasant for the old man by playing popular airs and passing around the hat with the light of his coach lamps turned full upon the sign. The Earl is engaged in the amiable endeavor of tangling up the estates, which are entailed, to such an extent that Hinton won't have much good out of them, and Hinton is going to have a trustee appointed to look out for his interests. So you see that even being an Earl or a Viscount, does not insure perfect earthly happiness, a fact which a good many of our ambitious Americans are apt to forget.

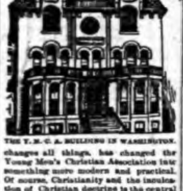
A Power for Good in Washington Society.

What This Organization Is Doing—An Interesting Feature of the Capital City—Something of Its Work in General.

[Special Correspondence.]

One of the most interesting features of the city of Washington is the Young Men's Christian Association building on New York avenue, near Fourteenth street. It is on the line of four different street-car routes, is centrally located, and easily accessible from all points in the city. Ten or twelve years ago the building was occupied by John Chamberlin, the famous restaurateur, who at that time dispensed the hospitality of his famous club, to its various members. Donn Piatt, George H. Butler, Billy Copeland and all of the famous fellows on newspaper row, as well as the attaches of foreign legations, spent their happiest moments beneath the hospitable roof. It is an entirely different looking place now. It is quiet, home-like, refined, attractive and scarce an hour passes any day when from half a dozen to half a hundred young men may not be found inside reading, talking, or making good use of the gymnasium in the rear. Instead of the songs of revelry by night, the neighborhood is treated to the songs of worship from early morn till dewy eve, from dewy eve till morn. Instead of being open to the blase habitues of bachelordom alone, it is now a pleasant, convenient place for ladies of refinement as well as gentlemen to drop into at any time; in fact, a wholesome, comfortable resting place.

The popular idea throughout the country is that the Young Men's Christian Association is an organization purely for religious work among young men, the members spending their time in fervent interchanges of religious experiences and expressions of mutual horror at the wickedness of the world in which we live. Undoubtedly that was the intention of the founders of the Young Men's Christian Association a number of years ago, but time, which changes all things, has changed the Young Men's Christian Association into something more modern and practical. Of course, Christianity and the inculcation of Christian doctrine is the central thought and motive power of the institution. But the members of the Young Men's Christian Association in the city of Washington are by no means bound down to the limits and circumscribed by the horizon of Christian endeavor. The association is devoted to physical culture, social and mental improvement, literary societies, a reading-room, a library, lectures upon health, Gospel and song services, Sunday-school meetings, where Bible lessons are given by learned men; so that altogether the Young Men's Christian Association as it is now constituted is intended to be a pleasant club house not only for Christian people and devout men and women, but for all who want to do well and be good and are trying to make themselves fit associates of the gentlemen and ladies who maintain the association. There was a time when the Young Men's Christian Association was called facetiously "the bald-headed young men's association," because of the fact that the leading spirits of the association were old gentlemen who desired to do God a service by monopolizing all that there was good in the association and aggrandizing themselves before the people as great reformers. But happily that time has passed.



THE Y. M. C. A. BUILDING IN WASHINGTON.

The house in which the Young Men's Association is located, is not exactly what the association would like, and the directors are working upon plans for the enlargement of the quarters on a scale better suited to the increased membership. The old Lincoln Hall building, down-town, which was occupied by the association prior to 1882, was a model place for them. They occupied one entire floor one hundred feet square for their prayer-meeting room, reception room, library room, and office room. Moreover on the story above there was an immense auditorium, with a stage, from the platform of which many lectures were delivered which not only benefited the hearers, but financially prospered the association. It was regarded as a very unfortunate thing at the time that they were obliged to vacate their quarters because of the contraction of their financial ability; but the association has been so prospered in the old Chamberlin property that all the grim forbodings of that time have long since passed away. The present location has proved to be a wise move, for the tree has grown and blossomed, adding new branches each year, gradually rooting itself so firmly in the affections of the public that none of the winds of adversity can ever harm it again. One feature of the association which has proved to be exceedingly popular and profitable is the gymnasium. This is a building back of the main structure which was added in 1884. It has grown to be perhaps the most popular feature of the work and has undoubtedly been the means of drawing a large number of young men into the fold.

A competent instructor is employed all the time in the work of training young men in athletics. Each member of the association is entitled to a physical examination and measurement for the purpose of discovering his deficiencies or defects, a careful record is kept of the dimensions of each man, and from time to time they are re-examined and a record kept of their improvement—for they always do improve. Every other Friday evening in the parlors of the association some popular physician or specialist gathers around him the members of the gymnasium and gives them talks upon health and hygiene, in common, unscientific language.

The literary society of the association is very well established, too, and is a first-class debating club with literary features. It has a very large membership indeed, and meets once a week for debates upon the live topics of the day. It has been decided in this room again and again that "The pen is mightier than the sword," and it has also been decided just as often that the sword is mightier than the pen. The benevolent members, the young ladies and gentlemen who are going about doing good unto mankind according to the injunctions of the Scripture, do a great deal of good in the work of visiting the various hospitals of the city and furnishing the sick people with literature. These quiet and unpretentious but very effective messengers of the association, often carry with them fruits and flowers to the sick, and every Sunday a number of them go down to the jail and hold religious services there for the benefit of the prisoners.

Out of this Christian association grew the Gospel Wagon. This is an immense concern, about twice as large as the largest express wagon that you ever saw, and every Sunday afternoon it is drawn all over this city by four draught horses, carrying the Gospel unto every creature, literally. In the wagon are seated a dozen good singers, three or four good Gospel speakers, a young lady with a parlor organ and several gentlemen with flutes, cornets and other musical instruments. They go careering through the streets from point to point in the quarters where the Gospel is seldom heard, having regular stopping places where the crowds congregate awaiting their arrival. At each place one side of the wagon is let down for a sort of platform, the leader of the singing steps forth, gives the word and several Gospel songs are sung; then there is a prayer, a short sermon, another song, an exhortation to do good, and the wagon goes careering away to its next point. There is no lack of facilities for Christian endeavor, and, better still, there is no lack of funds for carrying on the work. In this association there are some of our wealthiest citizens, merchants, officials, capitalists, real-estate dealers and Government clerks. All are liberal in their dealings with the association and the days of indigency are happily forever past. One of the handsome things about this organization is that the members never question the disposition of their contributions, save when especial assessments are made. The general fund is concededly as much for the gymnastic and literary features as for the religious work of the organization. It is, in fact, and might appropriately be named the "Christian Club." Every member, man and woman, is a clubable fellow of the higher type of modern civilization. The evening meetings, at six o'clock, are very well attended, and the singing can not be excelled by any congregation in this city for harmonious blending of voices and inspiriting earnestness; albeit, the volume is, of course, not so great as that which wells from the walls of St. Matthews'. Altogether the Young Men's Christian Association of the National Capital is in a much more advanced and prosperous condition than in many larger and older cities.

GOING TO THE POST-OFFICE

How a Brave Little Girl Mailed a Letter for Mamma.

One day mamma went to the door and looked up the road and down the road to see if there was any one she could send a letter to the post-office by; but there was nobody around except the children, baking sand-cakes in the sun.

"Dear me!" said mamma aloud. "I wish there was some one to take this letter. It ought to go. Grandma will want to know how Aunt Anne is."

A tangle of brown curls flew back from a bright little face.

"Why, I can take it for you, mamma," said Elfie, jumping up and brushing off her apron, "and I will!"

Mamma stooped and kissed the round, dimpled face, that was a wee bit dirty, too.

"Dear child!" said she. "But you're too little to go, baby, unless—can't you go with her, Mamie?"

"O-oh! I don't want to!" said Mamie, beginning to pout. "I want to play!"

"I can go all alone, mamma, dus like a mice," said Elfie.

And Mamie was more than six years old, and Elfie was not quite four, and small of her age, besides.

A sorry look came into mamma's face.

"Very well, dear," she said to Elfie, "you may go. Come and let me fix you up." and in a very few minutes the brown curls were freshly combed and the dimpled face clean as water could make it.

"Give the letter and the nickel to Mr Willis," said mamma.

"Yes'm," answered Elfie, "I will."

"And don't stop to play along the road."

"No, mamma," said Elfie, "I won't."

"Walk right in the middle of the bridge, dear!" mamma called once more.

"Yes," Elfie called back, "I will, mamma!"

Then Elfie trudged away, and mamma went upstairs to the window from which she could see the farthest. She watched the wee little figure, just a speck on the dusty road, until it had almost reached the bridge.

Then she began to worry. It was a long mile to the post-office, and Elfie was such a wee bit of a girl to go so far alone. And the bridge was high, and the water was deep under it; and if she should look over and get dizzy and fall—oh, dear! Wasn't this a foolish mamma?

Pretty soon what do you guess she did? Why, she put on her broad hat and went after Elfie as fast as she could walk.

When she got to the bridge she hardly dared look down to the water; but she saw nothing except the little flecks of foam whirling about in the eddies, when she did look. So she hurried on, up the hill and down again, thinking to overtake Elfie any minute. But she didn't. She met her, instead, pretty soon, coming home.

"O mamma!" the little girl cried, "I did give the letter to Mr. Willis, and Uncle Ed was there, and he buyed me a lots of peanuts and oranges. And I'm going to 'vide 'em with Mamie. What did you come for, mamma?"

And mamma sat right down on the grassy bank beside the road and took Elfie in her arms and held her tight, as if she never meant to let her go. And she kissed her.

"I was afraid you might fall off the bridge, dear," said she. Elfie opened her brown eyes wide.

"Why, ain't you a funny mamma?" said she, with a little wondering laugh. "I couldn't fall off when I was right in the middle."

"So you couldn't," mamma smiled, taking the wee hand to go home. "Why, there comes Mamie!"

And so it truly was. She had been crying, too, and the tears made funny little roads down her cheeks, which hadn't been washed after the sand-cakes.

"O Elfie! O Elfie!" she burst forth; "I'm sorry I wouldn't go with you! I will next time, honest sure!"

"I will, too," said Elfie, with a sunny smile.—Youth's Companion.

Endurance of the Odor of Musk.

Many marvelous accounts are related in works on pharmacy and organic chemistry, with regard to the extraordinary duration of the scent of musk, and the extremely small loss of substance which a grain or two of this substance, exposed to the air, has been found to undergo in the course of several months, or even years. But an instance of this endurance of the musk odor has come under our personal observation in the following manner. In 1850, at Brussels, three small volumes were presented to us. They were bound in red cloth, and inclosed in a green cardboard case. In this case a very minute quantity of musk mixture, from a sachet, was placed in order to scent the volumes. Since the year 1850, these three little red volumes, in their green cardboard case, have been constantly exposed to the air, on the shelves of a library, as well as to daylight. They have been in constant, almost daily use (for they are standard works of reference), and they have traveled with the writer to Ostend, to Paris, to Frankfort, to Scotland, to the South of England, to various seaside resorts, to London, and many other places, yet, at the present moment, after a period of forty years, and being exposed to so many kinds of climates, these little books retain their odor of musk, which is as powerful, especially on warm days, as it was in 1850 when the volumes were received.

ARE NOT CANNIBALS,

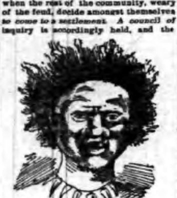
But Have Keen Delight in the Taking of Human Life—A Strange Tribe in the Interior of Africa Which Has Many Curious and Hideous Customs—Queer Way of Settling Quarrels.

Herbert Ward, in the interesting series of African articles now appearing in the New York Ledger, says:

Situated about six hundred miles in the interior from the mouth of the Congo, is a fine, fertile country, well-wooded and watered, where every kind of game to be found in this latitude of Western Africa abounds. Elephants, buffaloes, hippopotami, antelopes, wild pigs and guinea fowls, red-legged partridges and quail among the birds, are to be met with in abundance on the grassy plains or among the forested hills of this district, which is known as Bolobo, and is populated by a large and influential tribe of keen traders. These people, although not actually cannibals, are beyond doubt one of the most cruel races met with in this part of Central Africa.

They seem to take the keenest delight in the sacrifice of human life, and the execution of their slaves is considered as advertisement of their wealth. As this is a thickly-peopled country, some dark deed of barbarism is taking place almost every day, in connection with their inhuman ceremonies. Sometimes slaves are decapitated upon the death of a chief, so that their spirits may accompany that of the deceased potentate into the other world, to add prestige in the form of a spiritual retinue. At other times a slave is brutally slaughtered by an enraged master for some slight act of disobedience. In that case the offender is pounced upon, hurled to the ground and his head hacked from his body.

One of their most cruel ceremonies is that in connection with the settlement of long standing disagreements. It often happens that two sections of a tribe for some family reason entertain a bitter grudge against each other. This bitterness lasts until perhaps one or more of the influential members die, when the rest of the community, weary of the feud, decide amongst themselves to come to a settlement. A council of inquiry is accordingly held, and the most influential chiefs of the surrounding country are invited to attend, and the representatives of the two parties at variance have then the opportunity of stating their case, and receiving a verdict at the hands of the assembled chiefs, who decide which party is guilty, and inflict a fine according to the nature of the case. And when this has been satisfactorily concluded, some incident is required by both parties to remind them of the covenant. Very often, on these occasions, a slave is purchased; the bones of his arms and legs are broken; he is carried to some open, well-known road, generally a cross-road; a hole is dug, and he is placed in it, the earth being filled in and well trodden down around him, so as just to leave his head above the surface. Any person found giving him either food or water is liable to be served in the same way, and so he is left to die a lingering, painful death.



A CHIEFTAIN OF BOLOBO.

He Wasn't Allowed to Sentimentalize.

Apronstrings—After all, Henpeck, what a world of meaning in those sad, sad words: "It might have been."

Henpeck—Say, Apronstrings, did you ever go home at two o'clock in the morning and find your wife waiting for you?

Apronstrings—Yes. Why?

Henpeck—Well, for genuine sadness, "It might have been" doesn't begin to compare with "Where have you been?"—The Jury.

She Agreed with Him.

Emerson Waldo (of Boston)—I do so despise petty personal remarks. There are so many lofty and elevating subjects on which cultured minds may converse—literature, art, science and the broad field of metaphysics. Don't you agree with me, Miss Platte?

Miss Platte (of Omaha)—You bet I do, Mr. Waldo. But do look at Mrs. Laker over there; she walks as if she had corns.—Light.

Got It All In.

Lawyer—If anybody asks for me this afternoon, tell them I am called away on most urgent business.

Office Boy—Yes, sir.

Half an hour later.

Stranger—Is Mr Quill in?

Office Boy—No, sir; he's been called away to the base-ball game on most urgent business.—The Jury.

A Family Fuss.

Smythe—You look unhappy. What's the matter?

Roberts—I have had a row with my uncle.

Smythe—Did you lose the ticket?—Texas Siftings.

Why Chinamen Never Go Crazy.

First New Yorker—Have they any base-ball in China?

Second New Yorker—I guess not.

"Just what I thought. I know now why Chinamen never go crazy."—Texas Siftings.

Sick from Drinking Well Water.

Gus De Smith—How are the Fowlers coming on? I haven't seen any of them lately.

Kosciusco Murphy—They are all sick from drinking well water.—Texas Siftings.

TEA-CULTURE IN NATAL.

South Africa to Be the Great Tea-Producing Country of the Future.

Natal, South Africa, is now looked upon as the great tea-producing country of the future. None of the tea has yet appeared in this country. The first plants were brought from Ceylon in 1877. J. L. Hulett, the pioneer, now has nearly three hundred acres under cultivation, and his crop is from eighty thousand to ninety thousands pounds annually. His plant cost but $5,000. The land lies about one thousand feet above sea-level, the soil containing a fair proportion of sand and decomposed granite, vegetable and other organic matter. The tea-farm is open, level and is well plowed. The rows are laid out five feet apart, and the plants are set four or five inches apart. A crop is obtained after the first year, and increases up to the sixth year, when the plant matures, after which it bears for an indefinite period. Great care has to be taken to keep the ground loose and clear of grass and weeds. The picking begins in September and continues every ten days until June—twenty to thirty-two pickings in all. Nothing could be done with the native help, but coolies are plentiful, and are exclusively employed. They are able to pick from thirty-five to forty pounds of green leaves daily. The crop is sold in Durban at from eighteen to thirty-eight cents per pound, fully twenty-five per cent. cheaper than the foreign product can be laid down for in that market. The withering is done on large floors, the leaves being laid thin and constantly stirred by boys and girls. A hot and dry temperature is needed. The rolling is done by machinery, and has the effect of breaking up the juice cells. The fermenting process is the most particular of all, and upon it depends the quality of the product. The drying is done by hot revolving cylinders. The sorting is accomplished by the use of sieves, the top one containing the lowest grade of tea.—N. Y. Herald.

A Little Goes a Long Way.

Mrs. Jason—Just think, Jehiel, there is more money spent for rum in one day than there is for bread in a week.

Mr. Jason—Yes; a little bread—especially such as you make—will go a long way.—Terre Haute Express.

THE Russian War Department, it is reported, is considering the advisability of acquiring the sole right to a new shirt of mail, which is said to be extraordinarily light, impervious to bullets or saber thrusts, and cheap to manufacture. A Russian General is the inventor.

A KULIN brahmin ten years old is reported to have married in India recently eighteen wives. These included six aunts, four sisters and eight daughters of a fellow-brahmin, and they varied in age from fifty years to three months, the youngest bride being brought in on a brass plate.

MEISSONIER'S painting of Napoleon, known as the "1814," has just been sold in Paris for $170,000. This is believed to be the largest amount ever paid for a painting during the lifetime of the artist. It was upon this picture that Meissonier worked, according to the story, out of doors in a snow-storm, before a mirror, so as to catch the exact effect he was after.

AN amusing little episode occurred during the visit of the Duchess of Teck to Exeter Hall, where she went the other day to distribute the prizes given by the Ragged School Union. A regular programme of songs, recitations, etc., had been arranged for the entertainment, and first on the list stood the "Hurrah!" chorus, by which the Princess was to be welcomed. Most unusual thing, however, for her, she was very late, and the chairman, Lord Kinnaird, was obliged to begin before her arrival. The chorus and a song had already been sung before she appeared; the children rose to welcome the duchess with the next song on the list, which, by a queer chance, happened to be entitled: "Wake up, Mary."

THE Bengal police have published the following extraordinary warning to passengers at all the stations on the Eastern Bengal railway: "Passengers are hereby cautioned against taking any thing to eat or drink from unknown persons, as there are many who live by poisoning travelers. They first of all court acquaintance with passengers in a sarai or some other place, and then gain their confidence on the plea of being fellow-travelers going to the same place. When they reach a place convenient for the purpose they poison the water or food of the passengers, who become insensible, and then they decamp with all the property. They also at times poison the passengers' water when being drawn out of wells, or sweetmeats brought from the bazar, or food when being cooked."

CHILDREN'S CHATTER.

TEACHER—"And now, children, you have heard the story of Ananias. What lesson should we learn from his fate?" Willie—"Never to get caught."

"GRANDMA," said little Tom, "they have got awful nice tumblers at the circus." "It used to be the same way years ago, Tom—filled with red lemonade, ain't they?"

GRANDMA—"I should like to know if that slip I set out four weeks ago has rooted." Little Bessie—"No, grandma, it hasn't got a root. I've pulled it up every day and looked."

SIX-YEAR-OLD—"Grandpa, we have come to wish you many happy returns of your birthday. And mamma says if you give us each a gold dollar, we are not to lose it on our way home."

JIMMY (who has just returned from a party)—"Oh, mamma, I do wish I'd worn my overcoat!" Mamma—"Why dear?" Jimmy—"Because I could have eaten a great deal more ice-cream."

"WHY, Archie, you're not at the jam again and only punished for it an hour ago?" "Yes, mar; I heard you tell auntie you thought you had whipped me too hard, and I thought I'd even things up."

"How long did it take Noah to build the ark?" asked the teacher. "Dunno," came the answer. "Why don't you?" inquired the teacher sternly. "'Cause," replied a five-year-old youngster, "I wasn't there."

TEACHER—"Freddy, you may go to the principal's room and see if he is in, and then come and tell me." Freddy (on his return)—"He ain't there." Teacher (severely)—"He ain't there?" Freddy (correcting himself)—"He is went out."

REVEREND PRIMROSE—"You are the strangest little boy I ever saw: While other children of your age are light-hearted and thoughtless, you are always sad." Little Johnnie—"That's 'cause the other fellers ain't got a cross-eyed mother who can see when you make faces behind her back."

MRS. RAMBO—"Is your mother at home, Thomas?" Tommy Dodd—"No, ma'am; she's out." Mrs. Rambo—"How unfortunate! Tell her I shall call again to-morrow, will you?" Tommy Dodd—"Yes'm, I'll tell her; but it won't do any good. I heard her say she was always out when you called."

A KINDLY old lady was cross-examining a class of Sunday scholars some time ago. She sought to impress upon her youthful audience the importance of maintaining through life a good name, and reminded them that Solomon had declared a good name to be better than riches. "Now, boys, tell me what you would rather have when you grow up to be men. And please think before you answer." Up came several hands; but the first one called stopped any further inquiry. "Please, ma'am," shouted the little urchin, "I'd rather have whiskers."

AN OLD STORY.

But It Is Good Enough to Bear Reprinting.

Somewhere, in some book of advice to youth, many years ago, I read the following rhyme:

"Lean not on one mind constantly,
Lest, where one stood before, two fall.
Something God hath to say to thee,
Worth hearing, from the lips of all."

There never was any thing truer said, albeit the poetry is not as rythmical and gliding as it might have been. I have long since forgot the singer, but have not forgot the song. It made a deep impression upon my young mind, and from youth to bald-headedness, the truth of it has been daily demonstrated. There is not a beggar in the streets, not a pauper on the highway, nor a boot-black in the city but knows something worth communicating to his fellows. Human minds are as palpably divided in their caliber and range, as are the calibers of guns, or the species of plants. One can not stand in the doorway beside an educated man, even for a few minutes to keep out of the rain, without learning that he is a man of attainments. There is something in the attitude and intonation which indicates breeding and culture.

Yet the most learned philosopher may learn from his illiterate fellow-man. There was once an English scientist who was warned, on a sunshiny day, to hasten to the end of his journey, else he would get his jacket wet; and the warning came from a shepherd boy, ragged, poor, illiterate. The scientist looked at the clear sky and drove leisurely along, forgetting the warning. Within an hour the clouds appeared, and there came on a sunshine shower which more than made his jacket wet; it almost drowned him. Hastening to a farmer's house, he waited until the rain was over, and then drove back through the mud to find the shepherd boy and learn of him the infallible weather sign. He found him, and, in answer to his queries, the lad said:

"See ye not yan black ram o'er t'hill with 'is nose at t' sun? Wall, yan ram wer standin' with 'is tail ayant t' west when ye waint past 'ere. T'at meaned rain come sure 'i th' 'our. Yan ram, he knowed it an' t'aint for t' likes o' me t' sat 'ow hit 'appen as 'e knowed 't; fur 't be into 'im by nature."

LEGAL NOTICES.

IN CHANCERY OF NEW JERSEY.

Between Mary M. Green, Pet., and George Green, Def't. } On Petition for Divorce.

The Petitioner having filed her Petition in the above cause, and process of citation having been issued and returned according to law, and it appearing by affidavit that the defendant, George Green, resides out of the State of New Jersey, and that process could not be served upon him:

It is, on this 22d day of May one thousand eight hundred and ninety, on motion of Nelson Runyon, of counsel with the Petitioner ordered that the said absent defendant do appear and answer the Petitioner's petition, on or before the 28th day of July, next, or that, in default thereof, such decree be made against him as the Chancellor shall think equitable and just; and it is further ordered, that the notice of this order, prescribed by the rules of this Court, shall, within twenty days hereafter, be served on the said absent defendant, by actual service upon said defendant, personally, by delivery of a copy thereof to him, or, in default of such service, that said notice be published within the said twenty days in THE CONSTITUTIONALIST, a newspaper printed in the County where the parties resided at the time of the desertion complained of, in this State, and continued therein for four weeks successively, at least once in every week, and that a copy thereof be mailed, within the same time, to the said absent defendant, directed to his post office address, if the same can be ascertained.

FILLING TEETH.

No, friend, I have not lost my mother,
She was never so well in her life.
I'm not mourning the death of a brother,
Nor the sickness nor flight of a wife.
'Tis not love and the scorn of a woman
That have turned my face ashen and gray;
'Tis the prospect of torture inhuman—
I've a "date" with the dentist to-day.

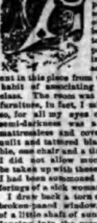
Not a comrade of mine has turned traitor,
I think they are all true as steel;
Nor has [illegible] rife incubator
Hatched aught that will injure my weal.
My liver is right, and my stomach
Is a match for all viands to bray;
Yet I feel in my bosom a dumb ache—
I've a "date" with my dentist to-day!

I have not sunk the bulk of my riches
In a foolish unfortunate spec.
My conscience shows no surgeon's stitches,
No ghosts rise at memory's beck.
There is not at the root of my sadness
Some mystery hidden away;
This only torments me to madness:
I've a "date" with my dentist to-day.

Oh, I think and I dream till I shiver
Of engines, of burrs and of drills;
My nerves are awake and they quiver,
And my soul with expectancy thrills.
In my teeth I shall soon have him feeling
With his prod in a business-like way,
Caring naught for my squirming and squeak
ing—
I've a "date" with the dentist to-day!
—George Horton, in Chicago Herald.

GOING HOME TOGETHER.

A Pathetic Sketch of Cruel Poverty, Sickness and Death.



AS I entered the room and felt my way to the bedside of the person I had been sent to minister to, I could not but feel a strange emotion of pity well up into my heart. I had often beheld, and become accustomed to scenes of poverty and suffering, but there was something different in this place from what I was in the habit of associating with the lower class. The room was almost devoid of furniture, in fact, I might say entirely so, for all my eyes could see in the semi-darkness was a little bedstead, mattressless and covered with an old quilt and tattered blanket, a small table, one chair and a tiny cupboard. But I did not allow much of my time to be taken up with these observations, for I had been summoned to relieve the sufferings of a sick woman.

I drew back a torn curtain from the broken-paned window, and, by the aid of a little shaft of sunshine that came dancing into the room, I saw a pale, pinched face resting uneasily against the cotton pillow, while a pair of deep-blue eyes met mine with a pitiful gaze. A beautiful head, covered with a mass of nut-brown curls, tossed to and fro by the pains that were racking it, and slowly, but surely, sapping the life from the frail form. I took the wasted hand in mine, and felt the fluttering pulse, the stroke of which denoted great weakness.

"How long have you been sick?" I asked.

"About a month," was the gasping reply, and a half suppressed moan followed the answer.

"You are not here alone, are you?" I continued, as a thrill of sympathetic sadness ran over me, imagining this little creature without company in this dreary place, and sick.

A faint, tender smile fluttered about her parched lips, as she replied:

"No; John stays with me as much as he can; but you know he must search for work, and can not give me all his noble heart would like to."

I thought of the stout, broad-shouldered fellow who had come to me and begged me to make this call, and felt that he must be John.

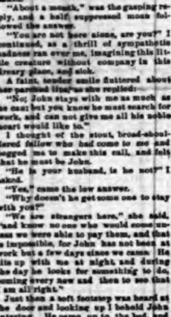
"He is your husband, is he not?" I asked.

"Yes," came the low answer.

"Why doesn't he get some one to stay with you?"

"We are strangers here," she said, "and know no one who would come unless we were able to pay them, and that is impossible, for John has not been at work but a few days since we came. He sits up with me at night, and during the day he looks for something to do, coming every now and then to see that I am all right."

Just then a soft footstep was heard at the door and looking up I beheld John entering. He came up to the bed, and stooping tenderly lifted the frail body and held it in his arms as if she were an infant. The great beaming eyes turned toward him with a love-light shining from their depths that is rarely equaled, and as his lips bent and gently caressed the little mouth a look of perfect happiness lit up the countenance of the young wife. Presently he put her back on the bed, and motioning to me walked from the room. I followed and joined him on the outside.



"HOW LONG HAVE YOU BEEN SICK?"

He turned as I reached his side, and with a face worn and thin from tireless watching and suspense, asked:

"Doctor, can she live?"

"Not in this place," I replied; "she must be removed, and that at once, to quarters where she will have careful nursing and close attention."

He buried his face in his hands and sobbed like a child, and huskily said:

"I have been trying to get her to go to her mother's, in the country, where she would get all this; but, doctor, she refused to go, unless I accompany her, and that is out of the question, for I have barely enough to send her. You see," and here he faltered, "we ran away from home and got married, which made her parents very angry. They have sent all of our letters back to us unopened, but if she would go to them, I know they would take her in."

"Would you go if you could?" I asked, as he ceased speaking and once more broke the stillness with his sobs.

"Would I?" he almost screamed, "my God, doctor, I would give this right arm of mine for enough to pay our way to the country home she deserted for me."

"Go, then," I quickly replied, "and get a carriage, and I will have her ready by the time you return; you shall go home together."

He did not pause for a moment, and was almost flying down the street before I had ceased speaking. I re-entered the sickchamber and sought the side of my patient, and to my dismay found her much weaker than I had expected. I raised her into a sitting posture, and holding her almost in my arms, said:

"We are going to send you home to your mother, where you will have bright sunshine to cheer you, and the sweet songs of birds to awaken you in the morning."

Her head leaned to one side until her eyes were fixed on mine and a peaceful smile of happiness filled her face with a supernatural glow.

"Is—is John go—ing, too?" she gasped.

"Yes," I replied, "he is going home with you."

"Lay me down, then, and—and let—me rest, for I will—need my strength."

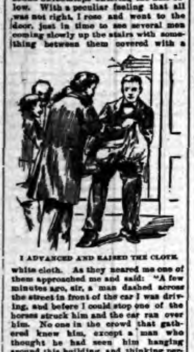
With a heart filled with sadness I gently replaced the wasted figure on the bed and sat down beside her to wait for John.

It seemed that he would never come, and impatiently I watched the fading woman, praying that her husband would make all possible speed, for it was only a matter of a short time if she was allowed to remain in her present abode. I felt that if she could be moved at once her life was saved, for the very mention of her old home, with John beside her, seemed to imbue her with renewed vigor.

As I sat alone, her head turned toward me and those great blue eyes once more opened, and with a smile of delight she murmured, so low that I was forced to kneel beside her to catch the words: "We are going home together; thank God I will not have to go alone."

Once more her long lashes closed and she slept peacefully.

Two hours passed and John did not come, and I was getting more worried every moment, when at last I heard the sound of footsteps entering the hall below. With a peculiar feeling that all was not right, I rose and went to the door, just in time to see several men coming slowly up the stairs with something between them covered with a white cloth. As they neared me one of them approached me and said: "A few minutes ago, sir, a man dashed across the street in front of the car I was driving, and before I could stop one of the horses struck him and the car ran over him. No one in the crowd that gathered knew him, except a man who thought he had seen him hanging around this building, and thinking perhaps his folks lived here, we brought his body on. Please look at him and see if you know his face." With a sickening dread I advanced and raised the cloth; there I saw what I had expected, the mutilated face of John.



I ADVANCED AND RAISED THE CLOTH.

"He was not killed instantly," continued the man, "for after I reached him, he muttered something about him and somebody going home together."

I did not reply to the driver, but, taking him by the arm, drew him into the room. As we entered the sick woman moved uneasily, and a low moan escaped her lips, followed by a gentle whisper, that sounded more like the last breath of a sweet strain of music than any thing else:

"Thank God, John, we are going home together!"

There came a short gasp from her, and realizing too well the meaning of it, I sprang to her side and lifted her up.

But I held in my arms nothing but a piece of lifeless clay; they had indeed "gone home together."—Edward N. Wood, in Atlanta Constitution.

CURIOUS BIRD STORIES.

How a Partridge Was Killed by a Railroad Train.

A Sparrow in a Thunder-Storm—Excitement Caused in a Church by a Night Hawk—Friendship Between a Rooster and a Dog.

A few days since, writes the Norwich (Conn.) correspondent of the New York Sun, a partridge that was cleaving the air in swift flight across a break in the forest along the Air Line Railway, in Windham County, performed an odd trick on an express train that was extremely unfortunate for the bird. The four p. m. express train was a trifle late coming into Pomfret village, and was running at lightning speed, when the partridge essayed to cross over the track in front of the locomotive. Both the bird and rushing engine were following the legs of an acute triangle to its apex on the railroad line, but the partridge underestimated the speed of the train, which reached the apex a second in advance. The heavy bird struck the express car, in which Sam Dikeman, expressman, was sorting over freight, and went through a window in the side door with the momentum of a solid shot. So swiftly it sped it cut a clean circular hole in the large window pane as evenly as if the instantaneous job had been done with a diamond. Splinters of glass fell in a jingling shower the whole length of the car, and as Sam straightened himself from his work in dumb amazement the bird fell dead at his feet, a mass of feathers and broken bones. Sam had broiled partridge for supper that evening, and to save himself the expense of the broken window he made oath before the railroad superintendent that the wild bird, not he, was the author of the mischief.

In the memorable thunder-storms last week, while the whole firmament seemed to be shot through unceasingly with zigzag lances of lightning, many timid little birds sought refuge from the frightful uproar wherever a shelter offered itself. On one dark afternoon the telegraph operators rattling away at the keys in the Western Union office in New Haven suddenly heard a rustling overhead, and glancing about saw a sparrow, which, having come in through the open window, was swiftly skimming about the high-ceiled room. Then came a great crash of thunder, jarring heavily under the foundations of the building, and the little bird with a frightened "peep" fluttered down on the sounder at W. J. Sheehan's desk. Mr. Sheehan picked up the sparrow and held it in his hand until the fury of the tempest had somewhat abated, then took it to the window and released it. But the bird would not go out into the storm, and after hesitating on the window ledge for an instant returned to the operator, climbing on his shoulder and nestling against his face. Finally he threw the sparrow far out of doors and hastily shut the window, but it came back and pecked at the window-panes.

On another evening a big night hawk flew into the German Lutheran Church in New Haven while Prof. J. E. Whitlecker, of Rochester, was lecturing on "The Follies and Foibles of Modern Life," and for fifteen minutes excitement reigned. A night hawk is a blundering creature in its flight, and as the wide-winged bird darted back and forth in the sanctuary in great sweeps and circles just above the audience, its spotted pinions gleaming specter-like as it hummed through the air, women screamed and darted about the pews, and finally the lecturer had to stop talking for fifteen minutes. Every one was afraid of the bird, for as it skimmed along the gallery front and shot among the heads of the people, once passing so close to the face of Prof. Whitlecker it fairly took the words of his text out of his mouth, it went with the speed of a rocket, and it seemed it must go slam [illegible] dizzy turns. Once a wise man shouted: "Catch that bird!" and the profound advice set the congregation to laughing. Finally the hawk, in a random dash, accidentally scouted through a window, and then the lecture went on again.

At Rockville a rooster and a dog have become fast friends. For a week the bird had been beset by a fierce cock, both being members of the same flock, and the two roosters fought almost constantly not far from the dog's kennel. Finally, the weaker bird, sick and friendless, having been completely knocked out in the ring, fled into the dog's kennel to escape its bloodthirsty foe, and, dropping in the straw, made eloquent signs, as if asking protection and shelter. Carlo undoubtedly had watched the combat between the birds with an intelligent and sympathetic eye, for not only did he permit the wounded rooster to tarry in his house, but when the other bird attempted to enter the kennel to glut its fury further he arose threateningly, growled, and just looked at the vindictive pursuer once, and that bird evidently made up its mind that the time for discretion had come. He went away sullenly. Since then the wounded rooster has dwelt with the dog, and the two inmates of the kennel seem to be warmly attached to each other. If any rooster challenges to mortal combat are forwarded to his friend the dog attends to them promptly; so the other barn-yard fowls have concluded that it won't do at all to monkey any more with the rooster that lives in a kennel.

MAKING PRETTY FACES.

An Art Which Young Ladies Practice Just Before Going to Bed.

Treating the Teeth, the Nails and the Complexion—The Vanity of Young Women—Miss Havemeyer's Turkey Feather Fan.

[COPYRIGHT, 1890.]
[Special Correspondence.]

A MAN will go to his room at night, and if there isn't a match handy, he won't even trouble to get a light.

He simply gets out of his duds as quickly as possible and jumps into bed without more ado.

Now let us watch a girl and consider her ways:

First of all she must have a light, and a good bright one. She may have been entertaining her young man in the parlor until—well—we will say, until bedtime, or she may have been out to a party, but that doesn't make any difference. A girl has a regular way of going to bed that she does not depart from on any account.

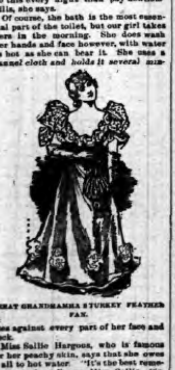
The moment she enters the room she goes straight to the dresser and looks in the glass. I have seen a girl go down on her knees, and scan every feature, turning her face this way and that as if what she saw was something quite new to her.

Then the sweet girl begins to undress. She takes off her waist, views for a moment her pretty neck and arms, then she slowly slips out of her skirts and dons a silken robe de chambre—for our girl is very swell.

The robe is loose, of pink, blue or white, with cascades of lace falling all about the neck and bosom and way down to the dainty feet. It isn't buttoned—just tied with ribbons. Next the hair-pins come out and down falls the hair. It has been washed in soda or ammonia once a month to make it fluffy and also to give it the golden brown hue so much admired. Mrs. Potter's copper-colored tresses owe much of their luster to the frequent washings in soda and champagne which her maid gives them. Our girl brushes her hair and braids it in a loose braid; but she doesn't twist it up into hideous curl papers. Curling irons have done away with all of that, and the dear girl is just as lovely after the ball with all her finery off as she was during it.

And now she takes a bit of silk and draws it carefully between her teeth. It gets out all the particles that a tooth-brush can't reach; then she takes a little orange-wood stick, dips it into a little round silver thing that holds powdered orris root, and proceeds to scour each individual tooth; after which the tooth-brush and a cup of warm water finish the operation. She would rather do this every night than pay dentists' bills, she says.

Of course, the bath is the most essential part of the toilet, but our girl takes hers in the morning. She does wash her hands and face however, with water as hot as she can bear it. She uses a flannel cloth and holds it several minutes against every part of her face and neck.



GREAT GRANDMAMMA'S TURKEY FEATHER FAN.

Miss Sallie Hargous, who is famous for her peachy skin, says that she owes it all to hot water. "It's the best remedy for sunburn," says Miss Sallie, "in the world, and no one who uses it persistently will ever have pimples or black-heads." And now the nails must be attended to; just a little clip here and there with the scissors, a rub with the polisher and a touch of cold cream to keep them brilliant.

There are a thousand and one things that some girls do after they go to their rooms at night. They take medicines and pills and powders and cough syrups; they use inhalers, atomizers, flesh brushes and dumb-bells. Our girl has no need of all these. She sticks to her ounce of prevention. There are girls, too, who think they must have something to eat or to drink before retiring.

Miss Kathryn Kidder, who appears to the public as such an ethereal, dainty creature, eats a big saucer of onions every night. She munches them while her maid combs out her hair. And Miss Dorothy Dene, the young English actress, sits up in bed until one o'clock in the morning with a novel in her hand and a big plate of cake on her lap. She reads the novel and eats the cake and the most astonishing part of it is, not that she doesn't have indigestion, but that she doesn't die; for with the cake she drinks quantities of chocolate.

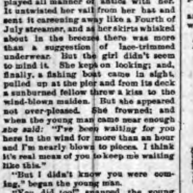
And now, out goes the light and down goes the curtain. The scene is done.

This is the summer in which the old-fashioned girl is being resurrected. In 1870 the girls went back a hundred years to borrow their styles. A remodelled dress of some dead and gone grandmamma was just the thing. But the girl of 1890 is wearing the ruff of Queen Elizabeth, the farthingale of Mary Stuart, the lace mantle of Queen Isabella and the high-heeled shoes of Louis XV. Moreover, the girl of 1890 is a law unto herself. She goes in for original things.

Miss Maud Roosevelt appeared the other day in a genuine Beau Brummel waistcoat of ancient flowered brocade. It had silk reverse, big buttons, frills and all.

Last Monday the opening hop was given at the Casino in Newport. Miss Havemeyer was there in a gown that might have been worn in the fifteenth century. The bodice was round and cut very low. A fold about the neck and the high puffed sleeves were of white silk, sprinkled with tiny pink rosebuds and green leaves. The rest of the dress was of stiff, shiny silk, of old-fashioned green, the same color as your grandmother's Sunday parasol. The bodice did not end at the waist, it extended into points that reached the bottom of the skirt, where they finished with big bunches of pink ribbons. The underskirt was perfectly straight and plain and very scant, and cleared the floor sufficiently to show a pair of pointed, high-heeled, green satin slippers, and now and then a glimpse of pink silk stockings.

The part of Miss Havemeyer's costume, however, which attracted the most attention was a genuine old turkey-wing fan. The quills were covered with a bit of faded pink satin and the handle was of tortoise shell. Evidently this fan was not a manufactured relic, but a genuine one.



BE CAREFUL! PAPA AND MAMMA MAY COME IN ANY MOMENT.

Standing on the pier at Long Branch one windy afternoon last week was a girl with a pair of field glasses, eagerly peering out to sea. She was waiting for somebody. As she waited the wind played all manner of antics with her. It untwisted her vail from her hat and sent it careening away like a Fourth of July streamer, and as her skirts whisked about in the breezes there was more than a suggestion of lace-trimmed underwear. But the girl didn't seem to mind it. She kept on looking; and, finally, a fishing boat came in sight, pulled up at the pier and from its deck a sunburned fellow threw a kiss to the wind-blown maiden. But she appeared not over-pleased. She frowned; and when the young man came near enough she said: "I've been waiting for you here in the wind for more than an hour and I'm nearly blown to pieces. I think it's real mean of you to keep me waiting like this."

"But I didn't know you were coming," began the young man.

"You did too!" snapped the young lady. "I told you the last time you were in the city that I would come down to-day."

"Well, that was two weeks ago, Dolly. You see I forgot."

This was an unwise speech. It made the young lady more angry than ever.

"Oh! you did. Well, I didn't, you see, and here I am."

"But, Dolly, dear," went on the young man, persuasively, "you really will have to excuse me to-night, for I've got an engagement with mother and the girls that I can't break."

"Well, just let me tell you, sir," said the young lady, now thoroughly angry, "that you've got an engagement with me you can't break. It was made previous to the one you are talking about, and it's got to be kept. Do you hear?"

He heard, and he trembled, for, coming down the pier toward where he stood, he suddenly discovered his mother and sister and another young lady. The sight of the other young lady was what made him tremble. There was imminent danger of a scene. For once the young man was politic.

"There they come now," he said, hurriedly. "Now, Dolly, if you go to making any row I'll never speak to you again. I must leave you now and join them. But I'll meet you in an hour on the hotel piazza."

He kept his word, and that evening they were seen sitting happily under one of the tents in Asbury Park eating ice-cream. The little squall of the afternoon was evidently entirely forgotten.

Through all the changes of fashion the tailor-made girl survives. She is more severely tailor-made this summer than she has ever been before.

The evidence of the summer flirtation season having begun is everywhere apparent; not only on the sand by the sea, or in the surf, or in shaded nooks of hotel piazzas, or along the country lanes, but in more public places, such as railway coaches, for instance. I went out to Larchmont the other day. There weren't many on the train. I found myself almost alone in a coach where sat a pretty girl. I know her very well, but it would be mean to give her name. In the back seat dozed a countryman and on the other side sat a woman whose whole attention was occupied with a fretful baby. So the young people had it all their own way. I say the young people, for just behind the pretty girl sat a young man, a jaunty-looking fellow, with a black silk smoking-cap and a curled mustache. He leaned forward until his chin rested on the pretty girl's shoulder, and I could imagine exactly what he was saying. I could hear what she said, for she was a little nervous and spoke louder than she meant to.

"For Heaven's sake, Jack," she said, "be careful. You know papa and mamma are in the next car and may come in here any moment."

"LITTLE BO PEEP."

BEAUTY OF OUR GIRLS.

They Beat the World in Symmetry and Variety of Attractions.

The beauty of American girls is a much-talked-of question. It is said they have no distinct points, but it seems to me that one who has traveled must easily have settled upon the salient points which go to make up the beauty of an American girl, says a writer in the Illustrated American. A general delicacy of outline as well as coloring are demanded. A woman with very large eyes and no other charms is never rated as a beauty here. When a woman is said to be beautiful in America it means that she has a face molded in delicate lines, features that are thoroughly harmonious, a figure which is neither pronouncedly athletic nor too plump, and small hands and feet. In England if a woman is six feet two, and broad across the shoulders, she is invariably spoken of in the society papers as beautiful, though her feet may outclass the ironclad and her knuckles stretch wildly abroad.

In Italy and Spain a pair of big, expressive eyes are enough, but in America a thoroughly-balanced series of attractions must be shown to win the title. American girls form a lofty, gay, intrepid and dashing army whose audacity should be feminine. They have all the athletic look of the English woman, without the ill-fitting gloves and ponderous boots. The assumption of semi-masculine attire robs them of their greatest charm. Womanliness is the most attractive quality of woman.

MEN'S VOWS.

Miss Hufnagel Gives Her Views on the Subject.

[TRANSLATED FROM THE GERMAN, FOR THIS PAPER, BY ALEX. E. SWEET.]

DEAR MR. EDITOR: I read in a newspaper the other day the question: "What becomes of all the pins?" and this question I propose to answer after my own fashion. I don't know what has become of them. If there is no mistake in the calculation, eighty-six millions of pins are manufactured daily in the United States alone, and I don't see that it is a matter of any great importance what has become of them. They were simply lost. That's all there is about it. Have the journalists all over the country nothing better to do than to bother themselves about lost pins? I dare say hundreds of thousands of unfortunate women are asked by their silly husbands to read that foolish paragraph and explain what has become of those pins.

I don't think that it is very gentlemanly or polite to ask such questions. In fact, it is positively malicious to do so.

These eighty-six million pins were lost by the female sex, and the insinuation is thrown out indirectly that women can not keep any thing; that they are always slovenly and careless; that they are not to be relied on at all, and that they are always putting things where they can never find them again. That is a mean thing to insinuate. Of course, every thing that is lost must be lost by us poor women, and we have no order or system about any thing. That's what all this talk about pins really means.

Now, a pin does not amount to much. Nobody thinks of picking up a pin; so it is swept out, and the consequence is that the newspaper men write long articles to the effect that the women of the country lose daily eighty-six million pins, worth twenty thousand dollars. Now, I know something which the men use very much, and it is of much more importance than pins. What becomes of all the solemn vows of love and fervent promises that men make to women?

I am sure that in this country there are more solemn promises made to women in one day than there are pins manufactured, but I will say for the sake of argument that men make use of only eighty-six million solemn promises of unswerving love and fidelity daily. Now what becomes of them all? Just as with the pins nobody knows what becomes of them all. As a certain writer said about the missing pins, no other article is in such general use and with none other is there such reckless extravagance. This applies perfectly to men's promises of love and fidelity.

MINA HUFNAGEL READS THE PAPER.

I do not suppose that these masculine vows and promises are really worth as much as the value of the lost pins, but there are a great many of us poor females who place a great deal of importance on the aforesaid vows, and take them at their face value, whereas there is a big discount on them.

So I have answered the question with another. I am going to keep my eye on the newspapers, and when I come across any thing that reflects on the female sex, I shall put some questions to the male sex which they will not be in a hurry to answer, and which may eventually cure them of wanting to know what becomes of pins and other trifles.

Yours, truly,
MINA HUFNAGEL.

To Remove Grass Stains.

Grass stain is particularly obstinate to remove. It will sometimes disappear by dipping the spot in molasses and letting it lie a few moments. Rinse the molasses out in clear water, and the stain will disappear with it. A more effectual method, however, is to dip the spot in a solution of tin chloride and immediately wash it out in abundance of clear water. Many stains which are too firmly set to yield to the treatment with boiling water will come out by dipping the spot in warm chlorine water.

DIAMOND PROTECTION.

Stanley, the African explorer, was recently married in London with great eclat. Magnificent presents were given to the bride by the aristocracy of England, but chief and far more costly than all was the gift of a rare uncut diamond, bestowed by a gentleman claiming to be an American, who had become immensely wealthy in this country as a manufacturer of steel and iron by virtue of our war tariff system.

Senator Voorhees, of Indiana, in his admirable speech, the other day, against the increase of tariff exactions as now proposed by a Republican Congress, thus portrays the Stanley incident:

"Has not this American king of steel and iron to have a diamond beyond the reach of the other kings of the world, and to be able to give it away?

Was it an inheritance, an heirloom?

Had he hunted and found it in the diamond fields of Africa?

Had he toiled from day to day, economized and saved the earnings of a lifetime to buy it?

Nothing of all that.

The farmers of the United States had paid for that diamond ten thousand times over in the last twenty years by paying an average duty of over 30 per cent. on every article of iron and steel that they used, and by paying increased rates of railroad freight made necessary by the high prices on steel and iron rails and building stock.

The farmer at last paid for all.

If the pending bill becomes a law the farmer would have an increase of duty to pay on iron and steel from 30 per cent. to 42 per cent."

Justly did the distinguished Senator exclaim:

"I believe that the present criminal system of tariff protection in this country was [illegible] to swift destruction.

It was destined soon to encounter the stern spirit of retributive justice, and to feel the [illegible] which it had inflicted on others.

I [illegible] that there is a spirit in the land which will not down at the bidding of oppressors.

Whether that spirit is of my party or of the opposite party, or of an alliance embracing honest people of both parties, it will be most welcome, and my prayer is that it may have a giant's strength in the arm which is to strike down the mail-clad robbers who are riding over and trampling under foot the laboring poor."

ORIGINAL PACKAGE LEGISLATION.

To meet the question raised by a recent decision of the Supreme Court, known as the "original package" decision, the Senate passed a bill forbidding the transportation into any State and the keeping there and offering for sale intoxicating liquors contrary to the prohibition laws of such State.

In lieu of that bill of the Senate, the House of Representatives adopted a substitute worded as follows:

"That whenever any article of commerce is imported into any State from any other State, Territory, or foreign nation, and there sold or offered for sale, the same shall then be subject to the laws of such State, provided that no discrimination shall be made by any State in favor of its citizens against those of other States or Territories in respect to the sale of any article of commerce, and in favor of its own products against those of like character produced in other States or Territories. Nor shall the transportation of commerce through any State be obstructed except in the necessary enforcement of the health laws of such State."

Which, while effectually controlling the liquor traffic, goes further and takes out any other article of commerce that may be obnoxious to local enactment, as, for instance, oleomargarine.

The House bill passed by a very large majority, sixty-six Democratic votes being recorded in the affirmative.

ON THE WAR PATH.

There is a powerful political organization formed and rapidly extending throughout the West and South known as the Farmers' Alliance.

As its name implies it is a combination of those engaged in agricultural pursuits, who, becoming disgusted with the mercenary tactics of modern politicians, have at last associated together determined to assert their own rights and, if possible, advance their legitimate interests.

The allied Farmers appear as yet to be working along different political lines. In some States they design nominating distinct candidates, and in other sections making their influence potent upon both the old parties. Either way they are likely to create a stir in politics and upset many party schemes.

Among other planks the following are in the platform of the Alliance—

A reduction of the tariff.

Free coinage of silver.

Reduction of railway charges.

Election of United States Senators by the people direct.

Prevention of alien ownership of land.

It is quite time for the Farmers of the United States to protect themselves, for no class of honest laborers have been more wronged by vicious persons laws and besieged by partisan clap-trap than they.

They Have "Ice" Cream in Somerset County.

Local Editor [illegible] of the Flemington paper says: "We take delight in helping our lady readers in all ways—except buying ice cream for them—and therefore we will tell them that a few cloves on the pantry shelf will drive off the little red ants that are often so annoying."

[illegible] City, Beware!

South Plainfield, the booming suburb of this city, and adjacent on the [illegible] of the [illegible], with pure water, fresh and invigorating air, and within 30 minutes ride of New York city, has during the past few days taken a step forward to rival its mother city in handsome houses.

A. I. Laing, one of the most enterprising citizens, has purchased a fine lot on Lehigh avenue, on which in a few days [illegible] a handsome residence, the plans of which are of the most modern architecture. The citizens of the sister city, Perth Amboy, are also seeing the need to see the need of locating on higher land. Among those from there who have purchased lots and intend building in South Plainfield at once, are Messrs. Kennedy and William Flynn.

P. J. McDonough, of the high hills of Pennsylvania, has also decided to enjoy this invigorating climate, and has purchased lots on which he will soon build two handsome houses. Charles [illegible] have [illegible] to have completed speedily a handsome cottage.

THE CASE OF CAREY VS. THE PRESS.

[illegible] That the Publication of Mrs. Fayhe's Story "She [illegible] and [illegible]" Him.

A complaint has been made against the publishers and editor of THE PRESS, for alleged libel against one T. J. Carey, a furniture dealer, on West Front street. There were no arrests made. The "arranged" hearing of such farcical proceedings went to the Justice's office and wound up an examination. The "complaint" was against the story told by Mrs. Fayhe and published in THE PRESS of last Friday. Carey swears:

"That in said article or publication deponent is charged with having purchased of one Elizabeth Fayhe a quantity of second hand furniture [illegible] while the said Fayhe was in a state of intoxication; that the [illegible]."

Attached to the complaint was a copy of the article objected to, as published in Friday's PRESS closing with this paragraph:

"[illegible]"

But it seems that Mr. Carey has taken just the course that would have been adopted by a man who could not set himself right before the people. No lawyer in Plainfield is so ignorant of the law, or so ready for a fee, that their services could be secured to draw a complaint against foundation. It was done in Elizabeth, and taken by Carey to Justice T. W. Nash who was requested to issue warrants of arrest in accordance.

The Justice told Carey that it was his (Nash's) duty to inform him before taking the papers, that the woman, Mrs. Fayhe, who told the PRESS reporter that Carey bought of her drunken husband all the furniture in her house for $20 and carted it away, had also told the same story to him (Nash) in the presence of Constable Moffett. The Justice said he had sent her to City Judge Codington.

Carey replied that he "did not care a ——." He'd "have the —— —— arrested." Justice Nash then took the complaint and during the afternoon without any arrests being made, the publisher and editor of THE PRESS appeared before the Justice and gave bonds in the sum of $500 to appear if the Grand Jury should indict.

Not only did Mrs. Fayhe tell the story told in THE PRESS to its reporter, but she told it in the presence of other witnesses. She also told it to Justice Nash and to Constable Moffett in her search for redress. They sent her to City Judge Codington and she told him. Yesterday morning she told another officer of the city—in the presence of another witness—that she would go on the stand and swear to it.

And besides all this and more, from her [illegible] Thomas Fayhe, the husband who sold the household goods, owned up to it all in THE PRESS office after the story was published. He said in the presence of the editor, a reporter and three prominent business men of this city, that he did sell his household furniture for the price stated; that he was drunk and proposed to stay drunk; that it was nobody's business what the furniture was sold for; and that [illegible] had once sold him out for $17 and he [illegible] her $12. "He said the furniture cost him over $200; and he agreed he [illegible] all that was in the article except what his wife had said she told Carey. Tom says she said, "don't take the furniture away. If you do I'll tell Mr. Grant." And he says that Carey answered, "Grant's got nothing to do with this."

[illegible] may think by the statement of all this THE PRESS is giving away its defence. We need no defence. THE PRESS never publishes anything but legitimate news and nothing from maliciousness. If the case of Carey vs. THE PRESS was intended to be taken to Court, and should by some "arrangement" get there, it would be held by judge and jury that the article published if true—and all concerned would have to confess its truth under oath—was within a newspaper's legitimate province, and probably its duty to the people to publish.

POLICEMAN LYNCH BREAKS OUT AGAIN.

He Threatens to Knock Off a Lawyer's Head, and Almost Drives Things to Pieces With His Fists.

The spectacle of a big policeman thrashing his arms through the air in the face of a big lawyer is one not often witnessed in the Courts where justice is administered, and especially in the Courts of [illegible], happy and prosperous communities. To-day, however, Plainfield, the most peaceful, happy and prosperous community of all, suffered just such a disgraceful exhibition, and the witnesses to the affair might easily have imagined themselves gazing at a most realistic Western border drama, with a genuine Western desperado thrown in.

The incidents occurred during the trial of two hackmen on a petty charge. Policeman Patrick Lynch was on the witness stand as complainant, and was under cross-examination by Assemblyman Ulrich, counsel for the defense. The lawyer badgered Mr. Lynch considerably, and the policeman made an insulting remark which Judge Ulrich felt as an attack on his family honor. He therefore upbraided Sergeant Lynch severely, till the policeman, wild with passion, roared all sorts of things at the top of his voice, thumped the table in front of him till it shook, and toppled almost over, and created a [illegible] in the Court room. Corporation Counsel Craig A. Marsh, who was present in the interests of the city, sought to quiet Mr. Lynch, and said soothingly, "I'll take care of this, Patrick."

"I'll take care of myself!" shouted the infuriated officer, and before Policeman McCue, who sprang forward, could interfere, he had thrown off his coat, given the table three or four extra thumps and [illegible], regardless of injury to his hands, and stood confronting Judge Ulrich, hissing angry thoughts through his teeth, and brandishing his fists before the [illegible] lawyer's face.

"I'll make things hot for you for this!" and "By ——, I'll knock your —— —— head off!" and orders to "shut up!" and other choice language of various other kinds emanated from the frenzied Sergeant's lips, despite the frequent commands of the Court and Corporation Counsel for him to keep quiet.

Judge Codington had all the while been vainly calling for order, but at this critical juncture he interposed decisive authority and restored proceedings to their usual course.

The real insult, however, was unquestionably, to the minds of those present, that thrown out by the policeman, and Judge Ulrich felt called on to defend himself.

How He Takes Some Fun.

One of Plainfield's earliest risers, these pleasant [illegible] mornings, is W. N. Codington, City Judge, who may be seen almost any week-day morning spinning over the city driveways and country roads outside one of the most graceful of bicycles. When he returns to his [illegible] legal and judicial duties [illegible] and afterward [illegible] with the bloom of youth.

BRASS BUTTONS INSTEAD OF BEER.

Sergeant Lynch Too Clever for Plainfield's Sabbath Breakers.

A gang of hoodlums of various ages were making merry in their own peculiar way in the open fields in Plainfield's outskirts, last week Sunday, expecting certain intoxicable liquid refreshments. One of the gang had promised to bring "the stuff" in a hack and when the vehicle arrived the crowd hailed it with happy cries. Their joy was quickly changed, however, to consternation, for as the hack door opened there appeared, not their coveted beverage, but the giant form of the valiant Police Sergeant, Patrick Lynch. Mr. Lynch, discovering the plans of the Sabbath desecrators, had decided to disguise himself as the expected "growler," and his scheme worked to perfection. Before the scamps could vanish from view he had identified the majority of them, and as a consequence five of the offenders appeared before City Judge Codington on Monday charged with violating the city ordinances by destroying the Sabbath peace and quiet. George Neal, Thos. O'Gorman, Frank Mowry and John Morecraft pleaded guilty and were fined one dollar apiece. All of them were "broke" except O'Gorman, who had two silver cartwheels and two one-dollar bills. He paid his own and Neal's and Mowry's fines with extreme cheerfulness, counting on getting paid back. He offered to pay Morecraft's, but Morecraft was on a high horse and said he didn't care whether his fine was paid or not. The Court replied with much emphasis that if Morecraft's fine remained unpaid Morecraft would go to jail for ten days. Morecraft consented to O'Gorman's offer of a loan.

Mike Heffernan, the smallest and toughest-looking prisoner in the lot, insisted that he didn't have anything to do with the case. Sergeant Lynch said Heffernan was the most guiltiest of the gang. Heffernan wriggled his nose defiantly, pleaded not guilty, had his trial set down for Saturday morning at ten o'clock, and turned away with the air of one who will worry the law for all he is worth.

LIKE PHENIX FROM ITS ASHES.

New Rooms Already Engaged for the Crescent League, and a New Club House in View.

At 8 o'clock of Tuesday night, before the walls of the burned Crescent League club house had cooled, Trustees J. T. Frittz, C. C. Hornet, C. F. Leggett, R. M. Stelle, J. K. Arnold, F. M. Slater, F. S. Green and H. W. Emerson, with President C. A. Reed, and Assemblyman John Ulrich, representing the owner of the building, met and considered the securing of temporary rooms at once and the prospects of having an entirely new club house in a few months.

A meeting of the League was subsequently held in the Y. M. C. A., rooms, at which were present besides those mentioned above, Judge Codington, Councilmen Smith and Jenkins and Messrs Davis, Miller, White, Jessup, Kline, Compton, Jackson, VanWinkle, Graham, Woolston, Mallinson, Hallock, Huntsman, Demarest, Haven, Hardy, Kinney, Rogers, Barnes, Craighead, Waldron, Goodhue, Brett, Lyman, Haynes, Doane and Tred.

President Reed reported that the League's loss by the fire was between $3,500 and $5,000, with insurance of $1,700. The financial solidity of the association, he said, was shown by the fact that they could lose $1,900 so easy and not feel it in the least but be, on hand ready to build again and anxious to begin at once. It was decided by a vote of those present to rent Laing's Hall temporarily, and billiard tables and other club conveniences will be put in at once. The next regular meeting of the League will be held there August 6. The Secretary was instructed to tender the thanks of the League to the firemen for their efforts and to the Y. M. C. A., for the use of their rooms.

After the meeting the question of a new club house was informally discussed. A large number of the members seemed in favor of purchasing a valuable property on East Front street, offered them.

A Plainfielder on Original Packages.

Editor Aaron M. Powell, of East Sixth street, this city, made a lengthy address before the Friends' Quarterly Meeting at Westbury, Long Island, Sunday. He alluded to the recent Original Package decision of the Supreme Court as "The Dred Scott decision of the liquor traffic."

Surprised by Her Young Neighbors.

A pleasant surprise party was tendered to Miss Laura Mattis at her home on South Second street Tuesday night. Forty young people of the neighborhood participated. An enjoyable programme of games, songs and dances was provided. The supply of refreshments was bounteous.

Why "Iced Cocoa" but Not Iced Cream.

The following item is going the rounds of the papers: "Iced cocoa is a new beverage for the Summer lunch table. It is made for breakfast, sweetened and frozen, frappe—that is iced, but not as solid as ice cream. Iced cocoa should be served in little cups set in saucers with a teaspoon of cold whipped cream on each."

They Must Abstain Off Duty, Too.

All the officials along the Jersey Central Railroad have been notified by the company that the employes must abstain from the use of intoxicating liquors, both when on and off duty, on pain of dismissal. There is already a standing rule against indulging in liquor while on duty, but the new order has occasioned much consternation all along the line as but few of the hundreds of employes are total abstainers.

Scary [illegible] Burglars in Plainfield.

Another attempt to enter the house at 145 Broadway, now occupied by Mrs. E. Dusendorf and family, is reported as having taken place Sunday. The inmates were awakened by what they supposed was somebody trying to get in. This is the second time that this has occurred, but it cannot be burglars. The robbery of the premises some time ago by men who came here for just that purpose, is the only case of burglary in this city in twenty years.

The Original Odd Ladies Have an Event.

An interesting affair occurred in the rooms of Mizpah Lodge, No. 1, of the United Order of Odd Ladies, when the following recently elected officers of the Lodge were installed by visiting dignitaries, Monday evening:

P. L.—Mrs. Geo. Demarest.
V. L.—Mrs. E. D. Drake.
Chaplain—Mrs. Almeda Corwin.
R. C.—Mrs. Cox.
L. R.—Mrs. Lockaby.
F. S.—Mrs. Wm. C. Smith.
Treasurer—Mrs. W. Brokaw.
A. R.—Mrs. [illegible].
J. F.—Mrs. [illegible].
Conductor—Mrs Smock.
Guard—Mrs. Reed.

The installing officers were: R. N. L. G., Mrs. Boynton of Hyde Park, Mass.; R. N. V. L. G., Mrs. Maxwell of Boston; R. N. Conductor, Mrs. Merrill of Charleston, Mass.

Following the installation exercises came a musical and literary entertainment in which Mrs. E. J. Buckley, Miss Tina Smith, Mrs. Carney and W. C. Smith took part.

A collation was served at the close of the evening.

The market is flooded with decoctions under the head of Root Beer. Why should you experiment on such goods, when the genuine Hires' Root Beer can be had? It is known to be a safe, delicious and healthful temperance drink.

BULLETS AND COBBLESTONES.

[illegible] Promised Each Other by Next Door Neighbors.

An exhibition of the way they give each other tongue lashings over the fence which separates their respective back yards at home was afforded by Mr. and Mrs. Patrick Bergen of East Third street, and Mary Morris, their next door neighbor, in the police station, before City Judge Codington, on Monday. It wasn't exactly the fault of the Bergen family that their neighborly spats were thus publicly aired, although Mrs. Morris laid everything to them. They had complained against Mrs. Morris several days before, and had had her fined for using unsavory language, and Mrs. Morris, evidently anxious to get square, now sought to have Mr. Bergen punished.

Just what Mr. Bergen had done was a long story for Mrs. Morris to tell. He had said many bad, bad things, had called her husband a Dutchman with profane uncomplimentary adjectives, had promised to see to it that the aforesaid Dutchman should repose next Autumn beneath the daisies, and had threatened to dash out the deponent's brains against the cobblestones, "if he got seven years for it."

Mrs. Morris became very vehement in giving her testimony, and after all hands had warmed up and all tongues had begun their babel of protests and denunciations, indicative of what did or did not occur at the Morris-Bergen orgies, several varieties of sensational emotional theatricals were displayed. Fingers were shaken in each other's faces, voices waxed strenuous and loud, and bodies swayed back and forth with great agility if not grace. The Court hammered away at the bench till a crash was heard among the bottles of the miniature barroom of dangerous fluids taken from bibulous prisoners, and Sergeant Lynch yelled for order, the red in his face ran all the way down his shirt front, but no peace could be had till all parties had been sent away.

Mrs. Morris couldn't be induced to contradict herself, but she had no witnesses to sustain her, while four or five appeared for the Bergens and cleared Patrick of the accusations.

The case had scarcely been dismissed by the Court when Mrs. Bergen wanted to know if she couldn't have the law on Mr. Morris for threatening to put seven bullets through Mr. Bergen. Just why Mr Morris had announced this definite mathematical restriction, or why he had chosen to give evidence of poor ability as a marksman, or of an extravagant spirit in wasting six bullets over one efficacious one, Mrs. Bergen was not given time to explain. The Court ordered the neighbors to go home and behave themselves and mind their own affairs exclusively, or be prepared to suffer heavy punishment.

A Single Tax Bill of $6,000 Collected.

Deputy Tax-Collector Nash did a good piece of work the other day, when he succeeded in collecting the unpaid taxes on the Park House from 1881 to date. It amounted with interest and costs to $6,000

Killed Herself With Milk.

Mary Goldsmith, who died last Monday July 21, aged 50 years, as announced in THE PRESS of the next day, is believed to have killed herself with milk. She drank not even quarts alone but gallons, and of the very richest quality. Mary was cook for Mrs. Gen'l Schwenck at the Holly Grove farm, the milk of which is renowned all over the country. Heart failure was the cause of death, and a post mortem showed layers of fat about the heart, six inches thick.

The Athletic Waiters of The Netherwood Will Entertain the Guests.

On Saturday afternoon of next week, between three and four o'clock, there will be athletic games held in front of the Hotel Netherwood, for the amusement of the guests by the waiters of the hotel.

The programme will include; 1st race—One mile and a quarter; 2d race—one hundred yards dash; 3d race—3 legged race—one hundred yards; 4th race—3 hundred yards—handicap; 5th—sack race; 6th—tug of war; 7th—potato race. Edward Borse is treasurer and J. Dillon, manager of the affair.

Good Speeches Before a Plainfield Club.

The address delivered Sunday evening at the Reform Club meeting were highly interesting. The first speaker was Doctor J. B. Burnett, who ably reviewed the liquor question, and expatiated on the extreme methods adopted by the liquor men to perpetuate a traffic which in his opinion was directly adverse to the welfare of the people. He predicted an overwhelming revolution for total abstinence, and the popular vindication of right over wrong, through the mighty influence of the numerous temperance organizations, the Woman's Christian Temperance Unions, through the great educational power of Christian Endeavor Societies, and through the power of the nine millions of Sunday school pupils in this country. The Doctor's remarks were listened to with much satisfaction.

He was followed by Mrs. Houseman, President of the W. C. T. U. of Key East, New Jersey, who in a very impressive manner bore testimony to the cause of temperance as God's chosen work, and urged upon all the imperative necessity of discharging duty at all times and in every place. The experiences related by Mrs. Houseman concerning the ravages of liquor among the homes of our land were in many cases exceedingly touching. President Harper presided. The closing was invoked by Geo. M. Angleman. Mr. and Mrs. King, Miss Alice Smith and Mr. Spencer composed the efficient choir.

The Dunellen School Trouble.

The New York World of recent date contained a highly colored romance about the Dunellen school. It makes it appear that a great war is raging there. The facts in the case, as told those in a position to know, are said by the New Brunswick Times to be simply these: The old time residents form an element of old timed ideas, while the later residents, who are composed principally of New York business men, favor modern improvements in educational, as well as mercantile, affairs. These two elements have met and clashed and they are encouraged to keep up the fight by their respective supporters.

Miss Lane, who is a teacher and one of the leaders in the fight, has placed herself outside the pale of the school by defying the trustees, who are the representatives of the people. She taught the primary annex, and opposed, it is said, the idea of building a new school. When a new school was erected and the trustees decided on looking elsewhere for teachers—she experienced a revulsion of feeling. On making the state of her mind known she was informed that it had been decided upon that she should remain where she was. She declined to do this and told the trustees, it is said, that she would get in the new school in spite of them.

A committee did wait on Mr. Willis and he did advise them, but he advised them to try and get along without any kicking for the rest of the year.

Supt. Otey is no longer wanted by the majority. He is qualified by education but not by executive ability, and they declare that he must go. There is no real telling how the matter may end. But the people should stand by the trustees whom they elected.

WASHINGTON ROCK.

The Monumental Association [illegible] and Its Worthy Purpose Is Not Yet Abandoned.

To the residents of Plainfield and vicinity there is no spot more beautiful and interesting than that overlooking mountain eminence known as Washington Rock. Rich in natural scenery, yet richer far is it in historical renown, because personally associated with one whom all Americans justly revere, the great Commander of the Revolution, who, when war clouds hung dark and heavy, stood on that rocky pedestal a faithful sentinel in the struggling cause of Independence, and there a monument, even though of modest proportions, should be reared in memory of the illustrious Washington and the grand results his patriotic devotion achieved.

THE PRESS learns with pleasure from a gentleman prominently connected with the Monumental Association, that the organization still exists and that its worthy purpose has not been abandoned. Right here is an opportunity to comply with a request to make public the following poem, well written by a Plainfielder, Ellie Ayres, many years ago:

WASHINGTON ROCK.

I have climbed the mountain summit,
I am standing on its brow;
On this hallowed spot and sacred,
Which my feet are pressing now,
Stood a warrior and chieftain—
One whose proudly honored name,
Is the brightest jewel gleaming,
In the coronal of fame.

Here, in years long since departed
To the mist-realms of the past,
Stood the Hero, noble-hearted,
Mailed in armor girded fast;
Watching here when danger threatened,
From this cliff-tower standing high,
He upon his country's foemen
Calmly bent his eagle eye

Here, when clouds of war and carnage
Densely shrouded freedom's morn,
Stood the patriotic Father
Of a nation newly born.
He whose faith could never falter,
He the brave, the true and good,
Consecrated this Rock-altar,
In this mountain solitude.

While around me forest minstrels
Warble forth their songs of praise,
What a gorgeous scene of splendor
Bursts upon my ravished gaze.
I behold bright fields elysian,
In a wide successive train,
And I feast insatiate vision
On the glories of the plain.

All is one vast scene of beauty,
From the hill-top to the strand;
Town and city cluster gaily,
Here and there on either hand.
At my feet and far beneath me,
Wave the kingly forest trees,
And their leaf-crowned heads are bowing
To the mandates of the breeze.

Myriad orchards, sweetly blooming,
Deck the bosom of the vale,
All the atmosphere perfuming
Pouring incense on the gale.
Flora's gifts are strewn profusely
O'er her green and gilded bowers,
Town and villa half entombing,
In a sepulchre of flowers.

Yonder graceful winding river
Gently glides along its way,
And its wavelets flash and quiver
In the noon-god's golden ray;
Far away the waves of ocean
Dashing shoreward wreathed in foam,
White winged treasures, bearing proudly
Many loved ones to their home.

Farther still, the spiral columns
Of the "Empire City" rise,
Upward rolling, smoky volumes
Limn against the Eastern skies;
While the ocean-girded islands,
By the sea-born waves caressed,
Seem to rest in tranquil silence,
Pillowed on her billowy breast.

Loving skies, which o'er me bending,
Boundless, beautiful and true,
Seem with earth and ocean blending,
In the far off misty blue.
Golden rays of sunset glitter
On the gleaming village spires,
Glowing bright as sparkling fragments,
Scattered from celestial fires.

Silver-fringed and crimson cloudlets,
Floating high on pinions bright,
Downward pour o'er all the landscape,
Mingled floods of mystic light.
Azure tints of rainbow glory
Gild the flower-girded plain,
But mine eye so faint with gazing
Sinks within itself again.

And my soul, in deep emotion,
Lifts above her spirit eye,
From the beautiful in nature,
Up to "Nature's God" on high;
And there comes a victorious whisper,
Breathing from pure depths of thought:
Oh how richly fraught with glory
Are the works Thy hand hath wrought!

Purple shades and pale vermilion
Linger where the sun hath flown,
Night flings out her star pavilion,
"Luna" mounts her spangled throne;
Yet upon this shrine I linger,
Flying time is heeded not,
For I linger yet, and linger,
On this consecrated spot.

Aye it is a "consecrated spot."

John Davidson, Esq., of Elizabeth, in his oration of February 22, 1867, delivered in the old First Baptist church, Plainfield, thus spoke of it: "At early dawn, by the gray light of the morning, our great chieftain repaired to this rock, and with telescopic vision viewed the marchings and countermarchings of the foe. Passing silently, noiselessly, and alone, through the camp, while others slept, giving the countersign to the guard in a whisper, Washington proceeds to this rock; and, ere his eyes seek the position of the enemy, on his bended knees, his heart seeks the throne of God in prayer; and who that now liveth shall tell us of the secret and silent appeals for aid, for grace, for strength, for guidance from on high, which ascended from that rock to the throne of the Infinite ?"

Excitement at Westfield.

Wm. Kelly's team of grays ran away with his big truck at Westfield, just after breakfast Monday morning. There was a number of other vehicles on the streets but no damage resulted. The section hands at the Broad street crossing turned the runaways into a vacant lot, where they were captured.

The First Testimonial Chancellor Vincent Has Ever Accepted.

A letter received from Bishop J. H. Vincent, formerly of Plainfield, tells of his visit to the State Prison at [illegible], Minn., where there is a Chautauqua Literary and Scientific Circle class among the convicts. He made them a little speech, at which they "laughed, cried and applauded." An engrossed copy of an address and a large velvet sofa-pillow made in the prison, were presented to him by the criminals. This is the first testimonial the Bishop has ever accepted for his services in connection with Chautauqua, and it furnishes a touching proof of the appreciation of his unselfish labors among the most depraved.

The incident recalls an unrelated anecdote of the Bishop and Mr. Mahaffy. "Do you know," said the professor, loftily, after oracularly declaring that hereditary vice was incurable. "When I have gone through prisons in Europe and looked on the brutal countenances and narrow foreheads of the inmates. I have been convinced that efforts to uplift them would be utterly thrown away." "That isn't the idea of Chautauqua," returned the Bishop, quietly. "We hold that no man is too humble to help or too degraded to be taught to rise to higher things."

THE NEW HOWARD CAR.

It Will Cost Over $15,000, and Begin to Roll in September.

A recent New York Herald contained an excellent article, profusely illustrated, on the subject of cars used by commuters' clubs, especial reference being made to the three cars of this character run on the Central road between Plainfield and New York.

But the club of which L. E. Howard is the President, and which inaugurated the private car idea, is to have a new car. It is now almost completed after the following plans:

It is seventy-two feet long and sixty-six feet in length in the frames exclusive of the platforms. It rides on twelve wheels and weighs between seventy and eighty thousand pounds. It has seventy-five chairs of mahogany and leather, none of which are stationary. The decorations consist chiefly of quartered oak and mirrors. Each card table has above it on the wall a locker, furnished with a lock and key.

The lavatory and heating room are as perfect as money can make them. Even the carpets share in the general luxury and are as fine and durable as it is possible to secure.

The car is connected with Joe Case, the engineer, by a special bell cord, independent of the methods of signalling used in other coaches.

When the new Howard comes out, which will be early in September, it will be the pride of the road.

The cost of the car will be between $15,000 and $18,000 and it will be in charge of Conductor Samuel Johnson, who has run the special train ever since the club was instituted.

Notes of Regret.

The Glee Club of the Crescent League, assisted by two-score of fellow members, gathered in front of the ruined club house Tuesday, and sang "Farewell, My Own," "How Can I Bear to Leave Thee," and "She's my Annie, I'm her Joe."

If This Was Only So!

(From the New Brunswick News.)

Plainfield's city park, which has been an eyesore to the public since its establishment several years ago, has been renovated and put in good condition for the first time. The Common Council will cause the park to be lighted by electricity, and public band concerts are proposed.

A Funny Thing Makes Mr. Glisser Laugh.

Nicholas Glisser of Netherwood, sauntered with his horse and wagon across North avenue, yesterday, directly in the path of a big crowded four-horse stage, and compelled the stage-driver to turn his horses up on the sidewalk in front of Force's Hotel and nearly upset the stage. Mr. Glisser smiled.

New Brunswick's Chief Praises Plainfield's Department.

Chief Acker of the New Brunswick fire department was in Plainfield Sunday, visiting Mr. Newman of Fifth and Liberty streets. Chief Doane showed him around the department here. Chief Acker expressed himself very much pleased with every thing he saw, and confessed that this city was way ahead of his. He will recommend many things for New Brunswick that he saw here.

Our Ungallant Contemporary!

The Central Times naively says:

—A young lady from Hackettstown is visiting Plainfield this week, and her morning costume consists of a semi-mannish attire which does not ill become her. A collar, bosom shirt, necktie, diamond stud and cuffs are all the style, she says, in Hackettstown. Now, all the Plainfield girls will be expected to follow suit.

We can overlook the frightful pun on "suit," but the reflection that our girls must learn their fashions from Hackettstown is too much for mortal man. The Times, to say the least, is ungallant.

We Needn't Worry About Westfield's Head.

(From the Union County Standard.)

The Plainfield Press of Saturday, July 19, accuses Westfield of having a "Swelling Head" because we want to see our base ball team pitted against the famous Plainfield Crescents.

Now, it is just like this:—Our heads are swelling and they grow larger every time we go to Drake Park and see the team of The Westfield Athletic Club play ball. Every week shows improvement, strong fielding, harder hitting, better base-running, more intelligence and head work; and we want to say right here, that when Westfield faces the Crescents, our blue and gray team will be "in it," for sure. Mr. Plainfield Press, don't you worry a bit about Westfield's head.

The Whistling Nuisance Still Continues.

Superintendent Peddle of the Central road, who will do anything and everything in his power to please his patrons, has promulgated the following order:

SPECIAL NOTICE No. 81.

To Engineers and Brakemen: The whistling nuisance is again assuming unwarrantable proportions and recent serious complaints of same have been made by residents of Cranford and North Branch, who are much annoyed during the night. Unnecessary and noisy demonstrations are prohibited. Use the whistle as little as possible particularly during the night, and make no unnecessary noise at any point of the road which will cause annoyance to people living adjacent to our lines.

Loud and boisterous conversation is unnecessary, and profanity will not be tolerated under any circumstances.

W. H. PEDDLE,
Superintendent.

LOSING MONEY IN BUSINESS.

People all say that Watson & Co. must be losing a pile of money in their great mark down sale of their entire stock made prior to July 1. Of course Watson & Co are losing money on all their broken lots of $5, $6 and $7 Pantaloons when they divide them among their customers at $3 a pair, but it sells the stock out clean and enables them to open each season with entirely new garments. Tell your friends to look at the fine English stripes, now shown in both their Broad and Market street windows in with their "broken lots" at $3 a pair and remember they can get full Suits or handsome black Cutaways and Vests at equally low prices. Buyers this week will get a chance at these bargains that many will be looking for when the finest goods and handsomest patterns are sold out.—Newark Press.

Mr. Coudert Probably Lamed for Life.

The injury to Frederic R. Coudert, who was thrown from his horse at New Market Monday, is more serious than has been represented, and will probably result in his being lame for life. The bone forming the entire upper part of the ankle joint had to be removed, and on account of Mr. Coudert's age, fifty-eight, it is doubtful whether the lost bone will be restored by new growth.

The physicians hope, however, that the ligaments will be thickened sufficiently to perform, at least partly, the function of the bone. In any case, a long time must elapse before the foot can be used. The injury is to the left leg.

Mr Coudert was fortunate in securing within a short time after the accident the services of a capable surgeon from New Brunswick, Dr Donohue. The first medical man to reach him was a country doctor who wanted to amputate the foot, but a messenger had been despatched to New Brunswick, seven miles distant, for Dr. Donohue and Mr Coudert decided to defer amputation until his arrival.

Ayer's Cathartic Pills are recommended by the best physicians, because they are free from calomel and other injurious drugs, being composed of purely vegetable ingredients. While thorough in their action, they stimulate and strengthen the bowels and secretory organs.

—The next regular meeting of Gazelle Engine Company No. 1, occurs Wednesday evening of next week, at 8 o'clock. As important business is to be transacted, a full attendance of the members is desired.

GRAPE WINES,
ALSO
UNFERMENTED GRAPE JUICE

Used in the principal churches for communion. Excellent for females, weakly persons and the aged.

Speer's Port Grape Wine,
FOUR YEARS OLD.

THIS Celebrated Wine is the pure juice of the dead ripe Oporto Grape, raised in Speer's vineyards, and left hang until they shrink and become partly raisined before gathering. Its invaluable

Tonic and Strengthening Properties are unsurpassed by any other Wine. Being produced under Mr. Speer's own personal supervision, its purity and genuineness are guaranteed by the principal Hospitals and Boards of Health who have examined it. The youngest child and the weakest invalids use it to advantage. It is particularly beneficial to the aged and debilitated and suited to the various ailments that affect the weaker sex.

It is in every respect a WINE TO BE RELIED ON.

Speer's Unfermented Grape Juice

Is the juice of the Oporto Grape, preserved in its natural fresh, sweet state as it runs from the press by fumigation and electricity, thereby destroying the exciter of fermentation. It is perfectly pure, free from spirits, and will keep in any climate.

Speer's (Socialite) Claret

Is held in high estimation for its richness as a Dry Table Wine, especially suited for dinner use.

Speer's P. J. Sherry

Is a Wine of superior character, and partakes of the rich qualities of the grape from which it is made.

Speer's P. J. Brandy

IS A PURE distillation of the grape, and stands unrivalled in this country for medical purposes.

It has a peculiar flavor, similar to that of the grapes from which it is distilled.

CITY DEPARTMENT.

OFFICIAL PAPER OF THE STATE, THE COUNTY AND THE CITY, AND HAS THE LARGEST CIRCULATION OF ANY PAPER PUBLISHED IN THE COUNTY OF UNION.

[illegible] A. DEMAREST, - - City Editor.

—The colored bell boys at The Netherwood were discharged Saturday, and five white ones substituted.

—There is reason to believe that there will be more rabbits in Northern New Jersey this Fall than ever before.

—New platforms are being laid at the North avenue station of the Central Railroad, and the station is to be repainted.

—George Thatcher's Minstrels opened at Hartford last Friday. The programme was a decided success. In spite of pouring rain, the box receipts were $1,007.

—John Kane struck John Kelly over the head with a shovel, last Friday, on Broad street, Westfield. Dr. [illegible] dressed the scalp wound that resulted. There were no arrests.

—The carts that the city recently purchased [illegible] for use on the city's streets, have arrived. They are two double and one single, painted blue with red wheels.

—While in one of the pavilions at Ocean Grove, recently, Mrs. George W. F. Gaddolph had her pocket picked. The thief stole a pocket book holding some money, an excursion ticket, etc.

—The Lamp Committee of the Borough are looking for the owner of a horse and wagon that collided with and destroyed the street lamp and post on the corner of Grove street and Park avenue.

Those Who Ride Demand Perfection.

Bicyclers and drivers who go road in the pride of the completed county road from Westfield to Fanwood, are just as loud in their complaints of the continuation of the road from the Fanwood boundary through Netherwood, which they claim is greatly in want of repair. The Plainfield Street Commissioner is gradually working his way out to the suburbs with the road improvements, and it is expected that the neighborhood of the Netherwood station will soon be reached by the repairing gangs.

[illegible]

A party of Plainfield surveyors had just halted on a country road this morning when a man with a third [illegible] of beard on his face approached, paused before them, placed his arms akimbo, threw back his head, and waited expectantly. For a moment all were speechless. A veteran chief engineer finally found his tongue and asked what was wanted. "Shave!" was the laconic response. The man from back of the mountains had mistaken the surveyor's staff, striped alternately red and white, for the sign of an itinerant barber shop.

They Have Woke Up The Wrong Rat.

Papers all over the State are saying that Orville T. Waring, of the Standard Oil Company, ex-Councilman of this city, will check up the heads of his horses, notwithstanding the orders of the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals. He has given orders to his coachmen to submit to arrest if the Society's agents persist. Mr. Waring is reported to have said: "The Society is overstepping its prerogatives in attempting to interfere with the reining up of my horses. I am anxious to have the question involved submitted to a proper tribunal, and a test case made, and I am quite sure I shall be sustained."

[illegible]

Three Plainfield saloon keepers appeared in Court before City Judge Codington on Tuesday to answer to charges preferred by Policeman Patrick J. Lynch. Peter Peterson and Patrick Callahan were tried on the charges of violating the ordinance forbidding saloons to approach, with their houses, within thirty feet of the railroad passenger station, for the purpose of soliciting custom. Peterson was discharged. Callahan was adjudged guilty and fined two dollars. James Farley, the third accused man, was made happy by having his case adjourned till next September, when Corporation Counsel Marsh will return from Europe.

But Were There Any Lights Burning Then?

William [illegible], a young man of 19 years and unfortunately [illegible], believes he is the latest victim of a live electric wire. He says his horse got the shock from the current, while he suffered from the [illegible] wire twisting around the wheel of his wagon, catching him by the side as he [illegible] his clothes [illegible].

[illegible] McIntosh drove the Holly Grove [illegible] wagon. About [illegible] o'clock Tuesday morning at the corner of North street and Broadway, his horse stepped over a fallen electric light pole, stopped short as if shot, and then jumped in the air and backwards so suddenly as to upset the wagon with the result [illegible] Mr. McIntosh as stated above. The wagon is a wreck.

A[illegible] Elliott, son of Richard Elliott, who lives at the corner of Clinton and Sherman avenues, was passing along North avenue about 1 o'clock Tuesday afternoon, he suddenly threw up his arms, swung around with his face towards the opposite side of the street, and fell backward unconscious against the bill board near the Roberts' stables.

He was picked up, carried into the station and laid on a cot. He groaned continually, and clutched at his left side with both hands. Dr. Frone arrived just as the unfortunate man recovered consciousness, and said the attack was neuralgia of the heart. Elliott told the doctor that he had had an attack about two hours before.

Let the County Pay It All.

Mayor [illegible] and Corporation Counsel Marsh of this city, and the City Attorneys of Elizabeth and Rahway, met a committee from the Board of Freeholders and the County Attorney, Thursday, at Elizabeth. To provide the necessary election machinery under the new ballot laws, it is necessary to fit up polling booths or compartments, and the estimated cost to each city will range from $2,000 to $3,000, according to size and population. The meeting was to discuss the question of who should pay for the booths.

The townships which are not required to use such booths at their town elections think that the cities—like Plainfield—which will need just such booths the month after the county election, or as in Rahway during the following Spring—should pay at least half the expense.

In consideration of the fact that the cities will have to take care of the booths from year to year, Counselor Marsh insisted that the meeting recommend that the Board of Freeholders pay the entire cost of building them. It was so adopted.

[illegible]

[illegible]

Among the most distressing as well as [illegible] of the "[illegible]," are Consumption, Asthma, Bronchitis, [illegible]. However, the timely use of Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery takes away their fearful consequences, but which [illegible]. But you should not be ashamed to ask for the "Discovery," as it has become a standard remedy, found at all the drug stores, where thousands call for it every day, and where it is recognized as the leading medicine for all lung and throat affections.

Green, Miss Ethel Green, Volney Green, Mr. Hammer, Mr. Crawford, Mr. and Mrs. James Hardy. Three members of the Paterson Banjo Club will accompany them.

Good News About Mr. Plummer.

A story is published in the New York Tribune about John F. Plummer that will be read with genuine pleasure by his multitude of friends and acquaintances, including hosts in this city. It said that Mr. Plummer was in Tacoma managing the interests there of John D. Rockefeller, and that furthermore he was on the high road to regain wealth and prosperity. One of the best features of this story is that it rests upon an excellent foundation of fact. Mr. Plummer is in the State of Washington looking after affairs in which his warm personal friends, Mr. Rockefeller and Charles L. Colby, are interested. He went there in the Spring and, save a short trip East, has been there ever since. That he is doing well may be judged from the fact that when his name was put forward recently for Merchant Appraiser he refused to consider it, saying that before long he could do better for himself and his family in business.

Mr. Plummer's great desire now is to regain his lost wealth so as to pay up every dollar he owes, and his friends are confident that he will realize this laudable ambition. He is in excellent health and spirits. In a letter from one of Mr Plummer's friends in Washington recently this was said of him: "He is looking well, more solid in flesh than ever, and with a pluck and nerve surpassing anything he ever showed before. He has come to believe in his future and is bound to succeed."

—Look out for over-ripe or decayed watermelons and muskmelons. They are deadly poison. Beware also of iced drinks when it is very hot.

—I was troubled with Catarrh for over two years. I tried various remedies, and was treated by a number of physicians, but received no benefit until I began to take Ayer's Sarsaparilla. A few bottles of this medicine cured me.—James M. Boggs, Holman Mills, N. C.

THEIR CLUB HOUSE RUINED.

The Plainfield Crescent League Burned Out of House and Home.

A bit of a lighted cigarette thrown by a pin-boy in the waste paper basket near the office desk in the Plainfield Crescent League club house, Monday night, or the end of a member's imported cigar, smouldered until it burst into flames that spread throughout the entire lower story of the building, and the bowling alleys were a mass of fire from floor to ceiling when the casualty was discovered about three o'clock this morning.

It is all a total loss. Even the brick walls left standing must come down before the owner can build again. The interior is a sight. $800 worth of new billiard tables in the second story are ruined; the piano in the parlors above is warped and toneless, and the club's furniture throughout the house is scorched and half consumed. The suits of the ball team, and the bats, however, are safe in the buildings on the grounds, and Saturday's game will be played and won as usual. President Reed's fifty-dollar rod was rescued by Asst. Martin, and some miscreants who got inside during the morning's excitement have the billiard balls safe somewhere. The League's loss above their insurance will be not less than $1,000, but in spite of that the Trustees met Tuesday evening at the office of their President, Dr J. T. Fritts, at 7:30 o'clock, and the members met by order of President Charles A. Reed at the Y. M. C. A., rooms at 8:30 same evening, to plan for a new club house to rise at once handsomer, more convenient and better furnished than the other.

The building belongs to Mrs. Elizabeth Ulrich, and is covered by $4,000 insurance. The League had $1,700 insurance which would about replace the bowling alleys and billiard tables. The furniture and the hundreds of dollars spent on the refitting of the interior, is a total loss.

Prof. Reilley, the orchestra leader, passed the club house about two o'clock that morning, on the way to his home on East Second street. He says he smelled smoke as he passed, but there were no signs of fire and it was raining heavily at the time, so he made no search. Who first discovered where the fire was is not definitely settled. The alarm bell was rung some time after three o'clock. Chief Doane and Assistant Martin were first on the scene. They found the interior a mass of fire, and flames were bursting forth from a side window towards Charles Bock's restaurant.

The Chief and his assistant entered the building first to see if it was safe for their men. They found that the stairs and flooring were still strong. Messrs John Murray and John Yose then brought the pipe in and flooded the building. It was one of the best handled fires of this or any other city. The building was a tinder box and burned like a shaving. On one side was the City Hotel and on the other Bock's building, yet not only was the fire kept from spreading but it was put out right where it was although there was lots of food for it.

No. 1 Steamer had two streams on the flames, from the Second street well, but No. 2 had hard luck. She dropped her suction in the Front street well that is supplied from the French mill race. But repairs were being made at the mills and the water had all been run out without notification to the department. Consequently a delay of twenty minutes resulted that might have caused the loss of thousands of dollars of property. Electrician McClurg of the Plainfield Electric Light company, was early at the fire and cut the wires where they entered the building so that the firemen might fear no danger. Electricity cannot be blamed for the fire, as there were no wires whatever where it started.

Janitor Demens left the building safe and fastened at about ten minutes to 12 o'clock. Two of the Club's members who had been in the billiard room, went with him. One of them left his bicycle in the building and went back for it a few minutes afterwards. None of them noticed any signs of smoke or fire then.

COL'S DAUGHTER AND DRUGGIST'S SON.

His Grandfather a Jay and Hers a Vanderbilt.

One of the most admired of the young women who occasionally favor the higher circles of Plainfield society with their presence, is Miss Louise Shepard, niece of Mr. and Mrs A. D. Shepard of East Front street. She is a granddaughter of the late Vanderbilt and "divinely tall." From her mother she inherits intellect, modesty and kind-heartedness in an unusual degree. Her many friends in this city will be interested in the following from a recent issue of her father's paper, the Mail and Express:

> The engagement is announced of Miss Louise Shepard, daughter of Col. and Mrs. Elliott F. Shepard, to Mr. William Jay Schieffelin.
> Mr. Schieffelin is the son of William H. Schieffelin, Esq., and partner in his father's great chemical and drug firm of W. H. Schieffelin & Co., whose warehouses are in William street, at the corner of Beekman street, and laboratory in Front street. Next year this house will celebrate its centennial, it having been established by the great-grandfather and great-great-uncle of the present young scion in 1791.
> His grandfather, Samuel B. Schieffelin, is still a silent partner, 80 years of age and appearing to be only 60.
> All four of his grandparents are living, as well as both of his parents. Mrs. William H. Schieffelin and her daughter, Miss Eleanor, are traveling in England with Mrs. Schieffelin's brother, Col. William Jay, and family. His grandparents, the Hon. and Mrs. John Jay, are at their country seat at Bedford, Westchester county.
> He is a graduate of Columbia College School of Mines, and is a Ph. D. of Goettingen University, and a fellow of the Chemical Society of London. He is an active member of the Seventh Regiment. Both of the young people have been the objects of many congratulations from both sides of the Atlantic.
> He is 20 and she is 20. He is 6 feet 1 inch, and she is 5 feet 11 inches, and every one says they have always been meant for each other.

IN MEMORIAL.

Grace Church Vestry Publicly Expresses Its Loss.

The undersigned, to whom as a Committee of the Vestry of Grace church, Plainfield, N J., was assigned the duty of preparing a Memorial on the death of Geo. T. VanBuren, present the following minute:

WHEREAS: It has pleased Almighty God in His wise providence to remove from the scene of his earthly labors, our friend and fellow-vestryman, Geo. D. T. VanBuren, we desire to put on record an expression of the very high esteem in which he was held. Although he had been a member of this community but a few years, he had already begun to exert an important influence. While abstaining from thrusting himself into public position, he was ready and willing, when demand was made for his services, to bear his part, and to do what he could for the advancement of the general welfare.

We had hoped for many years to profit in this Vestry by his counsel and experience, but it has seemed best to the Sovereign Disposer of all events, to cut him off in the midst of his useful days. We believe that this ordering has been as he would have desired—that he might fall with his armor on, doing gladly what his hand found to do for the benefit of his fellowmen, and for the glory of God.

It is therefore ordered that this minute be entered in the Record-book of the Vestry, and that a copy of it be sent to the afflicted family, and that it be furnished to the Press for publication.

What is Health.

To the man or woman who has never been ill, the word "health" is meaningless. But to the one who has suffered and despaired, health appears as a priceless boon. To the thousands of unfortunate women who are suffering from some of the many forms of weakness peculiar to their sex, Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription holds forth the promise of a speedy restoration of this "priceless boon."

MRS. FAYHE'S AFFIDAVIT.

She Swears That It Is All True and Accuses Carey and His "news" of Lying About Her.

This afternoon at the desire of the woman in the case, is published another chapter in the matter of the furniture dealer against THE PRESS. A story has been told about a business man whose ways of dealing in the community are matters of public property. A few days afterwards he makes his little "bluff" by "complaining" against the publishers and editor. Then everybody formed their opinion, and it was time to drop the matter for things more important. But Mrs. Fayhe wants herself set right. She says Carey, and the News, and its reporter have all lied about her.

Tuesday afternoon she sent to THE PRESS office for the editor. An answer was returned that if she wanted to see the editor she must come to him. She then sent word that things had been published in another paper about her that were entirely false, and she had been quoted as saying things which she never said. She felt ashamed, her messenger continued, to come out, and wanted to tell THE PRESS about it for publication.

A representative of THE PRESS called on Mrs. Fayhe. She said she never had denied a word of the story in last Friday's PRESS. "Mr. Carey came with Councilman Johnson after the paper was out," continued Mrs. Fayhe, "and tried to make me say different, but I wouldn't. I was so nervous, though, I could not talk before him. Councilman Johnson sat down and wanted to wait and see me alone, but Carey said, 'Come on Johnson!' and would not let him stay." Mrs. Fayhe called in a friend, who corroborated all this, but the reporter said:

"Mrs. Fayhe, we all know the story is true, and it serves no purpose to repeat it over and over as already told in THE PRESS. The paper has no personal interest in the case. It was published because it is an honest newspaper's duty to expose such business dealings in a community as may not seem right, and because it is the duty of every man to arise in defence of a woman and her little ones if she cries out that she is being imposed upon and taken advantage of without anyone to protect her. We have told your story and the people all sympathize with you. There is nothing further to be said."

Mrs. Fayhe insisted, however, that she wanted to answer the statements that had been made to the effect that the property taken was worth very little, and that she had consented to its sacrifice. At her suggestion then a Justice of the Peace went to her house, and drew up the following under her direction:

> State of New Jersey, } ss:
> Union county, }
> Mary L. Fayhe of the City of Plainfield, county and State aforesaid, of lawful age, having been duly sworn according to law, on her oath, saith: On Thursday, July 3, my husband and I had some words. He said he'd sell everything to Carey, and left the house. Soon afterwards Mr. Carey came in with him, and my husband said "here is everything," making a motion towards the furniture in the parlor, and took Carey in the bedroom and showed him the bedroom suit. When my husband went out into the kitchen, I said to Carey, "Don't you buy those things. He's drunk;" and Carey said he would not, and that "he was only taking a list of them."
> Ten minutes after, Carey's trucks drove up and his men came in and tore up the parlor carpet, and took the parlor suit, bedroom suit, lamp, table, a rug and a black walnut whatnot. Carey gave my husband $30 for all this. Afterwards I went to Carey to try and get some of the things back. He charged me ten dollars for the carpet and seven dollars for the lamp and table. He asked me $25 for the bedroom suit, and he still keeps the rug whatnot and the parlor suit which he has told me he has sold.
> I never consented to the sale of any of these goods, but went to Justice Nash and Judge Codington and asked if there was anyway to stop Mr. Carey's taking the goods away and leaving a woman and her children without any furniture under them. I never denied the story that was in THE PRESS to anybody. The parlor suit cost $135 when it was new, the bedroom suit cost $44.50, the lamp cost $12, the table $8, and the carpet, rug and whatnot I don't remember. I have given Carey $17 to get back three of the smallest things he bought; yet he only paid $30 for them all, and asked me $25 for the bedroom suit and says he has sold the parlor suit, which which was showy and gilt, to someone else.

Six Hours for Bathing.

All signs promise perfect weather for next Friday when the Sunday schools of the First Presbyterian, Park Avenue Baptist and Congregational churches will go to Asbury Park for the day.

There will be bathing from 10 o'clock A. M. to 4 P. M. The trains will leave Plainfield at 8 o'clock in the morning, and return from Asbury Park at 6 in the evening.

Thanks to the Firemen.

At a special meeting of the Plainfield Crescent League, held Tuesday evening, July 29, the Secretary was instructed to convey to Chief Doane, Assistants Waters and Martin, and the firemen of Plainfield, an expression of the members' sincere appreciation of the efforts of the firemen to save the property of the League, upon the occasion of the fire of Tuesday morning.

JAMES ALFRED DEMAREST,
Secretary.

An Unusual Catch of Perch by Plainfielders.

While fishing in the river below the dam, Thursday, at Bound Brook, Jacob O. Field and Richard Field, of Broadway, succeeded in catching, by actual count, five hundred and fifty-eight perch. Mr. Fisher at the canal lock, and other old and well known fishermen present at the time, report it to be the largest catch in years by a hook and line. Mr. Field has a reputation as a very expert fisherman. While fishing with a party of friends last week in the same river, he succeeded in catching a nice specimen of shad on a hook and line, as told of in these columns.

Warming the Children's Hearts.

The occupants of Mrs West's boarding house at 80 East Front street, Thursday generously and happily entertained the little folks of the Children's Home, on the extensive grounds about the house, bounded by Second, Church and Front streets. There was a surfeit of pleasures of all kinds for the lads and lassies, and plenty of good things to eat besides a package for each to carry away, containing candy and fancy crackers, oranges, marbles, dolls, jackstones, balls, and a nickle.

It was Mrs. Perry who presented each little one with a nickle, and the gift was particularly a happy thought. Others who provided were: Mrs. West, Mrs Chas. West, Mrs. Thiriot, Miss Hale, Master Willie West and Joseph D. Thiriot.

John have you seen that woman lately? John in astonishment! What woman? That woman picking grapes for Speer's Wine. Just see her in another column and read about it, the wines are found by chemists to be absolutely pure and equal to the best in the World. The Board of Health in large cities and leading Hospitals have adopted their use where wines are needed.

ALAS, FOR FLEETING LOVE.

A Bride of Two Months Cruelly Treated by Her Husband.

Plainfield people will be shocked to learn that the brilliant society wedding which took place among the colored people of the city two months ago, as told exclusively in THE PRESS, has resulted in a series of tragic incidents after the briefest kind of a dream of bliss.

Thursday evening, May 1, Alice White, one of Plainfield's colored belles, was wedded to John Cooley, of Montclair, at which place the couple have since resided. July 23, angered because his wife had refused to leave at his bidding a house where she was at work, Cooley went to his home, 41 New street, and began to demolish everything in the house that belonged to Alice.

He broke a large stove into pieces, shattered chairs and bedstead and a small piano belonging to Mrs. Cooley's son, broke the dishes, and smashed an alarm clock into fragments. Not satisfied with this he procured the kerosene oil can and ruined all his wife's clothing by saturating it with oil. He poured kerosene over the bedding, too. All the the time he shouted and cursed. The neighbors did not attempt to molest him until he was about to ignite the saturated goods. Then they warned him not to set fire to the house. One man went to the window with a pistol and dared the mad negro to set fire to the house, threatening to shoot if the man lit the clothes. Cooley, on seeing the pistol, left the house at a break-neck speed, and has not since been seen.

After discovering her loss, Mrs. Cooley went to Justice Milligan's court and had a warrant issued for her husband's arrest on a charge of malicious mischief and threatening to kill her. She also accuses him of bigamy.

The couple had been married only four days when Cooley informed his wife that he had been married three times and had another wife living. On July 4 he told her while eating dinner that he intended to kill her. The next day he failed to bring anything to the house for her to eat, and for five days she was left in the same condition. To save herself from starving she obtained food from the neighbors. She succeeded in obtaining a position with a family in Upper Montclair. While she was at work at this place yesterday her husband, accompanied by Officer McNamara, rang the front door bell and informed the lady of the house that he wanted his wife to come home, and had an officer to make her come. When Mrs. Cooley was informed of the presence of her husband and the officer she was very much surprised, and told them that she could not come until her day's work was over, which would be at 7 o'clock. The officer then told Cooley to come away, as she would be home in time enough for him. The angry husband then went home and began the destruction of his household goods.

Mrs. Cooley had worked for many families in Plainfield. She was a widow before marrying Cooley, and has one child. It is said that Cooley's other wife is in Boston.

Borough Real Estate Transfers.

Recent transfers of real estate in North Plainfield included the following: Joseph Bolster.l and wife to Walter B. Thorn; Henry A. Clay and wife to Matilda A. Clay; Elias R. Pope and wife to Wm. Blair; Anna Eder and others to Wm. J. Eder; Jane Boome to Jos. O. Osgood.

A Big Catch in Little Waters.

When the members of the Manhattan Athletic Club of New York want to enjoy themselves in the country they visit Plainfield's suburbs. At their last visit they gave a sporting exhibition before their friends on the grounds of D. S. Lord, West Seventh street. During the day one of the men cast hook and line into a tiny pond on the Lord grounds and dragged forth a large eel weighing more than two pounds.

Escape of the Horse Counselor Lindabury Drove.

A large gray horse belonging to Palmer Skillman, who has leased for the Summer beautiful "Edgewood," the home of B. F. M. Chase, has disappeared. The horse broke his halter last Monday night, sometime before morning, and getting out in the yard forced the gate open to the garden where he enjoyed himself rolling on a lot of vegetables. Then he filled himself with sweet corn and finding freedom a pretty good sort of a thing, broke down the fence which borders on the Watchung mountains.

Transfers of City Realty.

The following deeds recorded in the Union County Clerk's office, tell of the recent real estate transfers in Plainfield:

William Battenfield of New York, to Frank Linke of North Plainfield, land on Front street, ½ acre, $7,000.

Michael F. Marcley and wife of Plainfield, to Sarah L. Hobbie of Plainfield, land on North side of Broadway, 50x196, $1,000.

James R. Crane and wife of Philadelphia, to Jeremiah Manning, of Plainfield, land on Dunellen avenue, 99x925, $1,000.

Central New Jersey Land Improvement Company to Alice Gleason of Plainfield, land on Northwest side Shore street, 100 feet Southwest from Stebbins place, 45x120, $380.

Dunellen and New Market Welcomed to the Fold.

A meeting of the Local Union of the Young People's Society of Christian Endeavor was held Thursday in the lecture room of the Trinity Reformed church. The Rev. A. R. Dilts, President of the Union, occupied the chair, and Miss E. C. Benedict acted as Secretary. A resolution admitting the societies of the Dunellen Presbyterian and New Market Baptist churches to the Union was unanimously adopted. H. C. Skaden, M. M. Dunham and J. A. Powlison were appointed as a committee to draft and submit by-laws to govern the Union. Thursday evening, Sept. 18, was chosen as the date of the next meeting, and a committee of one from each of the societies in the Union was appointed by the President to prepare a suitable programme for the occasion.

A Suspension in the Clothing Business.

Since Watson & Co. commenced their great semi-annual closing-out sale there has been a complete suspension in the clothing trade in this city, as the public know that Watson's hand-cut garments are the handsomest and most perfect-fitting that can be made, and when they mark them down to close there is always a rush for them, as many buy to lay away for future use. This week the choicest lots will be offered, as you will see by the handsome corkscrews, solid blue, black and fancy serges and Yacht cloths, and the beautiful worsteds and cassimere pantaloons, shown in their Broad and Market street windows at $3 a pair, even if you select a silk or satin trimmed custom garment worth $6 or $7, as Watson & Co. pay no regard to cost or value when they divide their "broken lots" among their customers.

Tell your friends to notice the new line of English stripes shown in front of the $11 dress suits, in their Market street window, they go now at $3 a pair with the rest, but it will not do to delay a purchase if you expect to get fitted in these goods, as the last pair is now on sale, and there is not half enough to go round among the customers of Watson & Co. who will want them.—Newark Press.

THE TIJUSCE WAS RIGHT

And the Philanthropic Editor Was Mistaken in His Charity.

In last Friday's issue, under the head of "Misplaced Sympathy," THE PRESS reprinted from the Somerville Gazette an account of how Judge Bartine, who knew little of the case, at the instigation of the Gazette's editor, who knew less, released a lot of wilfully bad boys who had been sent to the county jail by Justice Hardy. The latter has written the following letter to the mistaken philanthropist:

To the Editor of The Unionist Gazette:

SIR: I find in your issue of July 17 two articles, one of which is an editorial, concerning the holding to bail of the three boys from North Plainfield on a charge of burglary. I feel sure that you do not fully understand the case, and, therefore, take the liberty of giving you the facts.

The youngest boy, Spillaine, ran away from home some weeks since, and apparently his father made no effort to bring him back. The evidence before me was that only a few days before the robbery of Mrs. Hall's store this boy and the Prentice boy raided a banana cart in the absence of the proprietor and stole some $5 worth of fruit. They were caught. In consideration of their youth they were released on their agreement to stop stealing and to pay for the fruit. Instead of doing this they at once decide to rob Mrs. Hall's store, and for a week or so await a favorable opportunity. The time comes and with the care and precaution of veterans at the business they proceed. One boy was left on guard to warn the others if a policeman hove in sight, or if anything suspicious occurred, while the other two committed the robbery. They succeeded, as they thought, without detection, but word reached the officers and they were arrested.

This was the second offence, and that within a week of the first, and before any amends had been made for the first. This seemed to show conclusively that these boys were determined to be criminals, and that because they were let off once they would be again. I may be right, or I may be wrong, but it seems to me that the community must be protected from such thieves, for who can say what next is on the programme—arson or even murder. Is it better to prevent this or to encourage it? Shall we pat these boys on the head and say "Well done; go on with the good work?" or shall we say, "We gave you a chance the first time and now the severe discipline of the reform school shall try its effect upon you?" Shall we protect the community or shall we wait until hanging becomes necessary?

No one feels any more sympathy for the wrong-doer than this same Justice whom you criticise, but, when a person is brought repeatedly before him for drunkenness, it is not always "$10 and costs," because that does not remedy the evil.

Again, while these same boys were in jail, an officer returns and reports that while in the jail he did not hear cries and sobs, but instead oaths and vile language. Shall we pat these boys on the head and say, "Right, my son, go on your recognizance, swear if you will, steal if you will, rob if you will, but, in Heaven's name, don't let anyone send you to Somerville jail."

Is this the proper course, and is any other course inhuman, outrageous and barbarous. Their parents in the courts here say, "Send them to the Reform School. We can't handle them." Do you know better than they?

JUSTICE JAMES HARDY.

Plainfield, N. J., July 21, 1890.

GREADER GETS A BREATHING SPELL.

He Finds His First Loop-Hole in a Defective Complaint.

A crowd of people eager to hear the evidence in the case of the Borough of North Plainfield against Charles Greader, who was charged with the illegal selling of liquor, gathered in the Borough Council chamber on Friday, and sweltered two hours away only to witness the dismissal of the complaint.

Craig A. Marsh, Greader's counsel, had issued a venire for a jury, and Borough Counsel Charles A. Reed, who had just returned from Barnegat, protested that under the Borough laws and ordinances, which he cited, only the Borough Mayor or Justice of the Peace, without jury, had a right to try such a case. Consequently considerable time was spent in argument, and further delay was occasioned by counsel having to send for papers which had been forgotten. All this time good business men whose temporary misfortune was to be residents of the Borough and summoned to serve as jurors, had to fidget about in their chair wishing they were back in their offices. Mr. Marsh said that as long as the jurors were present they might as well be used, but Mr. Reed claimed and Justice Hardy held that the use of jurors in the case would be improper and would invalidate the verdict. Mr. Marsh said that if the case were to be one of technicalities he'd present some too, and gave a list of objections. The Court overruled several points, but had to admit the claim that the complaint was defective; and on Mr. Marsh's motion the complaint was dismissed.

A new complaint may be issued.

Rheumatism,

BEING due to the presence of uric acid in the blood, is most effectually cured by the use of Ayer's Sarsaparilla. Be sure you get Ayer's and no other, and take it till the poisonous acid is thoroughly expelled from the system. We challenge attention to this testimony:—

"About two years ago, after suffering for nearly two years from rheumatic gout, being able to walk only with great discomfort, and having tried various remedies, including mineral waters, without relief, I saw by an advertisement in a Chicago paper that a man had been relieved of this distressing complaint, after long suffering, by taking Ayer's Sarsaparilla. I then decided to make a trial of this medicine, and took it regularly for eight months, and am pleased to state that it has effected a complete cure. I have since had no return of the disease."—Mrs. R. Irving Dodge, 110 West 125th st., New York.

"One year ago I was taken ill with inflammatory rheumatism, being confined to my house six months. I came out of the sickness very much debilitated, with no appetite, and my system disordered in every way. I commenced using Ayer's Sarsaparilla and began to improve at once, gaining in strength and soon recovering my usual health. I cannot say too much in praise of this well-known medicine."—Mrs. L. A. Stark, Nashua, N. H.

COMPETITION.

Itsthe life of business and the only thing that keeps it in a normal condition. We welcome it because we have confidence in the goods we offer. We only want what the word means to be properly understood. Competition is rivalry for first place between two or more parties having equal claims. Now, the truth is, that in the clothing business there is little competition with such goods as we sell. The bulk of Peady-made Clothing, manufactured for sale to the jobbers and passed on from them to the retailers, don't compete with the Clothing we sell at all. There is a good deal of shouting done about it, and its merits are insisted upon most vigorously, but it don't compete. The merchant tailors are the only houses with which our Ready-made Clothing competes, in quality, style and finish; while, of course, it has a marvelous advantage when it comes to price.

We don't claim any monopoly in making such an article as we offer, but we insist that there's art in it. There's no patent in selling as good a suit as we do for the money, all we say is, it 'ot done. We'll prove it to you. Select a suit, any price you like, ine that is pressed upon your notice as down to "rock bottom," "below cost," or any other term which denotes cheapness. Select such a suit, we say, in some store noted for its advertisement of bargains, and then come and let us show you a suit at the same price, and you'll have proof before your own eyes of what we claim. We don't fear competition; we've no reason to; least of all would be competition from an inferior article.

HOW CAN THE LONG BE THE SHORT ?

A line may be a very long one and yet be the shortest between given points. For instance, the St. Paul, Minneapolis & Manitoba Railway has over 3,000 miles of road; magnificently equipped and managed, it is one of the greatest railway systems of this country; for the same reasons it is the traveler's favorite to all points in Minnesota, North and South Dakota and Montana. It is the only line to Great Falls, the future manufacturing center of the Northwest; to the fertile free lands of the Milk River Valley; and offers a choice of three routes to the Coast. Still it is the shortest line between St. Paul, Minneapolis, Fargo, Winnipeg, Crookston, Moorhead, Casselton, Glyndon, Grafton, Fergus Falls, Wahpeton, Devils Lake and Butte City. It is the best route to Alaska, China and Japan; and the journey to the Pacific coast, Vancouver, Tacoma, Seattle, Portland and San Francisco will be remembered as the delight of a life-time once made through the wonderful scenery of the Manitoba-Pacific Route. To fish and hunt; to view the magnificence of nature; to revive the spirit; restore the body; to realize the dream of the home-seeker, the gold-seeker, the toiler, or the capitalist, visit the country reached by the St. Paul, Minneapolis & Manitoba Railway. A DEADLY HAT-RACK.

How It Caused Trouble in Jackson's Boarding House.

ONE day last week while sitting in my room thinking, [illegible] I was startled by an unusual noise in the boarding-house next to mine, which is occupied by a [illegible] named Jackson, who uses it as a boarding-house. By holding my ear to the wall (which I confess was not the proper thing to do under any circumstances, but the disturbance was so violent that I was warranted in so doing), I could hear dull thuds interspersed with such remarks as "Take that! Ugh! Leggo my hair! Take yer finger out of my eye!" etc. Directly a servant rushed out and returned with a policeman, who took off two men, who looked as though they had been through a storm.

As I know Jackson intimately, and as I have a large amount of curiosity added to my composition, I went over to see him and find out all about the [illegible]. The servant at the door who took my card up to him informed me that Mr. Jackson was in bed, and it was doubtful whether he would see me. I was finally told to come up, and hanging my hat and coat on a hat-rack in the hall, followed the servant upstairs, where I found Jackson propped up in bed, his head bandaged up, his arm in a sling, and both eyes in deep mourning.

AS I STOOD IN TO SEPARATE THEM.

"How did it happen?" I asked, in astonishment.

"Oh, what tough luck," he moaned. "You know what a large number of boarders I had. Well, they're all gone. Look at that right eye, please, and tell me whether you think I will ever be able to use that as an organ of sight again?"

"It looks pretty bad, but I guess it'll come around all right in time. What caused the fuss?"

"A measly little hat-rack."

"A hat-rack?"

"Yes. About a month ago my wife [illegible] will you!—about a month ago my wife bought a hat-rack and put it in the hall. O, why did she do it! why did she do it!" he groaned piteously.

I was about to remark that she probably did it to make the hall look more attractive, but a low, small voice within me whispered not to—that he was miserable enough already.

"At first it was a good, serviceable hat-rack, but after a week or two it [illegible] acquired a downward slant. If a person walked through the hall floor the hats would slide off, and if he tried to [illegible] them back three or four times they would glide rapidly in the direction of the floor. The rack seemed human, [illegible] malicious. The pegs seemed bewitched."

"[illegible] didn't black your eyes, and [illegible] you up, did it?" I asked [illegible].

"[illegible], have a little patience, will you? [illegible] take another look at that right eye and see if you think it has improved. Well, when the boarders came in to dinner they would put their hats and coats on that hat-rack. The racket you heard was caused by that infernal—Jackson [illegible] that wet towel? How long does it take to heal a broken arm?"

JACKSON WAS IN BED.

"I don't know. Go on with the story."

"[illegible] two of the boarders—Guggenheimer and Flynn—went to get their coats and hats. Now, there is bad blood between those chumps, all on account of both of them being sweet on my daughter Hattie."

"[illegible] I will hear the story," I murmured.

"Well, when Guggenheimer reached [illegible] for his hat, that fiendish hat-rack [illegible] fall off on to the floor. He replaced [illegible] all the coats that were hanging there.

"Pick that hat up, dem quick," said Flynn, pointing to his hat on the floor.

"Who'll picks it up?" said Guggenheimer. "Pick yourself," [illegible] Guggenheimer was about to walk away, when Flynn hit him [illegible] in the jaw. In less time than it takes to tell it, [illegible] blows were delivered, and, as I rushed in to separate them, every blow landed on me."

"Good gracious!"

"As the hall was dark, and it was [illegible] to have them separate [illegible] each other, and, as I had tripped over the fallen overcoats, they were making short work of me, when the servant appeared with a policeman."

"[illegible]"

"[illegible] shift that splint a little, and [illegible] on the end of the bed. My [illegible] Flynn stepped on it when I was down. As soon as I get my [illegible] out of a sling, I am going to [illegible] that measly, dad-gasted hat-rack [illegible] splinters, and, if I ever get any more boarders, I am going to have a [illegible] with the boarder's name there. I am thinking seriously of having a [illegible] hat-rack back, which will be [illegible] 'Going?'"

"Yes."

"[illegible] you go, just hand me the bottle [illegible] Thanks."

When I reached the hall I found my hat [illegible] on the floor, where they had [illegible] deposited by that infernal hat-rack.—Lewis M. [illegible], in Texas Siftings.

Friend [illegible] American-English [illegible]—And so you are going to be married, I hear. Do tell me who is the happy man. I hope he is one of "us."

[illegible] I dined at Prince's last night, and [illegible] for what he had provided.

[illegible] What of that?

[illegible] Why, when I was going [illegible] in the evening I heard the [illegible] bullying his wife because she [illegible] for two dollars to buy [illegible]—Drake's Magazine.

TEMPERANCE NOTES

TEMPERANCE REFORM.

A Plan Which If Properly Carried Out Would Accomplish Wonders.

If there were no dram drinkers there would be no saloons; therefore dram drinkers are responsible for all the evil done by saloons—and more. Every man and woman who uses intoxicating liquor of any kind as a beverage, no matter where, or in what amount, is a dram drinker, and shares this responsibility. Every purchase is a direct contribution to the treasury of the liquor power; every known indulgence strengthens the sentiment that sustains and spreads the habit; and its potency for evil is greatest where the example is set by those who move in the higher circles of society and are able to exercise self control. The drink habit is a fountain of woes for which saloons are reservoirs and conduits. Destroying reservoirs may deflect or diminish without stopping the stream; but dry up the fountain and reservoirs and distributing pipes become useless, and dams and dikes unnecessary.

A mere return to moral suasion methods will not suffice. The greater part of the time and money heretofore devoted to Temperance work has been wasted. To illustrate: I once heard a good man, as he dropped exhaustedly into a chair, inform a committee that he had been "laboring hard all day for the cause," and inquiry developed the fact that his time had been spent "laboring" with eighteen Temperance men, two incorrigible drunkards and one drinker. Tens of thousands of public meetings have been held with none but Temperance people in attendance, and, consequently, no visible results. It will not do to merely offer pledges at meetings which drinking men and women carefully avoid. In some way it must be ascertained who these drinkers are and, when they decline to come to us, we must go to them. Furthermore, and equally important, we should be careful not to repel them by demanding greater sacrifices than are needed.

It is not possible to ascertain who are for or against a reform by guessing. Millions of men and women, supposed by their Temperance friends to be total abstainers, are in fact tipplers. The best, if not the only way to properly prepare for the needed work, is to divide cities, towns and counties into small districts, and have lists made for each containing the names of every resident over ten years old (just as the politician does with the voters of each precinct). Then, proclaiming that the purpose is to make each district as nearly as possible "solid for total abstinence," circulate pledges and check every signer. Many names can be procured at public meetings, but the greater number will probably have to be obtained by personal solicitation. Separate lists should also be obtained of the members of all churches, lodges, and other societies, labor unions and employes in large establishments, and especial efforts put forth to make each body "solid for total abstinence." While some workers would take selected names for personal visitation, others should go systematically from house to house and shop to shop. Of course, the names of those who are already in favor of Temperance, and those who can be most easily influenced would soon be secured, and, as the movement progressed, many who refused at first would decide to "help make it unanimous," for, when public sentiment in favor of great humanitarian movements becomes aroused, and organized, its power to persuade, constrain and awe is tremendous. As the good work went on, and the results became manifest, the really human souls that would not be melted by the fervent heat of embodied humanity would be rare indeed.

At all times, the "Phalanx" idea—shoulder to shoulder, in hollow squares about the Nation's homes, with every weapon leveled at the defiling and destroying foe—should be kept in mind, and the "Phalanx" should be composed of "Temperance Volunteers." To succeed, this holy work must commence in and draw its chief support from the church; which, to that end, must first purge itself. Few ministers have even a faint conception of the number of tipplers now on their rolls, and, as the world can not be lifted onto a higher plane than the church prepares, the saloon will continue to flourish until the wine cellars under the church of God are closed, and the odor of alcohol is banished from its sanctuary.

It is admitted that the suggested plan would require a great deal of work; but are the desired results to be secured with less? And are they not well worth what they would cost? Do we really desire the redemption of the Nation? If so, our plans must be as broad as the evil that we seek to suppress, and, after all, each set of workers will only have to cultivate their own small field. The most difficult part of the whole business is to make the start.—Albert Griffin.

THE MIRTH OF MADNESS.

Sensible Persons Who Sacrifice Sobriety and Reason to Frivolity.

There is a time to laugh, but that time is not all the time, as some people seem to suppose. The appetite for mirth sometimes becomes too strong, and all sense, sobriety and seriousness are sacrificed to frivolity. We have no special liking for long faces or sour looks, but empty gabble, vain frivolity and stale and foolish jokes are very poor substitutes for sober thought and an earnest life. Men have come to jest at every thing, public or private, sacred or profane, divine or devilish.

But life is not a joke, and there is a mirth which savors of madness. He who said: "There is a time to laugh," saw the time when he said that "laughter is mad." There is an intoxication of mirth which forbids all serious thought and prevents all serious action, and there are times when something is needed besides mockery and revelry.

It is stated that when ill-fated Johnstown was inundated by heavy rains, and the people had been driven to the second floor, large numbers of men left their houses, plundered the saloons of liquor, and by three o'clock there were nearly [illegible] thousand men drunk and yelling about the streets sodden and helpless, [illegible] they were unable to save themselves or to care for their families, [illegible] at last the dam burst, and "the flood came and took them all away." [illegible] men who were sober and vigilant had at least a chance for their lives; but the men who were drunk went at [illegible] perish, and their families had [illegible] to protect and assist them.

We shall find, in the course of our [illegible], hours when all our energies and all our strength will be required to resist temptation, stem the tide of passion, save ourselves from an untoward generation, and escape the dangers that surround; and if our lives have been full of frivolity and vanity and emptiness, the jokes and jibes, the mirth and folly of a life-time, will be poor preparation for the hour of death, and poor preparation for the day of judgment. Be sober, be vigilant; behold your adversary, the devil, as a roaring lion goeth about seeking whom he may devour."—H. L. Hastings.

BRAIN DERANGEMENTS.

The Nervous Effect of Alcohol on the Reasoning Faculties.

Alcohol seems to have a special affinity for the brain. This organ absorbs more than any other, and its delicate structure is correspondingly affected. The "vascular enlargement" reaches its height. The tiny vessels become clogged with blood that is [illegible] surcharged with carbonic acid, and deprived of the [illegible] quantity of the life-giving oxygen. [illegible] The brain is, in the [illegible] of the physiologist, [illegible]. The mind but slowly rallies from the stupor of the [illegible], and a sense of dullness and depression remains to show with what [illegible] the fatigued organ recovers its [illegible] condition. So marked is the [illegible] of the narcotic poison, that some [illegible] hold that "a man [illegible] intoxicated [illegible] never fully becomes what it was before."

[illegible] the free use of liquor hardens [illegible] the membranes enveloping [illegible] undergo a "fatty degeneration," the blood-vessels lose their elasticity, and the vital fluid, flowing less freely through the obstructed channels, fails to afford the old-time nourishment. The consequent deterioration of the nervous substance—the organ of thought—shows itself in the weakened mind that we so often notice in a person accustomed to drink, and at last lays the foundation of various nervous disorders—epilepsy, paralysis and insanity. The law of heredity here again asserts itself, and the inebriate's children often inherit the disease which he has escaped.

Chief among the consequences of this perverted and imperfect nutrition of the brain is that intermediate state between intoxication and insanity, well known as delirium tremens. "It is characterized by a low, restless activity of the cerebrum, manifesting itself in muttering delirium, with occasional paroxysms of greater violence. The victim almost always apprehends some direful calamity; he imagines his bed to be covered with loathsome reptiles; he sees the walls of his apartment crowded with foul specters; and he imagines his friends and attendants to be fiends come to drag him down to a [illegible] abyss beneath."—Carpenter.

ITEMIZED FACTS.

ONE word—"drink"—explains the downfall of a once wealthy Pittsburgher who was admitted to the alms-house last week.

THE Lord Mayor of London recently entertained thirty-seven total abstinence mayors from as many different cities in England.

LET us take care how we speak of those who have fallen on life's field. Help them up—don't heap scorn upon them. We did not see the conflict; we do not know the scars.—The Reformer.

IF a family begins to sell liquor it slaughters them like sheep and the family runs out of existence generally in about two generations. If the family buy liquor they become intemperate, dishonest, idle and diseased in some members of the household.

INDIAN AGENT SHULER, of the White Earth agency, says: "Fourteen Indians under my charge have been traveling with the Wild West show and have come back worthless vagabonds, whose principal desire is to live in idleness and gain a living by trafficking in whisky."

A GROCER at Reigate, it is said, had a spirit license. He has just invited his two sons to enter into partnership with him, but both, being staunch abstainers, refused, until their father consented to give up the license. After holding out for some time he has met their wishes.—Temperance Chronicle.

A GIRL of only twelve was committed as "a confirmed drunkard" to an industrial school in San Francisco a few days ago. Her mother stated that the girl would steal, beg or do almost any thing to get liquor, and that she had been drinking for nearly a year. All attempts either to reform her or prevent her getting liquor had been failures, it was stated.

Beer Is Not Nutritious.

Senator Blair says in The Temperance Movement: "There are used in making one gallon of beer 32.2 ounces of barley of which 20 ounces are lost in 'malting,' in 'mashing,' 'fermenting' and 'fining,' leaving 12.2 ounces of nutritious (?) substance. Consumed by the glass at 5 cents each this would cost 80 cents, or about two-thirds of a day's labor; at 80 cents per bushel for barley the same amount of nutriment in the form of bread, allowing about 50 per cent. for waste and making, would cost 2 cents. In other words, if a man drinks daily 4 quarts of lager beer, he will in about 12 months succeed in taking into his stomach in that form the nutriment contained in a five-pound loaf of bread."

JOYFUL MOSE'S END.

A Fitting Tribute to One of Windy City's Prominent Men.

The Windy City Zephyr thus chronicles the death of a well-known citizen of that place.

"The news has just reached us that Joyful Mose is dead. He passed quietly away about fifteen minutes ago, surrounded by a posse of influential citizens and a small grove of Black-Jack trees.

"Although Joyful Mose was an old settler and well known among us, he was not one whose presence would advance the interest of the town. He represented a class of citizens who are fast losing caste among people who desire to make this earth their home for any considerable time.

"He was too irritable and impulsive in his dealings with every one, and his extemporaneous use of the revolver has left but few of his old associates to mourn his untimely decease.

"We regret to say that he never worked in harmony with the Immigration Society. In a recent report of that society it is shown that while it increased the population of our city six souls, Joyful Mose had sent seven to explore the Great Beyond. This was a clear loss of one.

"Then the Immigration Society got tired. The president said that he was not in favor of wearing out his life just to furnish amusement for Joyful Mose, and if the situation of affairs didn't change, the society would retire from the field.

"This brought matters to a crisis, and the man with the hilarious cognomen is no more—he is dead.

"The man who cut him down told me that the deceased had got the drop on seventeen men in his life, but when he got the drop on a tree this morning he seemed to be a little surprised, but soon wilted.

"His death reduces the number of our population below that of Blue Forks, thus giving a snide one-horse town a chance to boast of its superior numbers over us, but we trust that our temporary loss will result in the greatest good. This is the end we should all work for.

"We are glad that this little affair has been settled at last.

"In the past the Zephyr has taken no sides in this matter, but now we say fearlessly that we fully endorse the action of the Immigration Society in ridding the community of a man whose sole ambition was to run the chromatic scale of mortality with both hands."—Drake's Magazine.

STRANGE SUPERSTITION.

History of a Man's Effort to Borrow Twenty-Five Dollars.

As Every Man Who Had Refused to Loan the Money Had Also Met with Sudden Death, Parson Woodrigg Concluded to Let Him Have It.

[COPYRIGHT, 1890.]

Rev. John W. Woodrigg, pastor of a large church, and one of the gentlest of men, was walking meditatively in his garden, when a man came up to the fence, and said:

"I am a stranger to you, Mr. Woodrigg, but you are no stranger to me. Many and many a time when the wick on the candle of hope had grown long and the blaze threatened to go out, your sermons have buoyed me up."

"You move me deeply by saying so," the reverend gentleman answered, casting a look of close inquiry upon the man, whom he found to be solemn of countenance and exceedingly plain of dress. "Do you live near here?"

"No," the visitor answered, "my habitation, humble, and scarcely worth a glance of the traveler that passes the door, is situated many miles from here, but your sermons come to me on the great thought-carrying waves of the press. Are you too deeply engaged in contemplation to spare me a few moments in your library?"

"Oh, by no means," the minister responded. "Walk into the house, please."

They went into the library, and the visitor, after seating himself, looked earnestly at the preacher and said: "I did not know that I was in your immediate neighborhood until your house was pointed out to me, and then my desire to see and talk with you, overcoming my judgment, perhaps, urged me to stop."

"I am really glad that you did stop," the minister replied, moving in an embarrassed manner; for, although accustomed to the compliments of the sisters and brothers of the church, the praise of this solemn man made him feel uneasy.

"I thank you profoundly," said the visitor, bowing. "For many days I have thought that I should like to talk to you on a subject that has become very serious to me, and you can scarcely imagine the thrill I felt when your house was pointed out."

"I am ready, my dear sir, to talk to you on any subject," the minister answered. "It is with regard to religion, of course?"

"Well, hardly. The truth is—I am almost ashamed to acknowledge it—I fear that I have become superstitious. I have fought, have really struggled against it, but still I can not drive away a horrible belief that seems hourly to fasten itself stronger and stronger upon me. Before I proceed farther, let me tell you my name. I am Calvin N. Boyers. I am exceedingly poor, but all my friends know me to be honest. Sometimes I have money, and then sometimes I find myself in extreme need. My superstition began in this way: About four months ago I went to a man named Anderson and asked him to lend me twenty-five dollars. He refused. What happened? The next day he dropped dead."

A SOLEMN MAN.

"There is nothing remarkable in that," the preacher remarked.

"Oh, no, but wait. The very next day I went to a man named Cal Simmons, and asked him to accommodate me with twenty-five dollars. He declared that he did not have the amount. He was a very strong man, but the next day he dropped dead."

"Humph!" grunted the minister.

"Then I began to grow superstitious," the visitor continued, "and although I needed money, I waited for several weeks before asking any one else. Finally need drove me to it and I went to B. S. Featherston, our county judge, and asked him for twenty-five. He said that he could let me have it, and I know that his intentions were good, but upon looking in his safe he found that he had not the amount. I thanked him, of course, but the very next day, just as he had admitted old Steven Doyle's will to probate, he fell off the bench, dead."

"You don't say so," exclaimed the minister.

"Yes, sir. It is a fact. When I went home I heard of it and shut myself up and for more than two days did not eat a bite. Finally I came out, and remembering a moneyed man, a friend of mine that lived not far away, I went to him, and telling him of my experience with the other men and reminding him of what had befallen them, I asked him to lend me twenty-five dollars. He not only refused but actually laughed at me. The next morning while he was out in the pasture, looking at his fine horses, he was stricken with apoplexy and died almost instantly."

"Good gracious!" exclaimed the minister, "you startle me."

"Ah, you are beginning to see that I have cause to be superstitious."

"Oh, no," said the preacher, thoughtfully, "oh, no, for we are in this enlightened day warned against superstition. Coincidents are sometimes perplexing, but we should never permit them to drive us into the dark corners of superstition."

"I know that, Mr. Woodrigg, and I have fought against it, but still I can not help yielding to a strength so immeasurably greater than my own. Let me give you another instance. About two weeks after the last man died I went to a preacher, a dear friend of mine, and begged for spiritual comfort."

"You should have done that long before," Rev. Mr. Woodrigg broke in.

"I know that," the visitor assented; "but somehow I did not have the strength to acknowledge my weakness. Well, I talked with him long and earnestly, and after awhile he convinced me that I was foolish. My spirits rose and I laughed for the first time in many weeks. But suddenly the thought flashed across my mind that I had to raise twenty-five dollars or my land would be sold for taxes. I explained the distress I was in and asked him to let me have the money. 'I should do so with pleasure,' said he, 'but the truth is I am in absolute and immediate need of every cent I have.' I went away, knowing that he had spoken the truth, but—" The visitor took out a red handkerchief and wiped his eyes. "How I did love that man!" he continued and after a painful silence. "He was more than a brother to me; he was indeed a father."

"YOU DON'T SAY SO!"

"But did any thing happen to him?" the minister eagerly asked.

The visitor arose and, standing with his back to the preacher, looked far away over the landscape. He wiped his eyes again and in a voice husky with emotion, answered: "He fell dead the next day. Oh! my dear Mr. Woodrigg," he exclaimed, suddenly wheeling about and stretching forth his arms, "you now see why I am held down by the blackened chains of superstition. You can now appreciate why I am no longer a real man."

"My dear brother," said the minister, "your case is indeed deserving of commiseration, but still I say be not led into the foul waters of superstition. You must pray."

"I will do so," the visitor exclaimed. "I will pray deep within my soul. Well, I must go now. I must hasten home; but alas!" he sorrowfully added, "I expect to find strangers in my house. The tax-gatherer I fear has supplanted me. If I had only twenty-five dollars I should, now that you have so comforted me, again be happy."

Rev. Mr. Woodrigg began to wince. "Just to think," the visitor continued, "that so small an amount can make a man forget all his former troubles. Say, my friend, can you not accommodate me for a few days?"

The preacher began to cough. "Why, I declare, I—I—"

"Oh, do not inconvenience yourself, sir," said the visitor.

Mr. Woodrigg began to walk up and down the room. "Your words have given me such strength," the visitor went on, "that I am sure I can never wholly repay you."

"I think I can let you have the money," the preacher broke in. "I have only thirty dollars to my name, and had intended getting some books that I have wanted for a long time, but I can not think of you going home and finding your house sold away from you. Wait a moment and I will bring the money."

The good man left the room, and the visitor, humming a melancholy tune, stretched out his legs and clasped his hands back of his head. When the preacher returned and gave him the money, he became a veritable fountain of thanks, throwing up the silvery spray of gratitude.

That afternoon a neighbor called on Mr. Woodrigg. "I had rather a queer caller this morning," said he. "A fellow came to the house and after talking for some time began to tell me of people that had dropped dead because they had refused to lend him money. Then he wanted me to lend him twenty-five dollars, and I pledge you my word that it took all my strength to resist him, almost believing at one time that I should surely die suddenly if I did not yield to him. In fact, I don't know but that I should have given him the money had not some one interrupted our conversation. Upon seeing the new comer, my impressive visitor took his leave, and, when he had gone, the new comer asked: 'Do you know that fellow?' 'No,' I rejoined, 'who is he?' 'One of the shrewdest confidence men in the country,' he replied."

HE LEANED BACK IN A CHAIR.

The minister, holding his hands behind him, walked up and down the room. After awhile he said: "You did well not to let him taint you with his professed superstition. We should cultivate strength and root out the germs of weakness." OPIE P. READ.

The World's Greatest Shot Tells How to Handle a Gun.

Champion Bogardus Still Enthusiastic—Sound Health and Strong Nerves for the Man Who Shoots—Plenty of Big and Little Game.

[COPYRIGHT, 1890.]

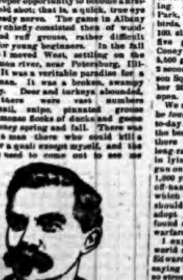
JUST now, it may not be generally remembered that the art of shooting swift-flying birds, or "little birds," as the quail, plover, snipe, woodcock, etc., were once derisively called, is of comparatively recent origin, and at the beginning was practiced only by those who came here from Europe after having acquired their skill there. Those who lived on the Western prairies and other places where game abounded could kill a buck or fat turkey with the rifle. There were a few old-fashioned smooth-bores in use, but the shot used was buck-shot or other large sizes. Powder and shot were dear. The use of the pointer and setter was practically unknown, and the men who used good guns and small shot in the pursuit of small game were not favorably regarded. It was not believed that the game was worth the powder, to say nothing at all about the shot. The shotgun was called the "squaw gun" by Indians and hunters.

Born in Albany County, New York, I began to shoot at the age of fifteen. At that time I was a big strong lad. I am now quite six feet tall, powerful, sinewy, and muscular. I have never used tobacco in any form and have always enjoyed good health. I possessed, as I believe, the natural gifts which will enable a man in time and with proper opportunity to become a first-rate field shot; that is, a quick, true eye and steady nerve. The game in Albany County chiefly consisted then of woodcock and ruff grouse, rather difficult birds for young beginners. In the fall of 1856 I moved West, settling on the Sangamon river, near Petersburg, Illinois. It was a veritable paradise for a sportsman. It was a broken, swampy country. Deer and turkeys abounded, and there were vast numbers of quail, snipe, pinnated grouse and immense flocks of ducks and geese came every spring and fall. There was hardly a man there who could kill a snipe or a quail except myself, and the natives used to come out to see me shoot. One of the most famous hunters of the region laughed when he saw me loading with No. 8 shot for the first time. "That won't kill nothin', stranger," said he. "You can't stop quail with any thing lighter than No. 1 shot, nor prairie chickens 'cept BB's." He changed his opinion when he found I could kill ten to his one. The Sangamon country was and is a grand place for game.



CAPT. BOGARDUS.

To any one who can afford the expense and has the time to spare there need be no trouble in finding a good place to shoot. Of the Eastern States I know very little, but quail are more numerous in most of the counties of Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Kentucky, Iowa, Missouri, Wisconsin and Minnesota than they have ever been before. Michigan and Northern Indiana are famous for snipe and duck, as are also Illinois, Iowa, Missouri and Minnesota. But perhaps the best general shooting is to be had in Northeastern Missouri and some parts of Iowa.

The prairies have been broken up, and when they now make their nests in the fields of the farmer, their nests are nearly all broken up and destroyed by the plow in the spring. Where parts of the prairie are left for pasturage the farmer burns these patches over late in the spring under the mistaken idea that it improves the young grass. This cuts up the supply of grouse, and seriously reduces the number each year. Many of the best snipe grounds have been drained and some even thickly built over, and the brakes and thickets where once the woodcock abounded have been cut up and cleared away. A love of shooting is rapidly spreading among farmers in the West, and many of these mistakes are likely soon to be rectified, as they really should be the most efficient preservers of the game.

To begin at an early age the practical acquirement of the art of shooting birds on the wing is a good thing, but any one who is able to walk abroad and carry a gun may attain fair proficiency in it. The number of men whose nervous temperament is such as to prevent this are very few indeed. Many have the natural gift of shooting, and, with abundant practice induced by their love of the art, become dead shots. By following proper methods and practicing much any one may become a good shot. Whenever convenient parents should let their sons learn to shoot. There need be no apprehension that an accident will occur, because the handling of guns prevents accidents instead of causing them. Two of the most important things to success in the field are the loading of the gun for the different varieties of game, and handling it when the bird is found and takes wing. A very common error is to use shot of a large size, with too much of it and too little powder. As long as the gun will burn it there is no danger of putting in too much powder, but the timid man can'not be made to understand this.

The first thing to learn, having provided the gun, is how to handle it properly. He should be able to bring it up to his shoulder as clean and well as if it was loaded. This exercise should be continued until he is able to manage the gun with as great ease and facility as his bat while playing base-ball. A cardinal principle of this exercise is that under no circumstance should the muzzle of the gun be allowed to point at man, woman or child, whether loaded or unloaded, in the house or in the field, or, in fact, anywhere. When the young man handles the gun well unloaded, the next thing is to load.

Begin with light charges. For a breech-loader either the metal cases or paper cases, if he does not wish to use them more than once, may be used for his cartridges. They should be loaded lightly. If they are not, and the gun should kick, the youth or young man is very apt to fall into the bad habit of closing both eyes when he pulls the trigger, thus preventing him from ever becoming a good shot. He should stand upright, with his left foot in advance, and the right a little back to steady himself when he brings the gun to his shoulder as if to deliver fire.

At first the cartridges should be loaded with three or three and one-half drachms and an ounce of No. 8 or 9 shot. With these he may retire to a field, or some other safe place, and put up a target of paper a foot square against a tree or wall. Then retiring about sixty feet, he may load the gun, bring it up to his shoulder, with the left hand extended to the end of the stock, being careful to keep his finger from the top of the barrel so as not to interfere with the sight, taking aim along the top of a single, and along the rib of the gun if double-barrel, and when he has taken aim, pull the trigger.

It is natural for the beginner to shut his left eye in taking aim, and this is proper. I have heard men say that it is best to shoot with both eyes open, but I do not agree with them. Even in snap-shooting most good shots instinctively shut the left eye at the instant of firing.

After shooting, the youth should load again, and then examine the target to see how many shot he put into it and try again. The object of this is to get a good, quick aim, and to fire on the instant with the gun firmly held and braced against the shoulder. Too long a time should not be taken in aiming. It is much better to fire on the instant of taking aim. After the consumption of a little powder and shot the young man will find that he can hit the target every time with the center of the charge. That is the way to kill, and he is now ready to begin on birds.

It is a well-known fact that one-half the shots made in the field are at birds which fly across the sportsman, or go quartering off from him, and most of the misses that occur are owing to the failure of the shooter to hold forward enough so that the center of the charge will be upon the bird when the shot reaches him. The center of the flight of shot should reach the line of his flight just where he will be when the line of the shot intersects his line of flight, not where he was when the aim was made. At a fast flying crossing pigeon I hold from eight to ten inches ahead; at a quartering bird from three to four inches. At a bird going straight away close to the ground, I hold right on; if rising, I shoot high. At an incoming bird I shoot right at the head, and rarely fail to kill. In applying these principles in the field, the kind of game, the distance and the season of the year must all be taken into account.

Probably the greatest shooting contest that ever occurred was between myself and Aubrey Coventry, for $5,000, at the Polo grounds, Brighton, England, Aug. 6, 1878.

We each had one hundred birds, thirty yards rise. I defeated my opponent by a score of 79 to 78. Over $100,000 changed hands on the result. The bookmakers asked me to name my own price if I would lose, but I told them I was an American sportsman, and would win if I could. Three of my most noted achievements (and to equal which I have a standing wager of 10 to 1 for any amount) are the following: I killed in succession at Dexter Park, Chicago, July 21, 1869, 100 single birds, tame doves. I killed 99 birds out of 100, single, 30 yards, 80 yards fall, from five ground traps, English rules, at Coney Island, July 2, 1880. I broke 5,500 glass balls in 7 hours, 19 minutes, 2 seconds, out of 5,854 shot at, in Madison Square Garden, New York, December 20, 1879. The challenge is still open.

We are making the best fire-arms to be found in the world in this country to-day. Americans on the whole are the best shots. In the English army there are many good shots at long-range, but I fail to see the sense in lying on one's back and resting the gun on the toes, blaze away at a target 1,000 yards away. The Germans shoot off-hand at 200 or 300 yards distance, which I think is very much better. I should advise the American militia to adopt that style, because it will be found more useful in the field in actual warfare.

I expect to make a tour around the world next spring with my three sons, Edward, Peter and Henry, and if the saying be true, "there never was a man so strong, but what there was a stronger one," I shall be glad to meet him.

LEGAL NOTICES.

IN CHANCERY OF NEW JERSEY.

Between
Mary M. Green, Pet., and George Green, Def't. — On Petition for Divorce.

The Petitioner having filed her Petition in the above cause, and process of citation having been issued and returned according to law, and it appearing by affidavit that the defendant, George Green, resides out of the State of New Jersey, and that process could not be served upon him:

It is, on this 23d day of May one thousand eight hundred and ninety, on motion of Nelson Runyon, of counsel with the Petitioner ordered that the said absent defendant do appear and answer the Petitioner's petition, on or before the 24th day of July, next, or that, in default thereof such decree be made against him as the chancellor shall think equitable and just; and it is further ordered, that the notice of this order, prescribed by the rules of this Court, shall, within twenty days hereafter, be served on the said absent defendant, by actual service upon said defendant, personally by delivery of a copy thereof to him, or, in default of such service, that said notice be published within the said twenty days in THE CONSTITUTIONALIST, a newspaper printed in the County where the parties resided at the time of the desertion complained of, in this State, and continued therein for four weeks successively, at least once in every week, and that a copy thereof be mailed, within the same time, to the said absent defendant, directed to his post office address, if the same can be ascertained.

The Wheelman.

The shadow of my silent steed
Flits over hill and vale
As swiftly as the clouds that speed
Upon the hurrying gale.

Nor whip nor spur the sleek thigh wounds,
Nor guide the chafing rein,
But willingly my steel horse bounds
Along the level plain.

Oh! happy are the wheelman's days,
And spent at his sweet will;
He glides along life's troubled ways
Like—bang it, what a spill!
—Paul Pastnor.

Why Not Be Happy To-Day.

I have doubted my hopes of the future,
I have questioned my dreams of the past,
I have roamed through the realms of ambition
With visions too lovely to last.
I have longed for youth's fondest ideals,
But those phantoms are now far away,
And at last fair Philosophy whispers:
"Oh! why not be happy to-day?"

Though storm clouds may darken life's way,
(Each heart has some shadows to bear),
The bright sun will soon gild the heavens,
And thy troubles will melt into air.
So what is the use of repining—
Will it bless or ennoble you, pray?
No; the world does not care for your whining,
So why not be happy to-day?

Ah, the old world at heart is too solemn!
For life is at best full of trials,
So try to be cheerful—'twill help you
If you brighten all pathways with smiles.
Then life will be well worth the living,
Let kindness illumine the way,
And with Hope's gilded banners before us
Let's strive to be happy to-day!

The Sort of Bait.

"If you were going fishing now
To catch a bounteous mate,
What would you use for bait, oh sage,
What would you use for bait?

"Would you put honor on the hook,
Or munificent estate;
Tell to me just what you would do;
What would you use for bait?"

"Ah, foolish youth you're little wit
It's long you'd have to wait
To get a bite with such device;
That's not the sort of bait.

"Which nowadays lands easily,
To fix a wedding date;
Troll with a gold or silver spoon:
That is the kind of bait!"
—Merchant Traveler.

No Time to Be Sick.

With all the others complainin',
Josiah 'long with the rest,
I don't do nothin' but labor,
A-tryin' to do my best.

Pete's got the influenzy
And Hannah's took down this noon;
Josiah is groanin' an' groanin'—
He allus gives up so soon.

Nobody but me to tend 'em
With the rest 'o the work to do;
If they'd only be kind and consider'te
I wouldn't feel quite so blue.

Sometimes I long to be tended
(There—a woman's tears come quick),
But I work when my head's near splittin'
'Cause I ain't got time to be sick.

A Poetical Romance.

CHAP. I.

Once on a time a maiden fair to see
I met, and a great change came over me,
For she was wondrous fair; and, oh! such eyes
I never saw beneath the sunlit skies!

CHAP. II.

She smiled upon me in a tender way—
Perhaps the girls are just as nice to-day—
I do not know; but that one was, I thought,
The fairest creature man had ever sought.

CHAP. III.

At last I said, unto her home I'll go
And learn my fate, come either weal or woe.
When I arrived, somehow, I could not call;
My courage failed me, and—and—that is all!
—Mount Gage Shirley, in Puck.

Baby.

A little form so dainty small,
So soft, so tender, and so dear;
A little voice whose helpless call
Is music to a mother's ear;
A little pulse of delicate breath,
Like Eve's when Zephyr whispereth:

A little arm that nervously lies,
Red, parting fingers, tiniest things;
Two round, blue, upward-gazing eyes,
All filled with silent wonderings.
That, as the kiss of Heaven's light wake,
Now ope, now close their downy lids.

A little head, so smooth and white,
Pert, rosy mouth and fairy chin,
And cheeks all rounded to the sight,
Save where a dimple draws them in—
All in one tiny frame of love,
As light as Laughter, soft as Love.
—W. Traga Webb, in London Spectator.

VACATION DAYS.

The school-bell rings with cheerful sound,
To hasten the slow, late comer;
"To-morrow we'll play,"
It seems to say,
"Hurrah for the first vacation day!
Hurrah for a merry summer!"

The faithful bell, now the school is done,
Must pause in its daily swinging;
Does it miss the noise
Of the girls and boys
And long to echo vacation joys
With a peal of its wildest ringing?

Soon, over the country far and wide,
There are ripples of happy laughter;
For the children know
Where the berries grow,
Where the purling streams thro' the meadows flow
And the hurrying brooks speed after.

They know where the mountains lift their heads,
By the great sky-curtain bounded;
And their voices leap
To the craggy steep
And wake the echoes from out their sleep,
With shouts that are thrice resounded.

They know where the sea lies blue and calm
In the bright midsummer weather;
And they love to stand
On the shining sand,
Where the tide rolls up—and then, hand in hand,
To plunge in the wave together.

They love to linger in leafy woods
And list to the squirrel's scolding,
As they climb to a nest
Near his safe retreat,
Or fall on a couch, all spicy sweet,
Of feathery ferns unfolding.

But, by and by, in the autumn days,
Ere the bee has deserted the clover
When the sound of the bell
Shall rise and swell,
Will the little folk laugh—now who can tell—
To hear that vacation is over?

BACK FROM EUROPE.

The Changes Wrought by Three Months' Absence.

"Will" Goodfellow Is Surprised and Disappointed When He Meets His Relatives on Their Return—How They Greet Him.

Scene, one of the piers in the North river. A big transatlantic steamer is coming into her birth. On the deck are John Moneybags, of Chicago, Mrs. Moneybags and Miss Ethel Moneybags. On the pier is Will Goodfellow, second cousin of Miss Moneybags. Mr. Goodfellow's eyes are eagerly searching for his friends, and when they light upon the group a bright smile breaks over his face, and tearing his hat from his head he waves it a little undecorously. Mr. Moneybags whips a big handkerchief from his pocket and waves it vigorously, but Mrs. M. lays her hand on his arm and says something to him in a low tone. Mr. M. looks disgusted and replaces the handkerchief in his pocket. A slight tinge dyes Miss Ethel's cheeks as she catches sight of her handsome cousin, but she bows to him with a certain reserve and stateliness. Cousin Will looks surprised, but continues to smile happily until he finds his opportunity to dash along the gang-plank and reached the returning travelers.

"My dear old Uncle John," he bursts out, feelingly, seizing the older man's hand and pressing it warmly.

"God bless you, my boy," cries the other, returning the pressure with a hearty squeeze. "It does my heart good to see an honest American face again and to feel less like a stone statue."

Will has turned to his aunt, prepared to give her an old-fashioned kiss. She turns her cheek to him with great dignity and he touches it coldly, his ardor checked by this frigid reception.

"Well, Ethel," he cries, blushing with pleasure and taking her by the hands as if to kiss her, too. "I'm glad you're all back—mighty glad," he adds, frankly.

But Miss Ethel starts back a little to avoid his proffered salute and blushes furiously, at the same time pressing his fingers not unkindly.

"Plague it," cries Cousin Will, in amazement. "What's the matter, Ethel? What have I done? Are you ashamed to kiss a fellow because you've been to Europe?"

"But on the deck and before everybody," says Miss Ethel, looking a little as if she were sorry that they were on deck, and her mother nods approval.

"On the deck!" Will bursts out. "Why, Ethel, aren't you my— Am I not — Plague it, aren't we engaged? Weren't you glad enough to kiss me good-bye when you went away three months ago?"

Miss Ethel apparently is ready to relent, but Will has seized on several pieces of small luggage and works off his indignation by piling them vigorously before him. Then the party starts down the gang-plank. Will sullen and silent; Mr. Moneybags mournful. Mrs. M. haughty and with an evident contempt for the cosmopolitan bustle and excitement on the big pier; Miss Ethel rather thoughtful.

Will conducts them to the street and assists Mrs. and Miss Moneybags into the carriage.

"You would better drive to the hotel," he says, darkly. "I'll look after the baggage and meet you there."

"No, my boy," says Mr. Moneybags, doggedly, "we'll wait for you. I'm glad to see you, Will, if the others aren't. And, Lucy, I'm ashamed of you to treat Will this way. As for you, Ethel, you are ungrateful. You don't deserve him."

"Oh, papa," answers Miss Ethel, faintly, "you know I'm glad to see him. Of course we shall wait for you, Will."

"You seem to be glad," grumbles Mr. M., as Mr. Goodfellow hurries away. "If you had acted like this when we were young, Lucy, we wouldn't have taken this trip to Europe together. I shall wait for Will if it takes him two hours," and he settles back in his seat with a wrathful countenance. Ethel's eyes send a grateful glance to his, but he does not see it.

"Ethel did just right," says Mrs. Moneybags. "I hope my daughter would not kiss even the man to whom she is engaged in public."

"Fiddlesticks."

"We must have some regard for conventionalities, even if we are in America."

"Even if we are in America!" he retorts with scorn. "D-e-r-ear, madam, where were you born? Where have you lived all your life? Where did John Moneybags get his money, that you should get all your new-fangled notions in three months? Even in America! Thank heavens Will is an American and my lady, Miss Ethel, ought to be prouder to kiss him on a steamer's deck than to look at your puny, dangling English aristocrats out of a hot-house. In America!—"

"Don't, papa," cries Miss Ethel.

"Oh, I won't. I've said my say and that's the end of it, but Will shall see that I'm proud of him if you aren't," and Mr. Moneybags closes his firm mouth with determination.

"My dear," continues Mrs. Moneybags, imperturbably, "because we are Americans is no reason why we should not confess to the superior virtues of other countries."

No answer.

"Ethel is my daughter as well as yours, and it is my duty to approve her conduct."

No answer.

"As for Will, I think that he appreciates that I have his best interests at heart."

A little snort of disdain, but no answer.

"And Ethel, sir, I must say, you yourself do not appreciate when you say that she does not deserve him. You forget, perhaps, how much she was sought after, how the best people in England felt honored to meet her."

"Money."

"That, sir, is your American way of estimating every thing by dollars and cents."

No answer.

"Ethel need not look to Will for a husband, if you please."

Miss Ethel stirs uneasily.

"Why don't you tell him that and have done with it?" asks Mr. Moneybags, curtly.

Miss Ethel murmurs something inaudible and blushes. Her father sees the roses in her cheeks and is somewhat mollified. Her eyes are looking out the carriage door.

"He is coming," interrupts Miss Ethel, hurriedly, the roses becoming brighter.

"It's all fixed," says Will, cheerfully. "Now for the hotel."

"Sit down by me, my boy," urges Mr. Moneybags, laying his hand kindly on Will's.

Miss Ethel looks at her cousin's handsome face. He sits down at his uncle's side. Every one is silent for a moment as the carriage drives off.

"Your streets are very muddy," Mrs. Moneybags remarks, casting a critical glance out the window.

"Yes, they're American streets," retorts Mr. Moneybags.

"Now," continues Mrs. Moneybags, not heeding her husband's sarcasm, "in England—"

"Bother England!" groans Mr. M——.

Miss Ethel looks appealingly at Will. His eyes are looking sorrowfully at his aunt.

"I arrived here last night from home to meet you," says Will, still looking at his aunt. "I thought it would please you. We missed you very much."

"I wish you could have gone with us," she replies, a trifle condescendingly.

Miss Ethel waits for his reply a little eagerly.

"And you, Uncle John," says Will, heartily, "the office never goes right when you are away."

Uncle John beams with pleasure.

The conversation turns here and Miss Ethel withdraws further into her corner with dignity.

"And here's the hotel," cries Will, jumping out with American alacrity. Mrs. Moneybags steps out carefully and impressively. Ethel comes forth gracefully and lightly, barely touching her cousin's hand with her finger tips. The old man stamps his feet sturdily on the pavement with great satisfaction.

"This is a sidewalk broad enough for people to pass one another," he says.

Will leaves his aunt and cousin in the reception-room and makes for the door to see about the rooms which he had telegraphed for three weeks beforehand. Mr. M. follows him.

"You won't be long?" asks Miss Ethel, looking at him with a friendly light in her eye.

"Just a minute," answers Will, not very cordially.

"Well, Will, give me your hand again," cries Mr. M., wringing his arm affectionately. "God bless America!"

"Thank you for that, uncle."

"Well, we've got the world's fair, my boy," cries the old man, with pride in his honest, keen eyes.

"Oh, hang the fair," answers Will, gloomily.

"We're all wrong somehow," replies the Chicago millionaire. "It's that Europe. Darn Europe," he adds mournfully.

"And so say I," mutters the younger man.—N. Y. Tribune.

While two men were hunting cows near Fort Myers, Fla., their dogs treed a large black bear. They determined to secure the animal, but had no weapons except pocket knives. These they tied to long poles, and, climbing the tree after the bear, thrust their knives into its neck until they cut an artery, when it bled to death.

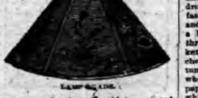
THE HOUSEHOLD.

UNIQUE ORNAMENTS.

Wire Cloth as a Material Out of Which They May Be Made.

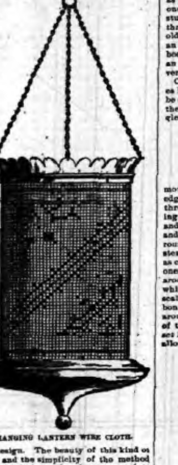
A class of ornamental objects may be made from wire cloth which rival in beauty any kind of stained glass work. Figs. 1 and 2 are examples of this kind of work.

The wire cloth for this purpose should be made of fine wire, the mesh should be coarse, say ten to the inch, and, moreover, the cloth should be painted and allowed to dry before the ornamental work is applied. The wire cloth is supported a short distance from a design drawn on paper and the different colors are introduced into the meshes by means of an ordinary writing pen.



LAMP SHADE.

A gelatine solution is used for this purpose. It should not be very thick, and it must be kept warm. Ordinary transparent gelatine may be colored for this purpose by adding aniline. Colored lacquers answer admirably for filling the squares. Common white glue answers very well for filling the body of the design. The beauty of this kind of work and the simplicity of the method by which it is produced recommend it for many purposes.



HANGING LANTERN WIRE CLOTH.

The construction of the frames for the lamp shade and hanging lantern requires some mechanical skill. Probably the aid of the tinsmith will have to be invoked in these cases. It will pay, however, as the articles will well repay the trouble and expense.

The hanging lantern, Fig. 2, is designed for a hall. It may contain a kerosene lamp, or the device known as the "fairy lamp," in which a large candle is employed as a source of light.

The colored checks in the wire cloth appear like gems when illuminated.—Scientific American.

ICE-CREAM.

Extract from a Lecture by J. H. Kellogg, M. D., of the Battle Creek (Mich.) Sanitarium.

Consider first the ice without the cream as to the fact of its lowering the temperature of the stomach. When the food goes down into the stomach, the stomach begins to pour out gastric juice and the nerves of digestion recognize the fact that there is something present which requires their attention. The stomach nerves must be sensitive enough to make this recognition and then the little cells or glands will begin to make pepsin; the blood-vessels must also be able to absorb and the stomach to contract, else the process of digestion will not go on properly. Now ice-cream, or any other ice-cold substance, is just about the same preparation for all this delicate work as snow-balling or holding lumps of ice in the hands would be for taking up intricate fancy work which required the nice touch of a lady's fingers. If she should subject her hands to ice or snow for half an hour, her fingers would be too benumbed and clumsy to pick up a pin, to say nothing of using a cambric needle.

For the marvelous work of digestion the nerves of the stomach should be fully awake and active. Now what preparation for this work is it to send down a quantity of ice water or ice-cream? The muscles and nerves of the stomach are paralyzed by the cold and the absorbent blood vessels are unable to undertake their duties. In the experiments upon Alexis St. Martin it was found that two-thirds of a glass of ice water would stop the whole process of digestion for half an hour. Suppose, instead, that it was ice-cream, which is a great deal colder than ice water; the process of digestion can not begin for an hour or two, for the stomach is required to be at a temperature of 98¼ or 100 degrees. When the temperature of the stomach is reduced to 90 or 95 degrees digestion almost stops and the temperature of the stomach has been known to be as low as 60 degrees. But these lower temperatures permit of fermentation and decay if they do not favor digestion, and that is what usually goes on, for the gastric juice can not be poured out to keep the food in an antiseptic condition. Gastric juice is one of the best of antiseptics.

When a person's face is exposed to extreme cold his cheeks become red and the tears begin to flow. Something analogous takes place in the stomach after the cold has passed away. The stomach begins to pour out large quantities of mucous, due to the congested condition of the blood-vessels, and in this way a catarrh of the stomach is set up. Hundreds of people bring on catarrh of of the stomach by the use of ice-cream and iced tea, and it is a most obstinate and troublesome disease.

Another danger in eating ice-cream is in the tyrotoxicon poisoning, which may be due to the condition of the milk. This is identical with cheese-poisoning. In gathering milk from promiscuous sources it is almost certain that some will be used which is not wholesome; it may be a little too old, it may not have had proper care or it may have come from a diseased animal. Ice-cream is frequently made from cream which would not keep any longer without freezing, and its use is positively unsafe unless you want to make work for the doctors, for ice-cream is without doubt a great friend of the doctors and druggists.

Rules to Be Observed in Making Jelly.

Have a bag prepared of coarse linen, similar to dish-towel crash, or white flannel.

Use a porcelain kettle.

Measure instead of weigh the juice.

Use coffee A or granulated sugar.

Cook only a few pounds at one time to have it nicely done.

Have a steady fire.

When it commences to boil, skim off all the froth that rises.

When it has boiled about ten minutes, dip the skimmer in and out, holding it up over the jelly; if it runs off only in one place it is not cooked enough; if it runs around the edge of the skimmer and drips off in two or three places in drops, it is done. Usually when boiling fast for fifteen minutes it jellies nicely, and better than if cooked longer. Fill a large pitcher with hot water, then throw out and pour in the jelly from the kettle, cover the top of the pitcher with cheese-cloth, and strain into heated tumblers. Leave until next morning, when it should be solid. Cut white paper to fit the tops and paste with white of egg, into which has been stirred one-half teaspoonful of flour to thicken. When dry, tie manilla paper double over the top, and label. Set in a cool, dry place. If not thick in the morning, set in the sun for a few hours. If too thin for table use, it is nice for jelly-cake.—Good Housekeeping.

AN UNIQUE VASE.

It Is Very Pretty and Is Quite Easily Made.

A box of pretty grayish-green lichens removed from decaying fence rails, after a rain, which has moistened them, so that they will scale off in as large pieces as possible; another of the stiff white ones, such as scallop the bases of old stumps; a pan of glue, needle and thread; pasteboard and the wreck of an old goblet, or, better still, the stand of an old lamp, from which the bowl has been broken. With these materials and an hour's pleasurable employment, a very pretty vase can be made.

Cut a piece of pasteboard twelve inches long and five inches wide; or, it may be slightly larger both ways preserving the same proportions. Dot three triangles, as seen in the cut (Fig. 1). Remove these with scissors and draw the edges of the strip together and sew in three flat seams. Fit this small opening over the top of the stem of the stand and tie securely. Use the white lichens and begin at the bottom, glue in rows round and round until the vase and stem are covered; then crowd together as closely as possible the greenish-gray ones over the pasteboard, and finish around the top with a border of the white ones, arranged so as to give a scalloped upper edge. Tie a pretty ribbon in a loose bow, with short ends, around the joining of the stem and bowl of the vase. A glass of water may be set inside, and sprays of parlor ivy be allowed to grow and fall over its sides as it stands on mantel or window, or it may be used for cut-flowers, and it is quite pretty as a simple ornament with nothing else. A manifold number of shapes will suggest themselves to any one, but the one described is so simple that it can be easily made by any one.

FIG. 1. PASTEBOARD FOR VASE.

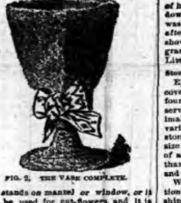


FIG. 2. THE VASE COMPLETE.

The lichens, like so many of the pretty things that claim our attention in our walks through the woods and fields, can be applied in many ways. An old letter-box, unsightly but valued because it was old, was made a thing of beauty by a covering of lichens and a pretty bow of ribbon, which can be removed at any time to give place to some other form of decoration; yet they are quite durable, and will give pleasure for a long time.—Rural New Yorker.

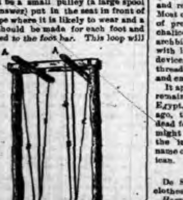
OUR YOUNG FOLKS.

SELF-ACTING SWING.

Here Is Something Which the Children Can Appreciate.

A good swing can be made as follows—and what manner of man is he who can say that a farm home is not enhanced in beauty if not in value by the addition of a swing? This one (of which we show an engraving) may be made double-acting or single to suit the fancy of the maker. The cross pieces (AA) are spiked or bolted to the cap B. This is a scantling six inches square, or a rustic log mortised to two uprights of a like character that are at least 15 feet above ground, and should be set in the ground from 5 to 7 feet. The swing rope (CC) is fastened to B about four inches inside of the cross pieces AA. The rope is made of three-eighth or one-half inch round iron, or old lightning rod may be used.

The ropes DD should be fastened about one foot from the main rope, and toward the end of the stick AA. They should be brought down and passed through the hole in the seat, directly opposite the ropes CC and two to three inches away from it. They must then be tied to the foot bar. This must be adjusted to suit the size of the swinger. There should be a small pulley (a large spool will answer) put in the seat in front of the rope where it is likely to wear and a loop should be made for each foot and fastened to the foot bar. This loop will draw across the instep when the heel is in contact with the bar, so the foot will not slip off. The ropes EE are made fast in the opposite direction from DD, at the other end of the bar AA. These are brought down and fastened to the handles II, at the proper height. The handles must be made of hard wood, with a hole bored through them and passed over the main rope (which is of iron) before it is put up. A notch is made around the upper end of the handles to attach the rope.



SELF-ACTING SWING.

MABEL'S BATH.

She Had Long Wanted It and Finally Got It in a Very Funny Way.

Mable Ross was visiting her grandma one summer. On a rainy day, when she could not go out, grandma and she went up in the attic to get some rags for a rug. While grandma was making selections from the old garments, Mabel was prying curiously into all corners, as children delight to do. Presently she exclaimed: "O grandma! what is that tall box with a door and holes in the top?"

"That is an old shower-bath," said grandma.

"What is it for?" asked Mabel.

"Well," replied grandma, "when I was a small child, my nurse used to stand me in there and turn the water slowly on through the holes in the top, and that was my shower-bath."

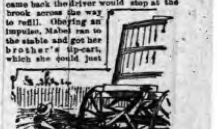
"Oh, how nice," said Mabel; "may I take one some day?"

Grandma said "Yes;" but the next day Mabel's father came to take her home.

When telling her playmates about the nice times she had at grandma's, she always ended by regretting that she couldn't take the shower-bath.

One day she was out in the yard, and saw the water-cart go by, sprinkling the streets. "Oh," she thought, "if I was only under there, it would be most like a shower-bath."

She knew that when the sprinkler came back the driver would stop at the brook across the way to refill. Obeying an impulse, Mabel ran to the stable and got her brother's tip-cart, which she could just manage to sit in. While the driver was refilling his tank, unobserved by him, she tied the tip-cart securely in the desired position under the sprinkler.



MABEL'S BATH.

Forgetful of her nice clean dress and pretty hat, she seated herself therein. When the driver started his cart, her "shower-bath" began. At first she liked it; but as the full force of the water was turned on, her clothes were wet through. People stopped along the street to smile at this strange sight, and the little girl became aware that she was an object of merriment. She felt ashamed, and seeing her brother Tom among some boys on the sidewalk, cried out to him to come and get his tip-cart.

"That's two words for yourself and one for the cart," said Tom. As the driver halted just then he untied his cart, and, at Mabel's request, dragged her home in it as fast as he could.

A very "dripping-wet" girl stood in the back entry making an explanation of her appearance to her mother, with downcast eyes, a little later. Mamma was a little vexed, but forgave her, after a slight reproof, in memory of the shower-bath she was to have taken at grandma's.—Virginia C. Hollis, in Our Little Ones.

Stones That Will Swim in the Human Eye.

Eye-stones are really portions of the covering of certain shell fish. They are found at the opening of the shell, and serve to close the entrance when the animal draws itself within. They are of various kinds, but those used as eye-stones are hard, stony bodies, about the size of split peas, one-third to one-sixth of an inch in diameter, a little longer than broad, having one surface plane and the other convex.

When they have been worn by the action of the sea they are very smooth and shining. Like other shells, they are composed of carbonate of lime. When placed in a weak acid, such as vinegar, a chemical change takes place, carbonate acid gas is given off, and its escape produces the movements which are popularly supposed to show that the stone is "alive."

When one of these stones is placed under the eyelid, at the outer corner, the natural movements of the lid in winking push it gradually toward the inner side, and when it comes in contact with the mote which is causing the irritation, this is carried along and finally expelled with it. The belief that such stones have a peculiar detective power, and move about in the eye, until they find and remove the irritating substance for which they have been "sent," has no foundation in fact.

It is interesting to know that in the lining membrane of the crawfish there are found small bodies which go under the names of "crab's eyes," and look not unlike the true eye-stones. They have sometimes been mistaken for them, and presumably would serve a similar purpose.—Scientific American.

An English Mummy.

A tomb has recently been opened in Canterbury Cathedral for the purpose of discovering which of the archbishops it is whose body it contains. This is known to be one of three: Theobald, who died in 1139; Hubert Walter, who died in 1204, and Stephen Langton, who died about 1227. The investigation has not settled the point in dispute to the entire satisfaction of every body; but the Society of Antiquaries in London have decided that the evidence is in favor of the body found in the tomb being that of Hubert Walter, who died in 1204, or nearly seven hundred years ago. The body found in the tomb, though it has been lying there nearly or quite seven hundred years, was in an extremely offensive condition; the smell arising from it was quite sickening, and unmistakably that of corrupt humanity. A number of articles of great antiquarian interest were found in the tomb and removed to the cathedral library. Most of these were in an excellent state of preservation. They were a silver chalice and paten as good as new, the archbishop's pastoral staff, a gold ring with large emerald having a curious device, silk boots ornamented with gold thread and garnets, a yellow silk miter and embroidered stole.

It appears to be easier to identify the remains of a distinguished personage of Egypt, who died four thousand years ago, than that of an English prelate dead for only seven hundred years. It might not be a bad idea to engrave upon the interior of the sarcophagus the name of the deceased.—Scientific American.

VOX POPULI.

A [illegible] party, [illegible] and [illegible] with growing authority, may [illegible] and adopt unwarranted measures for the continuance of partisan power, and for a time realize apparent success.

But it will be short-lived.

Because, fixed as well as market will out, and the fortunes of political parties [illegible] acquired, like those of individuals obtained by similar means, are [illegible] bitter fruit to the possessors.

[illegible] integrity is the only safeguard, and that applies as truthfully to politics as it does to business houses.

There is one fact now plainly observable, which it would be wise for unscrupulous politicians to heed.

And that is the growing spirit of independence manifested among honest men of every partisan name and in all sections of the country.

This may be derided by venal tricksters and artful managers within political cliques as merely a passing cloud—no larger than a man's hand.

But, hark?

Behind it can be distinctly heard the mutterings of thunder.

Never before did partisan bonds hang looser than at the present day.

The people, patriotic and respectable, are becoming disgusted with political duplicity and depravity, and in various ways are asserting their inherent privileges and sovereignty.

It is well to set and mark the signs.

A [illegible] blizzard is forming, which will [illegible] of time bring low and bury out of sight a horde of political wolves, now [illegible] around in sheep's clothing and seeking what they can steal and devour from honest labor.

A GRANITE STATESMAN.

There is a Republican Senator from the State of New Hampshire, renowned not by [illegible] and statesmanlike intelligence, but for unblushing [illegible].

Some time ago he concocted a bill designed to lavish money from the National Treasury for alleged educational purposes among the States.

In advocacy of that visionary idea he [illegible] no less than seven or eight days in a speech-making, the rules of the Senate permitting full scope for debate, and fellow Senators, or as many of them as could possibly keep awake, politely [illegible] the infliction he imposed upon them.

When he had blown himself out, the result was a negative vote that consigned his pet project to merited defeat.

Of all the Senators, the long talker from the Granite State ought to be the very last to [illegible] a gag-law.

Yet, now, when the tariff and other vitally important questions are under consideration and deserving of the fullest ventilation, we find that self-same gentleman proposing to so change the old established rules of the Senate as to cut off discussion.

Verily! Strange [illegible] inhabit the earth.

MUSIC IN THE AIR.

The Union Labor-Farmers Alliance Convention assembled at Lansing, Michigan, last week, and placed in nomination a full ticket for State officers.

The Convention adopted a series of ringing resolutions, which, after asserting that "the time had arrived when all lovers of reform should make themselves heard and felt," went on and declared among other things:

"That taxation, both National and State, should not be used to build up one interest, or class, at the expense of another."

That is a blow aimed directly at the McKinley tariff bill now before Congress, which Senator Plumb, of Kansas, a Republican, so vigorously denounces, and in regard to which the Detroit News [illegible] the Republican Congressmen from Minnesota for their silent [illegible], after the following fashion:

"This will not do."

"It is a cowardly evasion."

"The people of this State are thinking about this robber bill."

"The issue cannot be evaded by silence."

"It is already forced by the Alliance platform, which declares the bill to be the crowning infamy of protection."

"The subject will be taken up by the Democrats with an emphasis that will reveal all the deformity of the proposed law to increase instead of decreasing war taxes."

"It cannot be kept out of the campaign."

"[illegible] Republican gentlemen? [illegible]"

There will be music in the political air next November?

Realty Changing Owners.

The following transfers of real estate in the county have been recorded in the County Clerk's office since those last published in these columns:

Adeline B. Townsend and Henry F. Townsend of New York, to John [illegible], of Plainfield, lot on [illegible] avenue, Plainfield, [illegible].

[illegible] and wife, Wm. M. [illegible] and wife, all of Plainfield, to [illegible], wife of Egbert B. [illegible], Plainfield, lot on [illegible] avenue, Plainfield, [illegible].

John C. Walsh and wife of Washington, Morris county, N. J., to [illegible], lot on [illegible], Plainfield, [illegible].

[illegible] and Wm. F. [illegible], her husband, to John C. Walsh, of [illegible], Morris county, N. J., land on [illegible], Plainfield [illegible].

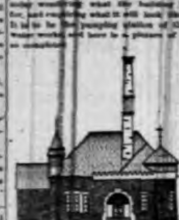
FOUR MILLION GALLONS A DAY.

A Description of the Pumping Station of the Water Works Company of Plainfield, and Its Capacity.

At last Plainfield's water works begin to make a show above ground. Passengers by train to and from New York, have been noticing during the last two weeks the growth of a massive stone building close to the track and a few hundred feet north of Netherwood station. The location is the very spot where the [illegible] described in THE PRESS, were made in the way of the big pipe wells that had been driven for the Water Works Company of Plainfield to supply this city. A thousand or two people are today wondering what the building is for, and speculating what it will look like. It is to be the pumping station of the water works and here is a picture of it as completed.



PUMPING STATION—PLAINFIELD WATER WORKS.

$25,000 has been spent already in the purchase of ground, and in preliminary tests and work beneath it; all of which, however, has made no show. In consequence THE PRESS is asked every day: "What's the reason they are not doing anything towards building the water works?" Saturday a reporter was assigned to find out. On the top of the mountain just where the Johnston Drive turns into the road to Scotch Plains, was found a gang of Italians breaking huge boulders into chunks of stone ready enough for them to lift. Foreman [illegible] who was in command courteously answered the reporter's inquiries. The stone, he said, was to be used in the construction of the pumping station and other necessary buildings for the Water Works plant. He could not say whether the Company's mammoth standpipe were to be located on that spot, or not, but knew of no better place. It was afterwards learned that Contractor Moore has purchased the tract of land from which his men are taking the stone; so probably the reservoir will be built there from where the fall and pressure would be all that could be desired.

A half-hour's ride on one of the company's stone-laden wagons, brought the reporter to the pumping station near Netherwood. Here other large gangs of men under [illegible] Doud, were busy in the hot sun. Expert drillers were connecting the twenty big wells with an enormous main; the loads of stone as fast as brought there from the mountain, were given to the masons, and the walls of the pumping station were steadily rising above the foundation that had already been finished. The picture above shows only the face of the building as it will be seen by any person looking towards it and the railroad that is behind it.

The plans are by B. Fouquet of this city, architect for the Central N. J. Land Improvement Company. The entire building except the roof and chimney, will be of native mountain stone, as it is called, just as it is taken from the quarry and laid in pure cement. The window sills and other trimmings will be of dressed [illegible] stone. The roof-frame and rafters will be iron and covered with red slate. The building alone will cost $9,000, and its dimensions will be 70 feet wide by 40 feet deep. It will be 40 feet high to the peak of the roof, with a chimney 100 feet to the top. This chimney will be of brick with a flue 3 feet 8 inches square, and an iron ladder inside will reach from bottom to top.

The entrance to the building will be up five steps 12 feet long, and into a handsome vestibule with open fireplace [illegible]. In the left of the building, looking at the picture, will be the coal [illegible], containing pockets of a capacity of [illegible] tons. Cars on tracks will run from the mouth of the pockets to the boiler doors. There will be two pumping engines placed in the centre of the building. They will cost $16,000 and have a capacity of two million gallons each, every 24 hours. There will be four boilers of 200 horse power, to run these monster pumps. The corner of the building to the right, will be built in the shape of a tower. There will be Col. Moore's private office, 12 by 18 feet, fitted with all the modern conveniences and furnished with every luxury.

The grounds at the back of the building will be terraced up the railroad embankment, and laid out in beds of flowers around a handsome fountain. The front, which is on North avenue, will also be made attractive with pretty lawn and flowering shrubs. It is expected that the pumps will be ready to run in a very few weeks now.

[illegible] Run All Their Own.

Certain Councilmen who are [illegible] by their [illegible] that they preferred [illegible] decency, [illegible] the police board that appointed Captain Carey, a Republican, and [illegible] for his successor Captain Grant, another Republican, of expelling the former because he was a Republican. Of course there were no "politics" in the efforts of the "Little 4" to sweep Carey [illegible].

[illegible] Will be Crossed.

At the last meeting of the Council, a resolution was passed authorizing a call for proposals for an electric fire alarm telegraph system for this city. That a system of [illegible] is needed is beyond question. For a city the size of Plainfield to depend upon the ringing of bells and the shouting of "Fire" through the streets, is behind the times, and is not in the line of wise and economical management, for a few minutes delay in ringing an alarm may at any time cause a loss of property greatly greater than the cost of a good system of Fire Telegraph. A good water supply and an excellent fire department are of no use in suppressing a conflagration until the fact of its existence and the locality is made known.

The cost of furnishing our city with a system of [illegible] telegraph and the maintenance will be so small compared to the great benefits secured to the [illegible] [illegible], that there can be no [illegible] on the part of the Council in making the necessary appropriation. It is not only important, however, that the Council should decide upon securing a system, but also that the [illegible] [illegible]. In this [illegible] surely the best will be the cheapest, and that system only should be selected which has stood the test of time and will [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] operation.

PLAINFIELD'S FAME WORLD SPREAD.

A Review of Its Attractions, Its Beauties, Its Prosperity, Its Industries and Its Citizens, as Told by a PRESS Writer in The North American Review.

A few days ago the editor of the North American Review sent to THE PRESS for an article on Plainfield, to be honored with a place in the covers of that most widely discussed of all magazines in the World. The work of compiling such an article as would least [illegible] and most benefit the city, was entrusted to one of THE PRESS writers, and accepted, when completed, without question as follows. The people will all agree that the service has been well and truly rendered them.

The city of Plainfield is naturally fitted for what it mainly is, a city of homes for New York business men. It has always been known as an ideal suburban town, and its manufacturing advantages in addition have led to the location within its bounds of machine works that are widely known, and which draw a class of the best and most intelligent working people.

The complete census will show a population of about 12,000. More than half the residents are New York business men and their families. To carry the crowds of commuters over the twenty-five miles which separates the town from New York city, the Central New Jersey Railroad provides, besides thirty trains a day each way, two expresses known as the Plainfield expresses, which make the run to the city in less than an hour, and consist of special coaches of Pullman make. These cars, of which thirty or more commuters forming a private club have the exclusive use, are a new and attractive feature of travel between Plainfield and New York. There are three stations in the city, at Netherwood, Grant avenue and Evona, besides the main station on North avenue.

The advantages of Plainfield as a home are the beauty of its streets and private parks and gardens, the churches, among the wealthiest, and the schools, the best in the State. The wide streets are all macadamized, and miles of shade trees in full growth line them on each side, there being several streets shaded from end to end of their three miles' length. At the junction of Broadway and Crescent avenue is an open place. On the east of the city is Netherwood Heights, where are a great Summer and Winter hotel, a popular resort of New Yorkers, and a group of costly residences. On the West lie successive ranges of the Blue Mountains. On the highest point of the First Mountain, three miles from the town, is Washington's Rock, of historic interest, and commanding all the plain below to the sea and as far North on clear days as the towers of Brooklyn Bridge. On the hills South of Netherwood Heights is the pretty Hillside cemetery. Beyond the hills and mountains on each side is a rolling country, dotted with towns and villages, the farming population of which daily furnishes the city with fresh vegetables and fruits. The peach country is but four miles distant. On the North stretch away the new county roads, solidly built, and ending only till the county lines are reached.

Private improvements have followed the model of the natural surroundings of the city. Everything is on a generous scale. There is not a dwelling house in the town which somewhere does not have its garden and lawn. Many grounds covering a block or half a block are elaborately laid out with walks, rare trees, plants and bushes. One private park, the home of a former railroad president, stretches up the mountain side for nearly half a mile. In no other town probably can be seen so many beautiful examples of modern architecture, from buildings for business purposes and cosy workingmen's homes to residences of princely proportions, the homes of bankers and merchants of New York. Apartment houses after the newest models have been erected on some of the more exclusive streets. They are lighted by electricity, and apartments of ten or twelve rooms in these houses can be rented at about half the charge for a six-room flat in New York. Several miles of streets are built up with small houses and cottages, rented at moderate rates.

The Common Council of Plainfield aims to pursue a wise and conservative, but enterprising policy. There is no city debt, and taxes are applied strictly to running expenses and for improvements. The streets and roadway are the city's principal care. The fire department has been made efficient and is kept in thorough drill. High license, with proper restrictions, is the city's present policy toward the liquor traffic. Among improvements under way are water works to be in running order by next year. Twenty-five miles of pipe will be laid and two hundred and fifty hydrants located. The supply will be from six wells tapping an apparently inexhaustible underground spring, from which private wells in the city have for years drawn their supply. No disease traceable to bad water has ever had a chance to spread in Plainfield. The flow of the underground spring is from Northwest to Southeast. The wells have been sunk North of the city, and away from all possible sources of contamination, if that were a possibility. A deep bed of sand and gravel underlies the surface soil, and acts as an excellent filter for all surface water.

Other public improvements will be the early introduction of a street car line and of a sewerage system. The town is lighted by incandescent electric lights, extending to the suburbs of Netherwood and Evona. A city hall is about to be built or purchased. North Plainfield, which is really a part of Plainfield, is under a separate government, because in another county. The liberal policy pursued by the sister city is followed by the borough council of North Plainfield. A macadamized drive over the First Mountain has been built, and another drive extends through the "Notch," as it is called, a mountain gorge of surpassing beauty.

There are two Presbyterian, two Episcopal and three Baptist churches, a Methodist, Trinity Reformed, Quaker and Unitarian church, besides churches of lesser denominations and chapels which are branches of other churches. The Catholics have two churches and a parochial school. A live and healthy religious life prevails among the residents and forms one of the chief advantages of the city as a suburban home. The Crescent Avenue church has two branch chapels and several more are maintained by the Baptists and Methodists. The Methodist, Presbyterian and Baptist Sunday school chapels are modeled after the latest ideas in church architecture. The Seventh Day Baptist church, one of the oldest and best known of its order, is building on Central avenue a new church of stone to cost $35,000. The school buildings all embody the newest and most practicable ideas in educational architecture. The seating accommodations are ample and the corps of teachers have been educated in modern methods of instruction. The high school has graduated men and women who have already made their mark in the world of business, literature and law. There are private schools, kindergartens, seminaries and preparatory academies. The public library and art gallery is the gift of Job Male, Mayor of the city and foremost among its public-spirited citizens. The collection of books is already large and new ones are added every month while each year sees valuable accessions to the art gallery, in which annual exhibits are held. Artists have been drawn to the town whose names are familiar in metropolitan art circles. Among the societies devoted to the progress of culture are the Plainfield Choral Society and the Monday Club.

The Muhlenberg Hospital, supported by gifts and contributions of the public, has an elegant home on South avenue. A staff of local physicians is in constant attendance. Chronic diseases, and those contracted by impure air or water, are rarely treated at the hospital, the larger number of cases being the result of accidents in the machine works. Railroad accidents are fewer than in other towns, as the tracks are elevated through the city. Other public buildings are the hotels, old-established hostelries, and the projected Casino in a fashionable quarter of the city. At the Casino the assembly balls and great society events will be held. The Young Men's Christian Association is building a three-story structure on Front street, to be a model home and complete in every appointment. There are two music halls, one with a seating capacity of 1,500, and a great skating rink in which public entertainments on an extensive scale are held. The headquarters of the Saenger Bund on Somerset street is beautified by a front of carved stone. The Crescent League, in which are enrolled all the men prominent in business and social circles, already has its club home on Second street. The Plainfield Bicycle Club has just completed a gymnasium as an addition to its own pretty little club house. On Netherwood Heights a public park is to be laid out, while, to complete the circle of outdoor enjoyments there are cricket, base ball and foot ball grounds, and boating may be practised on Tier's Lake and at several other places near the city.

Plainfield lies between New York and Philadelphia. Two express companies serve the town, and there are five or six mails a day from New York city. All trains on the Baltimore & Ohio route to Washington, the West and South, stop at the main depot. In addition, Plainfield is in near connection with the Lehigh Valley, Pennsylvania and Philadelphia & Reading Railroad systems. All these advantages, with the natural one of contiguity to the Pennsylvania coal fields, have resulted in the establishment in the town of three machine works, two of which manufacture the famous Scott and Potter Web printing presses. Mr. Walter Scott built his factory a few years ago, and Charles Potter, Jr., erected his extensive works some time before Mr. Scott located in Plainfield. The Pond Machine Tool Company, which holds government contracts, moved to Plainfield from Massachusetts. A careful canvass was made by the company of all the towns near New York before it decided to move. Different cities pressed their claims, including such formidable rivals as Newark and Paterson. The city of Plainfield was found to be superior to all the others. The new company met at once with a hearty reception. A fine school house was erected in the part of the city in which its works were built, the streets were graded, and in other ways the city extended to the company the same welcome which it will give to all new manufacturing industries.

Other industries have been profitably run in the city. Factories for making oil cloths, carpets, wall paper rolls, flour and grain foods have been long in operation. New companies have recently been incorporated with the intention of building factories in Plainfield. All these industries furnish employment to that desirable class of working people who do not detract in the least from the advantages of the town as a home for business men. Their well-kept gardens and the neat houses they own add to its beauty, while in public emergencies they join with the best classes. General society more agreeable, life pleasanter and more free, environments more healthful or full of contrasts cannot be found in another suburban town near New York. The people are cultured and hospitable and generous patrons of all deserving objects.

WANDERED AWAY AGAIN.

Benjamin B. Newton Once More Escapes and Cannot Be Found.

Benjamin B. Newton, who, at one time held a responsible position in the Reading Railroad, and who was sent to Dr. Preston Jones' Asylum at Merchantville, N. J., about the first of June, 1890, because of a brain affection, escaped from that institution on Tuesday, July 29, up to the present time has not been heard of.

Mr. Newton's home is in this city with his sister, Mrs. George H. Goddard, and it was there that he spent most of his time when away from his business. Several times he wandered away from home and did not return until his relatives made search for him.

When they would find him he would seem to be in a dreamy condition, not knowing anything about himself or anything else. In these conditions he could be led home like a child. His actions of course worried his family and they sent him to Dr. Jones for treatment.

He has seemed very good-natured and manageable while there and never has been violent. Saturday July 26, says the Philadelphia Item, his brother from New York came to see him in company with Mr. Newton's fiancee. The affected man and the lady sat on the porch together reading and chatting and he seemed very rational.

Tuesday evening Mr. Newton sat on the veranda with an attendant. The latter was called into the house for a moment, and when he came out he found the patient gone.

The attendant at once went to the railroad station and there learned that the man had bought a ticket and taken passage on the 6:26 train for Philadelphia. The conductor remembered seeing Mr. Newton on the train, but did not know whether he got off the cars before reaching the city. The police are now searching for the man.

Bishop Foster in Plainfield.

During next Sunday, August 10, Bishop Foster, one of the ablest and most eloquent ministers in this country, will occupy the Rev. Chas. B. Mitchell's pulpit in the Methodist Episcopal church morning and evening. Ample arrangements will be made for the convenience of the large number who will improve this opportunity of hearing this eminent clergyman.

Supposed Mad Dogs in Dunellen.

The other day Mr. Hurlick's dog, that had been tied up a year in Dunellen, broke loose, tore through the streets, knocked down Mr. Richter's little daughter, and bit a man who works for Firm' Glue. Dr. Champney who tended the girl, says she is only bruised, but the man is undoubtedly bitten. The dog was killed.

Next day a strange dog was seen near the roundhouse, and remembering the casualty of the day before the inhabitants turned out and killed it on general principles.

Plainfield Will Play Westfield on a Week Day.

The people of Westfield, we understand, are counting a great deal on the [illegible] series of ball games between their club and the Crescents. One game, however, would satisfy them.—Plainfield Press.

The one game mentioned in the above paragraph is wholly arranged and will be played on the grounds of the Westfield Athletic Club on Wednesday September 10th. We agree entirely with our Plainfield contemporary that this one game will probably satisfy, as far we mean to win it. The object in trying to arrange two or more games was purely one of charity to the Crescents. We would not want to beat them and then not let them have a chance to retaliate.—Westfield Standard.

Easily made. A cheap and delicious drink for 25 cents can be made from Hires' Root Beer Packages. Five gallons. Be careful that you get the real, genuine "Hires'." There are a number of would-be Root Beer packages on the market.

HOUSES ON OUR MOUNTAIN TOPS.

Another Scheme of Capitalists to Capture Washington Rock.

Many Plainfielders believe, and President Maxwell is said to have admitted that he has been planning just such an arrangement, that as soon as the Central Railroad of New Jersey completes its proposed new route from Fanwood to Orange it will construct a spur connecting North Plainfield with Scotch Plains and Westfield. One of the purposes of such a line would be, it is said, the development of Washington Rock as a resort. A terminal station would be erected at the foot of the mountain, just below the Rock, and the road to the summit would be perfected. Mountain stages would convey people up and down the ascent, and the big four-story hotel, with its four hundred feet of frontage, its broad esplanades, and high pagoda towers, already projected by New York capitalists, would be built. A road would be cleared and macadamized along the summit, and building lots would be staked off for the expected builders of Summer villas on the heights.

Another scheme that is talked of by some, in connection with the Rock, is the construction of a gravity railroad from the Rock itself to Scotch Plains. This may be purely visionary. The suggested spur of the Central's tracks, however, is confidently expected by those who know what solid men are arranging to take part in the enterprise.

"Whether the promised development is made soon or late, or whether it is never made,"—says a citizen interested in the scheme—"the fact remains that when a hotel stood on the commanding site near the Rock the place could have been made, by judicious ventures and the building of a railroad spur to the foot of the mountain, a famous and thronged resort. As it was, before the hotel was burned, it was becoming noted as a splendid place to make sick tables well. One dying infant no sooner began to breathe the atmosphere of the place than he was able to hold his head up for the first time in weeks. The people seemed to thrive on the very air."

Before the Rock Hotel was burned, several years ago, a chief of its attractions was the powerful telescope in the observatory. Every one who has ever been at the Rock knows of the marvelous views it affords to the naked eye. Through this telescope one used to be able to see the time of day on the dial of the town clock in the old Dutch Reformed church in New Brunswick, twelve miles distant, and men could be distinguished in the rigging of vessels in Raritan Bay near the Amboys, while every line of the shipping in New York harbor was distinctly visible.

THAT NEW THOROUGHFARE.

The Borough Councilmen Interested and Active in the Matter of Opening a Broadway Over the Brook.

An informal meeting of the Street Committee of the North Plainfield Council was called for Monday night, to consider the matter referred to in the following message from Mayor Place submitted to the Council at its July meeting.

To the Borough Council:

I desire to call the attention of the Council to the importance of taking some action in connection with the City of Plainfield, in extending Peace street from the city limits through the Borough to such point in North Plainfield as may be deemed advisable.

The question is being seriously talked of by the City authorities, and Mayor Male is anxious that the street should be widened to the city limits, and that the Borough act in harmony with the City to accomplish this highly important improvement.

As to the wisdom of opening Peace street through the Borough—if the City will widen it to the limits, there can be no question. It would add much value to the property adjoining it, making a direct route to and from the depot, and not only this, but those living in that part of the Borough would have much shorter access to the depot and City than they now have.

I am informed that many owners of property, and residents upon the proposed street within the Borough, are very anxious to have it extended, and will render all the aid possible to that end. This improvement possibly could be accomplished with but little, if any, cost to the Borough, and be of great benefit to the property and residents East of Somerset street.

I therefore would recommend that the Street Committee, or a Special Committee, as in the judgment of the Council may seem best, be empowered to investigate this matter, confer with the Plainfield city authorities, and report thereon as soon as practicable.

CHARLES PLACE, Mayor.

July 9, 1890.

Councilman Hegeman and Smalley with the Mayor and Clerk Brokaw, were the only ones present at eight o'clock. Councilman Buckle arrived a few minutes afterwards, and he and Councilman Hegeman adjourned the meeting for one week just before the arrival of Councilman Needham the third member of the Street Committee.

The proposed opening of Peace street is a matter of much importance to all the people of the Borough, and the Committee is desirous of receiving an expression from everyone interested, whether in favor or not. The Boroughites would then have a handsome thoroughfare from station to mountain, and would be compelled no more to pick a way through crowded Somerset street and the dangers of Park avenue. Between Westervelt avenue and Somerset street, a very long distance, there is now no outlet; whereas the cutting of Peace street through would open up frontage, create corner lots, develope a great deal of desirable property now almost worthless, and attract numbers of well-to-do residents.

Turned Out to Die.

The police arrested a mule Thursday for vagrancy and locked him in Roberts' stables over night. This morning some one claimed him, or he might, like other wanderers, have been ordered out of town.

The man who had said 'twas his afterwards disowned him, and the mule is still a well e red for outcast. He is very bony and homely, and some one has probably turned him out to die.

The mule is said to be the property of James Perrine.

Didn't Need Excursion Tickets.

Frank Lally and Edward Reilley, two young bloods from Elizabeth, visited this city, Tuesday, made the rounds of the barrooms, and by night were sufficiently intoxicated to find great pleasure expressing themselves, on the streets, before decent people, in profuse profanity. They called passers-by most objectionable names, and offered to whip the town. They were arrested and taken before City Judge Codington, who sentenced them to twenty days imprisonment in the county jail. Next morning they had a free ride house, and will board for nothing for two weeks.

Just One Piece of Iron That Weighed 16 Tons.

Parts of the first of the series of immense gun lathes to be used at the Government works at Troy in turning the monster guns for the United States Navy, were cast at The Pond Machine Tool works, Wednesday afternoon, July 30, in presence of a PRESS reporter and other invited guests. The Pond Company was last Spring awarded the contract for the construction of the lathes, which are to cost $25,000 each, and since their preparations for the first casting have been continuous.

The flow of molten metal into the intricately-designed matrices, with all their complex niceties of construction, was marvellous. One casting, called a table, weighed about 16 tons. Each of the castings as are imperfect will be broken into fragments and remelted. The perfect ones will be polished down and adjusted. It is expected that the first lathe will be completed and perfected within a few months. The company had three years in which to complete its contract.

BRIDAL AND SILVER WEDDING.

A Double Celebration at the Sans Souci Villa.

The wedding of Robert F. R. Huntsman to Miss Leontine Lisnignolo, occurred at high noon Monday at Sans Souci Villa, the home of the bride's parents, Mr. and Mrs. George A. Lisnignolo, on East Front street. The occasion was also the twenty-fifth anniversary of the marriage of Mr. and Mrs. Lisnignolo, and the affair was made a very pretty double celebration.

The marriage ceremony was conducted by the Rev. Dr. D. J. Yerkes, pastor of the First Baptist church. The bride was handsomely attired in a traveling costume of Gobelin blue broadcloth and faille, with bonnet to match. She carried a tastefully arranged bouquet of sweet pea blossoms. The maid of honor, Miss Augustine Lisnignolo, sister of the bride, wore pink faille and white lace. The "best man" was John F. Huntsman, of Providence, R. I., brother of the groom.

Owing to the fact that Mrs. Lisnignolo has recently been in mourning for her mother, only immediate relatives took part in the quiet festivities that followed the ceremony.

At the wedding breakfast the bride's cake was daintily served with snow-white souvenirs, while with the bon-bons were distributed mementoes in silver, in token of the anniversary day.

Amid showers of congratulations the bride and groom were driven away by carriage to board an early afternoon train for a wedding trip of several weeks. A musical programme composed especially for the silver wedding, was rendered after their departure.

Among the guests from Plainfield were Mrs. D. O. Wotherspoon, Mrs. Ferdinand Ruttmann, Miss Schipper, the Misses Butler, Mrs. D. J. Yerkes, Miss Yerkes, Mr. and Mrs. L. V. F. Randolph, the Misses Randolph, E. M. Strile, Mr. and Mrs Judson Bonnell, Mr. and Mrs. Walter Irving Clarke, Miss Hellwig, Miss Maire, Dr. C. H. Thiers, Miss Pellstreau.

From out of town were Mrs. Charles Brown of Jersey City; Mrs. Eschen of Brooklyn; Carl Faber of Brooklyn; Otto Meyer of New York; John Montrose of Clinton, N. Y.; Mr. and Mrs. L. F. Dunn, Mrs. J. A. Murdoch, Mrs. N. Garwood, Fred Garwood, Mr. and Mrs. John Russell, of Newark; the Misses Hunter of East Orange; Mr. and Mrs. John F. Huntsman and Miss Huntsman, of Providence, R. I.; Miss Marie Jobert of Newark; Mrs. John J. F. Randolph of Brooklyn; Miss Randolph of New York, Miss Mulligan of Newark.

The maid of honor and "best man" were each presented with a silver four-leaf clover.

The ceremony occurred in the open bay-window of the East parlor, which was transformed into a bower of wild flowers.

THEY WEREN'T IN IT.

The Brooklyn Ridgewoods Break the Crescents' Hearts.

If anybody was much surprised at the result of Saturday's game, it is not the fault of THE PRESS. Saturday's PRESS said the Ridgewoods were "loaded to kill." The score below shows this prophecy was fulfilled.

It was a battle of pitchers, principally. Livingston, whom the Crescents laid off two months ago was in the box against them and he had them at his mercy. But Gregg was hit in bunches. Still all the luck was with the visitors. Long flys dropped in their fielders' mittens, and short hits came with a high bound into Gatens' and Livingston's hands.

The home team played with broken hearts, and their three errors were costly. Martin's muff spoiled a double play that would have closed the first inning with only two runs. Wiegand's muff and Jones' wild throw to third let in another run. The Crescents Saturday were like the man who fell out of a balloon—they weren't in it.

Lew Johnson umpired again. The Crescents have lost every game in which he officiated. He was substituted for Bowman, it is said, because the latter would not stand close to the catcher with a muzzle on. Johnson stood most of the time—even when there were no runners on the bases—back of the pitcher, and was very unsatisfactory in his judgment. One strike that he called on Lee was a ball way above his shoulders. The people hissed and groaned for a minute over it. The score was:

A Victim of Rum Runs Wild.

A strange man was found roaming aimlessly about in the woods near Scotch Plains, yesterday, by Constable Hand. He was trembling as if with ague, and jabbering queerly. He was brought to Plainfield and given a cell in the lock-up, where he is being treated for delirium tremens. He says his name is John Connors.

The vicissitudes of climate are trying to most constitutions, especially to people having impure blood. For all such (and they constitute the majority), the best safeguard is Ayer's Sarsaparilla, the use of which cleanses the blood and strengthens and invigorates the system.

Catarrh

Is a blood disease. Until the poison is expelled from the system, there can be no cure for this loathsome and dangerous malady. Therefore, the only effective treatment is a thorough course of Ayer's Sarsaparilla—the best of all blood purifiers. The sooner you begin the better; delay is dangerous.

"I was troubled with catarrh for over two years. I tried various remedies, and was treated by a number of physicians, but received no benefit until I began to take Ayer's Sarsaparilla. A few bottles of this medicine cured me of this troublesome complaint, and completely restored my health."—Jesse M. Boggs, Holman's Mills, N. C.

"When Ayer's Sarsaparilla was recommended to me for catarrh, I was inclined to doubt its efficacy. Having tried so many remedies, with little benefit, I had no faith that anything would cure me. I became emaciated from loss of appetite and impaired digestion. I had nearly lost the sense of smell, and my system was badly deranged. I was about discouraged, when a friend urged me to try Ayer's Sarsaparilla, and referred me to persons whom it had cured of catarrh. After taking half a dozen bottles of this medicine, I am convinced that the only sure way of treating this obstinate disease is through the blood."—Charles H. Maloney, 113 River st., Lowell, Mass.

A Good Opening for a Bright Young Man.

In arranging [illegible] for Fall Watson & Co., the celebrated Newark Clothiers have an opening for a bright active young man, who has a large acquaintance in this vicinity, to visit their customers from this town. Knowledge of the business not necessary, as Watson & Co. only wish their salesmen to wait on their customers nicely and fit them correctly.

Apply to [illegible], General Manager, Sales Department, Geo. Watson & Co., Broad and Market Sts., Newark.

That distension of the stomach which many feel after eating, may be due to improper mastication of the food; but, in most cases, it indicates a weakness of the digestive organs, the best remedy for which is one of Ayer's Pills, to be taken after dinner.

Tribulations With a Scotch Plains Horse.

A little woman seated in a very low wagon and driving a very tall horse stopped on East Second street Thursday, in a peck of trouble. The horse was so far above her that she had to hold her arms high above her head in her efforts to keep the reins out of reach of the animal's tail, and that these efforts were necessary her morning's experience had taught her. She had hired the rig at Scotch Plains, and had not reached Netherwood before the horse had captured the reins five times, and each time he had backed across ditches, through fences and almost through the earth before the little woman could recover a hold on the situation. Coming through Plainfield her experience had been worse, and she gladly hailed the first disengaged small boy she saw and hired him to take the rig back to its owner. She walked the rest of her journey, and went back to Scotch Plains by stage.

SPEER'S
GRAPE WINES,
ALSO
UNFERMENTED GRAPE JUICE.

Used in the principal churches for communion. Excellent for females, weakly persons and the aged.

ADOPTED IN HOSPITALS AS THE BEST FOR INVALIDS.

Speer's Port Grape Wine,
FOUR YEARS OLD.

THIS Celebrated Wine is the pure juice of the dead ripe Oporto Grape, raised in Speer's vineyards, and left hang until they shrink and become partly raisined before gathering. Its invaluable are unsurpassed by any other Wine. Being produced under Mr. Speer's own personal supervision, its purity and genuineness are guaranteed by the principal Hospitals and Boards of Health who have examined it. The youngest child and the weakest invalid's use it to advantage. It is particularly beneficial to the aged and debilitated and suited to the various ailments that affect the weaker sex.

Tonic and Strengthening Properties

It is in every respect a WINE TO BE RELIED ON.

Speer's Unfermented Grape Juice

Is the juice of the Oporto Grape, preserved in its natural fresh, sweet state as it runs from the press by fumigation and electricity, thereby destroying the exciter of fermentation. It is perfectly pure, free from spirits, and will keep in any climate.

Speer's (Socialite) Claret

Is held in high estimation for its richness as a Dry Table Wine, especially suited for dinner use.

Speer's P. J. Sherry

Is a Wine of superior character, and partakes of the rich qualities of the grape from which it is made.

Speer's P. J. Brandy

IS A PURE distillation of the grape, and stands unrivalled in this country for medical purposes. It has a peculiar flavor, similar to that of the grapes from which it is distilled.

See that the signature of ALFRED SPEER, Passaic, N. J., is over the cork of each bottle.

SOLD BY DRUGGISTS WHO KEEP FIRST CLASS WINES.

CITY DEPARTMENT.

OFFICIAL PAPER OF THE STATE, THE COUNTY AND THE CITY, AND HAS THE LARGEST CIRCULATION OF ANY PAPER PUBLISHED IN THE COUNTY OF UNION.

A. DEMAREST, - - City Editor.

—The Judge Ned Circle, of the Holy Cross church, North Plainfield, has donated $20 to the floating hospital fund of St. John's Guild, New York city.

—Much profit awaits the man who will build a public bath in this city, and [illegible] boys of seven years old and over, and girls, can receive instruction in swimming.

—Jacob Bruner was knocked down on Park avenue, on Tuesday, by a horse and phaeton belonging to Counselor [illegible]. He rolled out of harm's way and thus escaped being run over.

—A cask of wine, eight feet long and four feet across in diameter, arrived for Charles Bock, Saturday. It weighed 3,370 pounds yet Wm. Tune lowered it into Mr. Bock's cellar with ease. It contained 400 gallons, and came from California.

—A Borough Councilman and a Park avenue merchant were speeding their horses the other day faster than the law allows. Thomas [illegible], Chief of Police over the brook, made the charge and Mayor Flynn fined the two road [illegible] $5 each.

—A race for a $200 purse has been arranged between the horses of Dennis O'Brien, of this city, and John [illegible], proprietor of the Clarendon Hotel, Bound Brook. The race will take place on the track of the Driving Park Association, Saturday afternoon at two o'clock. Three heats, best 2 in 3, will decide who wins.

—The "Gorhams" are the best colored team in the country today, with possibly the exception of the "Yorks" who include many of the former "Cuban Giants." The "Gorhams" and "Cuban Giants" of this year, are not to be classed together. The former can out play the latter in every way. On Saturday afternoon the "Gorhams" will play the Crescents in this city.

What He Said.

A hard story is told of a worthy deacon of this city, who, in the absence of his wife, spent his Sabbath elsewhere. When he appeared at the bank, Tuesday morning, he was greeted with: "Hello! How much did you have to pay for that hat?" He said he had been at the [illegible].

Baby Pugilists Have an Encounter.

Two babies in one carriage quarreled [illegible] while their mother left them for a moment on the sidewalk in front of a Park avenue store. The [illegible] in pink [illegible] the ear of the one in white, and the one in white retorted by filling with [illegible] the eyes of the one in pink. [illegible] grew hotter, and they [illegible] each other like Brewer pigeons. [illegible] the mother rushed out and separated them one had his cheek and forehead badly scratched, and the other's [illegible] was bleeding.

A Little Tot's Close Call.

Freddie Perrine, seven years old, slid through the hay mow hole in a stable on Sycamore street, Saturday evening where his father, who is an employee of A. D. Cook & Bro., was putting up his horse. The lad fell 12 feet and struck on the side of his head above the temple.

He was not at first unconscious, but compression of the brain resulted and convulsions set in. These continued [illegible] Sunday, and at one time the lad's life was despaired of. City Physician Manning, however, who has the case in charge, Monday brought the boy out of danger.

She Started for Home but Was Carried to the Hospital.

Katie Rogers, a young woman [illegible] out of her 'teens, who was carried to Muhlenberg Hospital on a stretcher, [illegible] night, is much better today.

Katie, who is employed in the household of a Washington Park family, was on her way home with a companion, Mary Mullen, when as she passed through Emily street [illegible]. They stopped at the [illegible] of Wm. H. Shotwell and asked for a glass of water. While it was being brought Katie was seized with a hemorrhage. Dr. [illegible] was called and his treatment was in every way successful.

It was not until some hours after that the patient could be removed to the Hospital, and even then she was too weak to be put in a hack. She was carried on an improvised stretcher. It was the first time she ever had such an attack and the Hospital [illegible] fully recover.

[illegible] Mr. Watt's Impressions [illegible]

Charles Watt, of Netherwood, will sail for Glasgow on the 13th inst., returning, however, in September from the land of his birth to spend another Winter in Plainfield. Mr Watt is the gentleman who was so provoked when the Rev. Mr. Simpson announced from the pulpit of the Netherwood chapel that a generous contributor had given $50 to the church with the desire that no mention be made of it. Mr. Watt said that Mr. Simpson had no right to speak of the matter in public at all, and was indignant at what he called the pastor's breach of trust and confidence.

An effort was recently made to induce Mr. Watt to deliver a lecture on "A Scotchman's Impression of New York." His ripe experience, fluency of thought and the remarkable purity of his English, specially fitted him to comply with the request. Although an exceedingly diffident and retiring man, Mr. Watt proved again the truth of Solomon's saying, "You'll never find a coward where the Shamrock grows." Everybody was pleased and expectant. However, just as the date approached, Mr. Watt called the committee's attention to a proviso he insisted upon. "Ladies positively not admitted," he said. The result was, the money was refunded to those who had already purchased tickets, and the lecture is postponed.

There has been some alarm created among the residents in the East end of the city's limits, by signs of burglars, and the other night a [illegible] thought to be a thief trying to enter the house, was shot at by the owner.

Mrs. David Jones has often missed things from her back stoop and out of the refrigerator that stands there. Some time ago Edward Cuff was found there. He is a young colored man, of [illegible] years, who has lately completed a [illegible] years' term in the Jamesburg Reform School where he was sent for a robbery in this city. He is now living around the neighborhood referred to. His father is Thos. Cuff, and the family occupy a [illegible] in the Stony Hills woods.

Early in last month the house of [illegible] Fiske, in the neighborhood of Woodland and Highland avenues, was entered by someone who broke out a pane of glass and unlocked a window. A lot of jewelry and other things were taken. Officer [illegible] caught Cuff with some of them on him that Mr. Fiske identified as some of the missing property. Upon his giving up what he said was all he took from the house, Cuff was allowed to go free. But [illegible] has his eyes on him [illegible] complaints are being made of a [illegible] thief in that neighborhood.

The day of [illegible] for the [illegible] and health of her [illegible] been [illegible] than [illegible] has ever been produced. It [illegible] all the elements which are needed for the growth and development of an infant.

PERSONALS.

Fred Smalley will spend next week at Asbury Park.

Mr. and Mrs. Andrew Lowe, Jr., have gone to Bristol, Pa.

Miss Fowler of Orange is visiting Mrs. McIntyre of Central avenue.

The Rev. T. Logan Murphy and family will spend August at Belmar.

Thomas Hughes, of Langhorne's studio, has returned from Asbury Park.

Ex-Councilman Rowland M. Stover is quite ill at his home on Ninth street.

Miss Florence Metzger of Carlton avenue, is home again from the seashore.

Mrs. [illegible] Ryder and family, of East Front street, have gone to Dingman's Ferry.

Mrs. Wm. G. E. See, of East Front street, is at Ocean Spray Cottage, Belmar, with her son.

Miss McDowell of Stelton has returned home from a visit to Mrs. L. L. Manning of West Seventh street.

Mrs. D. J. Boice and Miss Boice, of Park avenue, have returned from a month's visit to the West.

Wm. Gulick of Clinton, has returned home from a visit to his son, Jacob Gulick, of North Plainfield.

Mr. and Mrs. James W. DeGraff (nee Millikin) are registered at the Wildmere House, Minnewaska, N. Y.

Miss Ella Titsworth, of Rochester, is visiting her cousin, Miss Florence Titsworth, of Madison avenue.

Samuel Huntington and family of Franklin place, will spend the coming few weeks at Norwalk, on the Sound.

The Rev. J. F. Taylor, wife and son, are back from Sullivan county, New York, and home again on Park avenue.

Mrs. S. B. Strothers of Madison avenue, has returned from an enjoyable visit with friends at Monument Beach, Mass.

The family of J. B. Higgins of West Second street, have gone to [illegible], Hunterdon county, for the month of August.

Miss Emma F. Angleman of Madison avenue, is visiting friends and relatives in Hunterdon county, for the month of August.

The second twin child of Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Wyckoff of West Second street died Thursday, soon after the burial of the first.

The Rev. and Mrs. W. E. Honeyman left on Thursday for Pine Hill, Ulster county, N. Y., where they will be at the Cornish House.

Hazel Mott, the infant daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Horatio M. Clark of North Plainfield, died at the home of its parents Saturday morning.

Wal Corwell, Edw. Petrie, Walter Darby and Fred [illegible], returned from Camp Plainfield, Hickory Island, Lake Hopatcong, Thursday.

Miss Hettie Rockwell of Plainfield, sailed on the steamer Puritan Thursday afternoon with the Somerville [illegible] party bound for the coast of Maine.

Mr. and Mrs. B. Burnett Rogers have the sympathy of the community in the loss of their infant son, George Clayton Rogers, whose death occurred Saturday morning.

Corporation Counsel Marsh sailed for Bremen, Saturday morning, on the steamer "Kaiser Wilhelm II." It will be his fourth semi-annual trip. He will be absent until September.

Hugh [illegible] and wife of Bridgewater, have transferred to Sarah A. Milliken of this city, land on Front street, 728 feet Northeast from Northeast line of Jefferson avenue, for $2,800.

John B. Wells of this city has transferred to John P. Emmons of North Plainfield, lots 17, 18, 19, 13 and 20, Southeast corner Midway avenue and Leland avenue, for a consideration of $800.

The excellent illustrations accompanying Helen Marsh's story of "A White Mountain Coaching Parade," in St. Nicholas for August, are the production of a Plainfield artist, George Wharton Edwards.

Miss Lizzie K. [illegible] of Evona, is suffering from a sprained wrist. The swaying of the railroad cars as she passed along the aisle, threw her against the back of a seat and caused the injury mentioned.

Suit has been brought in the Supreme Court, by Craig A. Marsh, counsel for Wm. Uhrbahn, against M. B. Long, M. D., for $10,000 damages alleged to have resulted from the latter's mistaken treatment of Mr. Uhrbahn's dislocated hip.

Clerk Clark of the Board of Education, is recovering so steadily from his late attack of paralysis that he is up and able to walk around. While he has been incapacitated, his son, Frank B. Clark, has filled the office with entire satisfaction to the Trustees.

C. H. Warner, business manager of "The Crank," a Cornell University publication, is spending some weeks in Plainfield. He has found the draftsmen's room of The Pond Machine Tool company's works the greatest of the city's attractions for him.

Andrew Mellick, Jr., of Broadway, has gone to Norfolk, Conn., for a month. Mr. Mellick has lost the use of his lower limbs, and cannot even sit up. He was carried to the cars here by his nurse, and changed at Easton to the New England road. His sister also accompanied him.

In a very eloquent speech Thursday, Dr. J. B. Probasco, on behalf of six fellow Knights of Trinity Commandery, presented Joseph G. [illegible] with a costly maltese cross jewel as a token of their undivided affection for him personally and their appreciation of his [illegible] system.

Architect Charles Smith of Grove street, left last week for Watertown, where a handsome [illegible] church is just being completed after his plans. The Park Avenue Baptist church here, is one of the best specimens of Mr. Smith's taste, talent and originality in church architecture.

Miss Georgia L. Chamberlin, of Madison avenue, is now Secretary of the College of Liberal Arts at Chautauqua, and Miss Kate Kimball is Secretary of the Reading Circle. Bishop Vincent is for a time compelled to be absent from the University, but Mrs Vincent remains in the Vincent cottage on the lake front throughout the season.

In Harper's Young People of this week, is a three page article of intense interest on Homing pigeons, written by Charles E. Doane of this city, breeder of all the best celebrated birds including "Baby McKee" of The Press news service. The article is illustrated; one picture being from a photograph of Mr. Doane's pigeon house on East Fourth street.

George Taylor, the sugar broker—who is also one of the principal stockholders in the million-dollar company that control an extractor that rolls the butter right out of the fresh sweet milk—will sail for Europe next week to join his family. They will all return in the early Fall to Netherwood, where before snow flies Mr. Taylor expects to have a handsome new home.

Another of their successful progressive euchre parties was held by the guests of The Netherwood, on Thursday. Mrs. James B. [illegible] selected the prizes which included a Royal Worcester Vase, an elaborate fan, a gold bonbon spoon and a Royal Worcester chocolate pitcher for the ladies, with a gold-headed umbrella, a box of silk handkerchiefs, a silver [illegible] holder and a silver-backed clothes brush. These prizes were won respectively by Mrs. M. C. Ogden, Mrs. Wm. H. [illegible], Mrs. G. C. Ward, Miss Forbes and S. H. Tobey, S. C. [illegible], W. H. Williams and J. E. Spencer.

Miss Georgie Cornell of West Fourth street, has gone to Asbury Park.

Secretary J. H. Manning of the Y. M. C. A., has gone to Chautauqua for a week.

Russell Jacobus, of East Front street, and Ralph Opdyke, of Broadway, sail for Europe today.

Mr. A. K. Faber, Jr., and family, of Mercer avenue, are enjoying a short season at Belmar.

The Misses Holmes and the Misses Demarest, of East Fifth street, are at The Atlantic, Belmar.

The Misses Kate and Amelia Day, of Jersey City, are the guests of relatives in Washington Park.

James Haight, of Tottenville, Staten Island, spent Saturday and Sunday with friends in this city.

Mr. James L. [illegible] and family, of Franklin place, are at the Landsend Cottages, Point Pleasant.

Miss Mary Weil, of Washington avenue, left Saturday to spend a few weeks at St. Andrews, New Brunswick.

Assemblyman Ulrich has taken a cottage at Belmar, and with his family will spend the Summer there.

Miss C. E. Clark, of East Front street, has left for Cornwall, Conn. She will be absent about two weeks.

Mr. and Mrs. Chas. W. Case, formerly of Rockview avenue, are spending the summer at Narragansett Pier.

Mr. and Mrs. Morgan Taylor of this city, are among the recent arrivals at the Profile House, White Mountains.

The Misses Adelaide and Clara Whitfield of this city, will spend the month of August with relatives in Connecticut.

Miss Annie Harris, of Cranford, and Miss Lillian Hope, are visiting at the home of their grandfather, S. B. Hope.

Mr. and Mrs. John H. Doane and their son Willie, of La Grande avenue, have gone for a two weeks stay at Mt. Pocono, Pa.

Councilman Smalley of North Plainfield stands ready to give $200 towards the opening of Peace street through the Borough.

Mrs. D. A. Lowitz, formerly of this city, who has lately returned from Europe, is the guest of Mr. E. C. A. Woltmann, of Union avenue.

The Rev Howard P. Doane, member of Drew Seminary, is visiting his cousins, Mr. and Mrs. S. O. Doane, of East Fourth street.

Cashier Carman [illegible] of the First National, is enjoying the fresh breezes and cool nights at Pocono Mountain House, Mount Pocono.

Mrs. John H. Vincent, wife of the Bishop, has been called to Titusville, Penn., to attend the funeral of her brother, Wm. Dusenbury.

E. S. Gaylor, Assistant Superintendent of Pinkerton's New York Detective Agency, and his family, are the guests of Photographer Chas. Fisher.

John Mantz of this city, and Miss Lulu Beck, won the first prize in a progressive euchre party at The Fenimore, Asbury Park, last Wednesday evening.

Charles W. Fisher, of East Front street, has been confined to his home for the past three weeks as the result of an accident, but is now rapidly recovering.

Andrew Vanderbeek, Jr., and Joseph [illegible], have shipped boat and tackle and gone themselves to New Foundland for a genuine hunting and fishing trip.

Charles R. Pelletreau, for thirty years chief accountant of the Brooklyn City water works, and his wife, are visiting at the home of their son, R. C. Dingee, East Fifth street.

W. D. Johnson, brother of Councilman Johnson, is the contractor now engaged in building a number of houses at Lakewood in preparation for next Winter's promising season.

W. V. Steele, of this city, Prosecutor of Somerset county, has been appointed the attorney of the Powelton Barge company, and the Sterling Coal company of 31 and 33 Broadway, New York.

Chas. Hyde, as President of the City National Bank of Plainfield and of the Second National Bank of Titusville, Pa., is a member of the committee of creditors who are to supervise the liquidation of the business of H. S. Miller & Co., manufacturers of fertilizers at Newark and New York.

After a six-months' illness from a complication of diseases, Peter Dunn died at his home on West Front street, Saturday. He was in the 69th year of his age and had lived in Plainfield as long as anyone can remember. A widow is left to mourn his loss in which she has the sympathy of the many who highly esteemed him.

Theodore Smith of this city, and Miss Annie Burke of Dunellen, were united in marriage Monday morning at the home of the bride, by the Rev. T. L. Murphy, rector of the Church of the Holy Cross. They have gone to Washington, Baltimore, Niagara Falls and other places, and will take up their residence in this city upon their return.

Councilman Hetfield at Monday evening's meeting, asked when Supervising Engineer Hering had been in Plainfield. July 3 was date, if THE PRESS is not mistaken. And yet some blackguards try to make the people think that the Councilmen who fought against paying Mr. Hering $500 a month, are not working in the people's interests everytime.

The Rev. R. S. Holmes, formerly of this city, preached in the Crescent Avenue church, last Sunday, probably the two most remarkably eloquent sermons ever heard in this city. Mr. Holmes will occupy the same pulpit through the present month, and everybody should seize an opportunity of hearing him at least once. His sermons are unusually well finished in every way.

Terrence Pays For His Fun, and Wants Vengeance.

Catharine Day and Terrence McCaffry, neighbors in the First ward, were present in City Judge Codington's court room Tuesday afternoon to tell their respective sides of a story of trouble. Catherine accused Terrence of saying she was no lady and of calling her names which she as a self-respecting woman felt called on to resent. Besides, Terrence had threatened to do some very unpleasant, though ingenious things to Catherine, such as pulling all her hairs out one by one, and extracting her finger nails by the roots. Terrence said he was only in fun. The Court waxed into a poetical mood and quoted, dramatically:

But pleasures are like poppies spread;
You seize the flower, its bloom is shed,
Or like the snowfall on the river,
A moment white—then melts forever.

"Terrence," his Honor continued, "pleasures are expensive as well as ephemeral."

"What does that mean, Judge?"

"It means that you pay a fine of five dollars."

Terrence forfeited the money, but was determined to have revenge, so next morning he had a warrant issued for the arrest of Mrs. Day on the charge of abusing him with unladylike language. His sensitive ears had been shocked, he said, with expressions of great vulgarity and profanity. He made no objection to repeating the language.

Don't disgust everybody by hawking and spitting, but use Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy, and be cured.

DECENCY AND DISCIPLINE UPHELD.

THE COMMON COUNCIL FINALLY EXPELS OFFICER CAREY FROM THE POLICE FORCE.

All of the Big 6 Show by Their Votes Their Disapproval of Obscenity, and Insubordination, While the Little 4 Express Their Love of the Vulgar for Politics Sake.

Tunis J. Carey was dismissed from the Plainfield police force Monday night in disgrace. The Police Board reported to the Common Council his insubordination in refusing to do his duty as a regular policeman, together with his obscene and profane abuse of members of the Police Board and Common Council, and by a vote of six to four the ex-Captain was removed utterly from the office under whose cloak he has done such discreditable things.

In spite of the evidence, sworn to under oath, saluting their own ears, three members of the Council saw fit to pass encomiums on Carey's righteousness.

As soon as the motion to expel Carey from the force was before the Council, Mr Jenkins took the floor and asserted that Carey had been used in a mean manner by members of the Council. To such a remark Councilman Hetfield objected, holding that one member had no right to make improper reflections on the others. President Moffett also considered the remarks of Dr. Jenkins unparliamentary, and called him to order. But the speech of Councilman Jenkins was not to be curbed.

"Carey ought to be continued in office as Captain of Police," he said. "He was a good, honest, straightforward officer. The City of Plainfield owes him the place. His dismissal is a put-up job all the way through. Carey was a good, straightforward Republican. The Board of Police was composed of Democrats. They ousted Carey to get a Democrat in his place."

Councilman Hetfield arose in a blaze of indignation.

"I had not intended saying anything on this motion," he said, "but I must answer such a charge as this. To say that the Police Board has been actuated or is actuated by political motives is nonsense. That the Police Board is Democratic is true, but at its first meeting whom did it appoint as Police Captain but Republican Tunis J. Carey? And whom have they appointed as Carey's successor but Geo W. Grant, as good a Republican as the worthy Councilman himself."

Mr. Hetfield had no sooner made his answer to Dr Jenkins than Councilman Dunham drew himself together, mopped the perspiration from his beaming countenance, heaved a heavy sigh, and delivered himself of his little speech.

"I," said he, "I am opposed to the dismissal of Mr. Carey. Plainfield will hunt a good while before it succeeds in getting a man to fill his place. I know I am in the minority, but he was true; he was conscientious. I shall stand by him."

The expectant auditors seemed to think this but the exordium of a lengthy discourse, but after sighing heavily again Mr. Dunham said no more, and slowly sat down.

Councilman Rushmore evidently forgot himself for a moment and imagined himself in camp meeting, for he began in a solemn, sepulchral tone to speak about bearing "testimony."

Three gentlemen of dilapidated appearance on the back seat began to reach for their hats, but as Mr. Rushmore corrected himself and said nothing about bearing evidence to the blessings of temperance and religion, which was what they seemed to dread, they remained to hear him through.

"I wish to add my opinion," said Mr. Rushmore, "to the opinions already expressed. The charges against Mr. Carey are such as have arisen from personal motives. Eventually he will be sustained, will prevail with the right. I protest against these proceedings."

Then speech-making was at an end, and the voting that counts was begun.

The six votes for Carey's dismissal were those of Councilmen Gallup, Hetfield, Moffett, Roberts, Smith and Spangenberg. Councilmen Dunham, Jenkins, Johnson and Rushmore voted no. Councilman Newhall was absent.

On motion of Mr. Hetfield the City Clerk was instructed to notify Carey of his dismissal from the force.

The following is a copy of the document which was read before the Council and which resulted in a motion being made for Carey's expulsion;

To the Common Council of the City of Plainfield:

According to the provisions of the ordinance of the said City of Plainfield, entitled "An ordinance to regulate the Appointment and Tenure of Office of Appointable officers," as amended, and the act of the Legislature entitled "An Act to Amend Section One of the Act entitled 'An Act Respecting Police Departments of Cities, and Regulating the Tenure and Terms of Office of Officers and Men Employed in Said Department,'" approved March 23, 1885, providing that if any member of the police force of any city who shall be absent from duty, without just cause, for the term of five days, shall, at the expiration of said five days, cease to be a member of such police force; in pursuance of the above laws the present Captain of Police, George W. Grant, reported to the Police Board as follows:

"PLAINFIELD, July 8, 1890.

"To the President and Members of the Police Board:

"GENTLEMEN:—Inasmuch as the three months' suspension of ex-Captain of Police, Tunis J. Carey has expired, and as he has not yet reported for active service, I deem it my duty under the Police Board rules and regulations to report the matter to your honorable body.

"GEORGE W. GRANT,
"Captain of Police."

And also in pursuance of the above notice the Board caused a notice to be served on Tunis J. Carey, the following of which is a true copy:

"To Tunis J. Carey

"You are hereby notified to appear before the Police Board of the City of Plainfield at the office of Walter L. Hetfield, No. 19 Park avenue, in the city of Plainfield, on Saturday evening, July 12, instant, at 8 o'clock, and show cause, if you have any, why you should not be removed from the police force of the city of Plainfield, because of failure or neglect to perform police duty since the first day of July 1890. Done by order of the Board of Police on the eighth day of July 1890.

"WALTER L. HETFIELD, Sec'y.

"Dated July 8, 1890."

The last above notice is marked Exhibit A.

The Board of Police met at the office of Walter L. Hetfield, pursuant to notice, and the following is a true copy of the minutes of the meeting of said Board held on the said twelfth day of July 1890.

"JULY 12, 1890.

"The Police Board of the City of Plainfield met at the office of their Secretary Walter L. Hetfield, No. 19 Park avenue, pursuant to adjournment. Messrs. Roberts, Moffett, Spangenberg and Hetfield were present. The minutes of the last meeting were approved as read. Chairman Roberts inquired from Mr. Carey why he had not reported for duty on July 1, and he replied that it was none of his —— —— business. Foster Voorhees, Esq., was present with Mr. Carey as counsel; he stated that he was not his regular counsel, and asked for an adjournment.

"It was moved that Mr. Carey be requested to state before the Board why he had not returned to regular police duty on July 1. The motion was carried. Mr. Carey through his counsel declined to make any statement.

"Mr. Voorhees was shown the written charge of Captain George W. Grant.

"Mr. Thomas McCue being duly sworn according to law on his oath said that he was one of the regular policemen of the City of Plainfield. I served a notice, he continued, on Tunis J. Carey on Thursday, June 26, 1890, of which Exhibit A is a copy, between twelve and one o'clock on one day. Mr. Carey said to me when I served the paper that Mr. Hetfield could —— —— ——, and that he, Mr. McCue could take it back and tell Mr Hetfield to —— —— —— with it, [using the vilest and most indecent of language.]

"George W. Grant being duly sworn according to law on his oath said: I am Captain of Police of the City of Plainfield. As such Captain it is the duty of the regular policemen of the city to report to me for duty at the station house twice a day. Mr. Tunis J. Carey has not reported to me for police duty on July 1, nor since that time. On account of Mr. Carey's neglect or refusal to do police duty the city is short one policeman. The city has been short one officer since April 1. I have used specials part of the time. I would do it now. I have one on now on night-time, and had them on before July 1. Mr. Carey has not tendered himself ready for duty to me since April 1. I receive my authority as Captain from the Police Board. I presume Mr. Carey received his authority as Captain from the same Police Board. I have received compensation as Captain since April 1. Special policemen receive twenty-five cents an hour for whatever time they make. It is more expense to the city to employ special policemen than to pay a regular officer. There have not been any specials on regular policemen's pay since April 1.

"Testimony was declared closed.

"Mr. Voorhees on behalf of Mr. Carey declined or refused to show any cause, but presented written objections, which were received and ordered placed on file, and marked Exhibit B, as follows:

"'Mr. Carey now objects at the close of the case against him, as he did before the opening thereof, to the proceedings of the committee in the matter, on the ground of want of jurisdiction, illegal constitution and irregular method of procedure of the Committee so far as the subject matter of the action is concerned and the action thereunder contemplated, and hereby tenders himself, as he has heretofore tendered himself ready at all times to perform the duties of his office.'

"Mr. Hetfield inquired to what office he referred in his objections, and Mr. Voorhees said that he declined to state.

"It was moved that Mr. Tunis J. Carey be found guilty by this Board of absenting himself from police duty and refusing to perform regular police duty since July 1, instant, to the present time, without any cause shown by him.

"Mr Roberts voted aye; Mr. Moffett, aye; Mr. Spangenberg, aye; Mr. Hetfield, aye. Carried.

"It was moved that this Board deem that the charge of Mr. Carey absenting himself from regular police duty for the space of five days, justifies his dismissal from the police force of the City of Plainfield, and that this Board so report in writing to the Common Council at its next meeting.

"Mr. Roberts voted aye; Mr. Moffett, aye; Mr. Spangenberg, aye; Mr Hetfield aye. Carried.

"It was moved and carried that we adjourn subject to the call of the chairman.

"WALTER L. HETFIELD, Secretary."

We, the Police Board of the City of Plainfield, do most respectfully report to your honorable body that the charge of Tunis J. Carey absenting himself from duty for the space of five days and longer, without any cause shown when an opportunity was offered him, has been duly proved; and in our opinion, and under the laws, such absence justifies his dismissal from the police force of the City of Plainfield.

D. S. ROBERTS,
E. D. MOFFETT,
L. SPANGENBERG,
WALTER L. HETFIELD.

Dated August 4, 1890.

The rest of the business of the session was mainly routine work. Several important matters were left unfinished till the next meeting, Tuesday, August 12. Among the matters concluded before adjournment was the consideration of the resignation of Eugene A. Laine from the police force, which was accepted, and the investigation concerning the $200 submitted to Tunis J. Carey for use in the detection of illegal liquor-selling. A correspondence between Carey and Corporation Counsel Craig A. Marsh was submitted, showing that Carey had expended $73.50 "in detective work," and had on demand given a check for the balance, $126.50, to the City Treasurer. The papers in the case, together with an essay by Carey on the secret service, were placed on file.

The sixth report of progress of the Plainfield Water Works was made by Supervising Engineer, Rudolph Hering. The mains and branches connecting the twenty wells, the report stated, were all in position. All the work connected with the wells would soon be finished. The foundations for the building and chimney of the pumping station had been laid, and a site was being chosen for the tank reservoirs. The pipes and castings for the street mains were to be ordered in a very short time.

A resolution was adopted that the City Treasurer be instructed to demand of the Water Works company the $2,000 due for the months of July and August.

The Street Committee reported that they considered that the widening of Peace street, as suggested, would be a great public benefit, and recommended the appointment of a commission to assess damages that would result to property holders if the frontage of their property was abbreviated for street purposes. The matter was tabled.

The street roller at present used by the city was reported too light for Plainfield service, and bids for a new heavy roller were presented. The bid of the Pond Machine Tool Company offered a superior machine at by far the lowest figures, and was accepted.

The "Plainfield Street Railway Company" requested and received the privilege of inserting in their application for a franchise, a proviso that they use electric power.

The Board of Engineers of the Fire Department was empowered to employ three men at $10 per week each, to care for and drive the new horses.

Councilman Dunham moved that Corporation Counsel Craig A. Marsh be granted a month's vacation. Mr. Marsh had already reported that he had taken a vacation and had left his city business in charge of John H. Jackson, but the Council made Mr. Dunham happy by permitting his motion to prevail.

August H. Krohne, of Stebbins place, Michael F. Watson of Grant avenue, and Matthew Kilpatrick of West Sixth street applied for "quart" liquor licenses.

Councilman Rushmore said that charges had been made against these applicants that they had been selling without licenses, and moved that the Law and Ordinance Committee investigate.

Councilmen Smith held that no investigation could be made unless the charges were specific. Mr. Rushmore's motion was not seconded.

The ordinance compelling wheelmen to display lighted lanterns or ring a bell continuously while riding the city streets at night, was found to be defective because no penalty was attached, and was found to require a physical impossibility in insisting that the lighted lanterns should be seen from all sides, and was referred back to second reading for correction. It was jocosely suggested that the Corporation Counsel, who rides a wheel himself, had been careful to omit the penalty feature purposely.

The ordinance fixing Street Commissioner Robert A. Meeker's yearly salary at $1,500 was adopted on final passage.

The ordinance to grade and macadamize Belvidere avenue, making it an excellent driveway, was adopted on final passage. Councilman Jenkins wanted to know why the ordinance didn't bob up till after the work of grading and macadamization was all done, but he voted for the ordinance all the same.

In his perambulations as a physician Councilman Jenkins had run across an electric light way out in the meadows back of Broadway, and an investigation was ordered preparatory to having the light placed where it would do more good.

The Doctor Refuses to Compromise and Will Defend Himself.

Dr. M. B. Long upon being interviewed by a PRESS reporter in regard to the suit of Wm. Uhrbahn for $10,000 damages, says that he first learned that such a suit was to be brought on Friday last at about 11:30 A. M., when he received a note from Uhrbahn's counsel requesting him to call at the Counselor's office before 12 o'clock that same day.

In compliance with said request the Doctor went directly to the lawyer's office and was then informed that suit was about to be brought for $10,000 for malpractice, and if the Doctor would settle without suit it could be done for $2,500. He was given until 2 P. M. of that day to see counsel and answer whether or not he would pay the $2,500.

The Doctor says he would not pay the $2,500 or any other sum without knowing what he was paying it for; hence the suit. The Doctor's reputation as a physician stands high and beyond question, and he proposes to defend the same. He will therefore secure able counsel and at the proper time bring evidence to show that the case in question was treated in his usual skillful and careful manner, and will meet any charge that may be brought against him.

UNDER THE SHINING SUN AT MIDNIGHT.

President Murray Tells His Friends Through THE PRESS, a Story of His Travels.

THRONDHJEM?, NORWAY, July 21, 1890.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE DAILY PRESS: Inasmuch as some of my friends and some of your readers may be interested in hearing about this strange land of eternal daylight—during the summer—I will try to give you, very briefly, the story of our trip. We are anchored just now, for the purpose of coaling, at this town, in latitude 69° 30' north, so that a quiet time is given us for writing. But the whole voyage has been in quiet water and we have had no sea-sickness. Last Monday evening we sailed from Throndhjem—the ancient capital of Norway—with its old cathedral, where her kings are still crowned. We had the good fortune to secure staterooms on the "Olaf Kyrre," one of the vessels of the "Nordenfjeldske Dampskibsselskab—all which means the Northern Mountains Steamship Company. We had anticipated bad fare on board steamers here, and our surprise can be imagined when we found ourselves aboard this luxuriously furnished steam yacht, for that is really what it is. Captain, officers and stewards all speak English, so that we are quite at home. The fare is far ahead of that on the Cunard line. Every afternoon at two o'clock we have a table 'd hote of seven courses which would be a credit to one of our own famous hotels. Of course we have a gathering of the nations on board. There are Italian, English, American, German, French, Hungarian, Norwegian, Danish and other representatives. A great many of the foreigners speak English, but few of the English speak any other language.

Soon after leaving Throndhjem the scenery began to grow to the grandeur which we expected Norway to show, and while there was the variety which prevented monotony its general character was the same throughout. We sail between the main land and the islands, but both look alike. In the foreground usually we see low hills, covered to the summit with foliage, with little hamlets nestling at their base, each with its little garden. Here and there we have seen men making hay, even in latitude 70° 40'. Back of these green hills, almost invariably, rise snow covered mountains, forming a strange contrast to their verdure clad neighbors. Of course, in some places the hills are merely bare rocks. This is particularly true of the Lofoton Islands, a barren, rocky group extending from about 67° 30' north, all within the arctic circle. We anticipated very cold weather and were surprised to learn that no ice forms here in Winter. But it has been cold enough; and clothes which were oppressive in Plainfield last Winter have been quite comfortable here.

There have been four nights on which we have been in a latitude high enough to see the "Midsummer, midnight, Norway sun set into sunrise,"

for he rose last Thursday morning at about one o'clock and set last night for the first time since that hour. On three of these nights we have been successful. I will try to describe Friday night when we were on top of Nord Kap—the North Cape. At 8:30 we cast anchor in a little bay at the foot of this rock and looked with a good deal of trepidation at a zigzag path which seemed to go very nearly perpendicularly up the face of the mountain. A quiet tramp of an hour and then a walk of a mile brought us at 11:30 to the monument which crowns the summit. We had prepared for a cold night, but found the air almost balmy. Flowers bloomed on the very top and coats were almost useless; this, however, was an exceptional night. The clouds had been gathering all the afternoon so that while it was bright and warm, the sun's disk had been hidden all day. Slowly however, they began to break in the north and we watched intently for his majesty, the sun. At 12 o'clock he burst his bands asunder and shone forth in full glory, bathing everything with that strange red light, which seems so unnatural when seen only in a picture. It was a sight worth the thousands of miles we had come. My pen cannot paint the glorious panorama which lay before us, as the "Olaf Kyrre," far beyond, fired the four guns which marks that midnight hour. Our German contingent drank the health of King William, five of us who were Yale men gave three-times-three for our alma mater, and if we could have decided just who was the President of this United States we would have cheered him. We remained on the summit an hour, loath to leave such an inspiring place, but the boatswain's whistle blew and we scrambled down. On two other nights we saw the sun, each being a little different from the other. I thought that people came to see this strange sight merely because it was strange; now I know they come to see it because it is in itself beautiful. The air is wonderfully transparent here and the blending of purple, red, pink, blue and saffron, as the sun sinks is marvelous. The calm, deep green sea, the purple headlands, the golden snow tipped mountains weave about one the spell of an enchanted land.

We are now bound south and soon will finish our visit to the land of the midnight sun.

Sincerely Yours,
WM D. MURRAY.

DRUGGIST AND DOCTOR FIGHT.

A Pharmacist From Plainfield Involved in a Row at the Seashore.

James Allen Sangston, who has been at various times a clerk in the drug stores of Plainfield, where he has a large circle of acquaintances, became involved in a quarrel and fistic encounter with Dr. Henry A. Mitchell, a leading physician at Asbury Park, and President of the local Board of Health, Tuesday.

Sangston now conducts Kinmouth's pharmacy in the West End Hotel. Recently he compounded a prescription ordered by Dr. Mitchell which the physician alleged was not put up according to directions. Tuesday another prescription of the doctor's was compounded by Sangston, and was returned as not having been put up correctly.

This roiled the pharmacist, who called on Dr. Mitchell and demanded an explanation. The doctor ordered Sangston to leave the house, and Sangston asserts followed up the command with a blow. Then there was a fight, Sangston striking the doctor several times. Peace was finally restored, and both combatants went before separate Justices of the Peace and made counter-charges of assault and battery.

The young druggist was place under bonds for his appearance at court, but the doctor was not arrested. The affray caused considerable excitement, as both parties are prominently known at the Park.

John have you seen that woman lately?
John in astonishment: What woman?
That woman picking grapes for Speer's Wine. Just see her in another column and read about it, the wines are found by chemists to be absolutely pure and equal to the best in the World. The Board of Health in large cities and leading Hospitals have adopted their use where wines are needed.

Don't give up, there is a cure for catarrh and cold in the head. Thousands testify that Ely's Cream Balm has entirely cured them. It is a safe and pleasant remedy. It is applied into the nostrils. It is not a liquid or snuff. Cleanses by cleansing and healing. Price 50c.

When baby was sick, we gave her Castoria.
When she was a Child, she cried for Castoria.
When she became Miss, she clung to Castoria.
When she had Children, she gave them Castoria.

Sought for the last hundred years; a remedy for catarrh, hay fever and cold in the head, found at last in Ely's Cream Balm. Safe and pleasant to use and easily applied into the nostrils. It gives relief at once and a thorough treatment positively cures. Price 50 cents.

HOW CAN THE LONG
BE THE SHORT

A line may be a very long one and yet be the shortest between given points. For instance, the St. Paul, Minneapolis & Manitoba Railway has over 3,000 miles of road; magnificently equipped and managed, it is one of the greatest railway systems of this country; for the same reasons it is the traveler's favorite to all points in Minnesota, North and South Dakota and Montana. It is the only line to Great Falls, the future manufacturing center of the Northwest; to the fertile free lands of the Milk River Valley; and offers a choice of three routes to the Coast. Still it is the shortest line between St. Paul, Minneapolis, Fargo, Winnipeg, Crookston, Moorhead, Casselton, Glyndon, Grafton, Fergus Falls, Wahpeton, Devils Lake, and Butte City. It is the best route to Alaska, China and Japan; and the journey to the Pacific coast, Vancouver, Tacoma, Seattle, Portland and San Francisco will be remembered as the delight of a life-time once made through the wonderful scenery of the Manitoba-Pacific Route. To fish and hunt; to view the magnificence of nature; to revive the spirit; restore the body; to realize the dream of the home-seeker, the gold-seeker, the toiler, or the capitalist, visit the country reached by the St. Paul, Minneapolis & Manitoba Railway. A TALE OF THE ORIENT.

Strange, Weird Experience with a Miracle-Worker.

India [illegible] many mysterious [illegible] among her [illegible]. I saw a "miracle" performed by a [illegible] of one of those in the [illegible] independent State of Alwar during the year 18[illegible].

Harris Stanton and I were visiting Michael Bejardo, whom Stanton had met, and to whom he had rendered a slight service, some few years before in England. Michael Bejardo was a dealer in precious stones, and he claimed to be of Spanish descent. This was probably true, to [illegible] his dark complexion, jet-black hair and mustache, and bright black eyes. He had lived in India almost all his life. Sometimes it was whispered that he had forsaken the Cross for the [illegible] of the three-faced god. But few people knew him thoroughly. He did not seem reserved, but open and [illegible] of a confiding disposition, yet after living under his roof a week the impression was forced upon me that I did not really understand him, and that he kept a watch over his true thoughts, and to his fascinating way only [illegible] that side of his character [illegible] which was congenial.

Of Stanton little need be said. He was an American thoroughly [illegible] [illegible]

"I do not believe it," said Stanton, emphatically. [illegible]

[illegible]

[illegible] into a trance that he was completely stopped. Taking a box from under his robe he placed a powder in Stanton's nostrils, and after a few [illegible] he withdrew from the room. It seemed as if I were under some spell. I could not speak to Bejardo nor feel inclined to action of any kind. I noticed Stanton's face was of ashy pallor, and his veins were invisible beneath his deathly-white skin. Finally Bejardo slowly rose, going over to Stanton he placed his hand under the loosely-buttoned coat over the heart. Something in the action aroused me, for I stepped beside him.

"The heart does not beat," said Bejardo. Quickly I grasped Stanton's wrist. I could not feel any pulse. I [illegible] his coat. After a minute of breathless waiting I found his heart had ceased beating. He was dead!

"Fiend!" I gasped, as, turning my face toward Bejardo, I saw his swarthy features illumined with a [illegible] smile of triumph, and realized in an instant how easy it would be for this man to wreak vengeance on Stanton for giving him the lie; how easy it would be for him to commit any crime in this country, where the British authority was purely nominal, and where no inquiry would be made concerning the fate of two unknown Americans. What more I might have said I do not know, had not the awful old man again entered the room. After the exchange of a few low-spoken words with Bejardo, the part of which I heard enough to translate was, "[illegible] of Al Borak," the weird conjurer made a few slow passes with [illegible] hands over Stanton and withdrew.

[illegible] there was movement; the muscles of his face were terribly distorted; I could see the blood slowly come into the [illegible], and as it crept along each [illegible] seemed to knot itself into [illegible] stiffness. It was terrible. I never witnessed so much dumb suffering. The hands clinched, then slackened, the fingers nervously twitched, [illegible], rapidly and vibrated as if under the influence of an electric current. I could not look upon my friend. I turned my face away. When I again ventured to look around he was lying with his eyes wide open, but apparently in a dazed condition. I sprang to his side. He motioned me to [illegible]. I helped him to sit up. Bejardo bowed and withdrew.

"Palmer," he said, "I could not believe it possible; ask me nothing about it." [illegible] was all Stanton said, and, rising [illegible] his couch, he bade me "good-night" and retired.

The affair was never afterward referred to between the two men in my presence, and we left Bejardo's place the next week. It may have been a year later when, one night in New York, Stanton asked me to relate what happened while he lay there in a trance. He then told me that as soon as he heard [illegible] his soul separated from his body. For a moment it hovered above [illegible] he knew he saw his lifeless flesh [illegible] shape and traversed immense distances through space and darkness, upward, ever upward, and presently he [illegible] a glorious light and heard the sound of [illegible] so grand, so solemn, that nothing could be compared to its harmony and its radiance. As he approached the [illegible] light vivid colors, brilliant and dazzling, [illegible], shone on [illegible] around. Suddenly the light [illegible] into a golden hue, then merged [illegible], then a blur painfully cut off the light. This much he told, more he [illegible] he could not reveal. He firmly believed he had seen the Giver of all light and life.—Leslie's Newspaper.

FETTERED.

[illegible] Fate That Bound Them Together.

In Cheyenne's early days, the sheriff was one of the most important personages in the county. In fact, he still holds a conspicuous position in most cities of the vigorous, impetuous West.

Some years ago Sheriff [illegible], of Cheyenne, was much annoyed by the persistence and determination of sundry suitors for the hand of his daughter, Miss Helen.

As is always the case in mining districts, the male population far outnumbered the gentler sex, and Miss Helen, who was a handsome brunette, would have been a belle among far severer critics than the youths of Cheyenne. She had graduated at St. Louis, and besides being a gifted musician, was a devout worshiper of nature and fond of outdoor exercise.

Almost any fine evening in summer a passer-by might hear her rich mezzo [illegible] accompanying her guitar to some [illegible] "Ballad of the Plains."

[illegible] was she of the fact that [illegible] floated out from the shadow of the cottonwood trees and mingled with the broad, effulgent moonlight, [illegible] many a luckless youth dated a [illegible] love from the first evening [illegible] he had dropped in to help the sheriff and the old servant in making [illegible].

Miss Helen cared little for the admiration of men, but accepted it as a [illegible] of course, having been brought up among them. She enjoyed herself [illegible] fashion of her own, with her books, [illegible], sketch-book and her spirited horse, Wildfire.

Two of her lovers, however, seemed to gain more favor than the rest. In fact popular opinion was puzzled as to which would win.

One of them was a tall, athletic young [illegible], who was as bright and [illegible] as the air he [illegible], and in whose clear, blue [illegible] not a shadow of deceit was visible. [illegible] poor, for true, but a hardy and independent [illegible] he impressed one as a [illegible].

He was an ardent geologist, could assay a "find" as well as an expert, and [illegible] his mountains and worshiped Miss Helen.

But with all his devotion Joe was a modest young fellow, and held his [illegible] in defiance of mankind [illegible] and his rival in particular, [illegible] let the fair Helen feel [illegible] of her conquests.

The aforesaid rival was a wealthy [illegible] mine-owner from Chicago, all [illegible] conveyed in the term, "a polished gentleman." He had laughed [illegible] when, on departing for his new [illegible], his Chicago friends had jokingly [illegible] he would lose his heart to some [illegible] beauty. But here he was, [illegible] to lay his love and fortune at the [illegible] of the sheriff's queenly daughter.

One bright, breezy day in September [illegible] her sketching material, ostensibly to make some sketches of the autumn scenery, but really to commune with [illegible], the only mother she had ever [illegible], and to decide what answer she should give on the morrow to her [illegible] lover, who that day had asked her to be his wife. She told him that she would read her own heart before she could answer, and he begged for a favorable reply.

Joe had been offended by one of her [illegible] speeches a week before. They [illegible] talking about Russell, and she had asserted somewhat warmly that she knew of no one whose society she preferred. As soon as the impulsive words were spoken she repented, but Joe rode away with a look in his blue eyes that had haunted her ever since.

[illegible] AT THE [illegible] OF THE [illegible]

Somehow Joe's haughty head, flung back like a stag at bay, kept coming up before her mental vision, when duty demanded that she be thinking of Russell and his flattering offer.

The hours wore on, and so preoccupied was she that she did not observe the heavy clouds that were rolling black and massive down the mountain sides.

Suddenly a large drop plashed in her face and she looked about her in alarm. A heavy equinoctial storm seemed almost upon her.

Wildfire sprang forward at the touch of the whip and literally flew in the direction of the house.

The great clouds came rolling over the hills like giant ogres clad in mist. Thunder and sharp, vivid lightning followed, and then the deluge.

Wildfire dashed on until they came to the creek, and then the girl drew back in dismay!

The creek was a foaming torrent and she could not see the bridge.

Suddenly she heard a man's voice shouting to her, and in a few minutes Joe, on his tough little mustang, was beside her. He wore a buffalo overcoat, and threw a large cloak of her own about her shoulders. She did not wait to ask how he happened to come for her. She forgot that he was angry and hurt. She reached out her firm, white hand and caught Joe's extended fingers, and side by side the two horses were urged across the bridge.

They galloped home in silence, and when they reached there and Helen stepped into the friendly shelter of the broad veranda, she noted the fact that Joe led both horses to the stable and put them up.

Half an hour later Joe, arrayed in Judge Black's dressing gown and slippers (articles brought by Miss Helen from the East), was explaining to the rosy, demure young mistress of the house that her father had been suddenly called to the next town, and might not return before early morning. "He asked me to keep a sort of lookout over the place and when I rode over to ask you to invite me to tea and found you gone, I hastened after you."

This speech over, an embarrassed silence followed. It was broken by Joe, who looked straight at his hostess and said:

"If I am intruding, Miss Nellie, why, just give the word and I'll go."

Helen assured him in a constrained sort of way that she was glad of company, and went out to prepare the little supper herself, for in those days, as now, servants were rare and inefficient in the West.

After supper, in an awkward pause of the conversation, Joe took up a little case from the table and began examining its contents—a bright, new pair of handcuffs.

They were a new kind, just from the East, and Helen began explaining the spring lock which opened with a skeleton key.

Somehow one of the bands was on Joe's wrist, as she slipped the other bright circlet over her firm white hand, when lo, the lock snapped, and they were locked together.

JOE SAT LIKE A STATUE.

Helen blushed crimson and commenced searching for the key in nervous haste.

But no key was to be found. Suddenly the truth dawned upon her. The key was in her father's pocket, and he was on the other side of Crow Creek, which was now a foaming torrent and dangerous to cross in the storm and darkness.

She tried to smile and treat the matter lightly, but it was just the ghost of a smile, and it was a very doleful voice that said: "I am afraid, Mr. Gordon, that you must break the lock. Father has the key."

Joe felt tempted to indulge in a hearty laugh over their queer situation, but a glance at the distressed face across the table checked his mirth. A great throb of sorrow came over him. If she loved him she would not care so much.

He gazed at the shining fetter on her wrist so long and so earnestly that Helen lifted her eyes wonderingly but dropped them again.

What woman ever failed to read the story that she saw in the honest blue depth of her humble young giant's eyes?

Her confusion encouraged Joe, but there was almost a tremor in his voice as he laid his great brown hand over her fettered one and said softly: "Nell, if you only loved me I would believe that it was fate that bound us together. I would take it as an omen that fate would grant me my dearest wish. But, Nellie, I dare not hope."

The girl looked up slowly into her lover's eyes; looked steadily, though she still saw that look in them. "Joe," she said, "it is fate."

The cool and cultured Mr. Russell would have marveled had he seen "that queenly girl" sobbing for very joy on Joe Gordon's shoulder, and perhaps he would have marveled still more had he known that at that moment the thought of him and his millions did not once enter her mind.

When the judge returned, in the gray of the morning, he found an interesting picture.

The lamp still burned in the corner and the fire was smoldering away. On the broad lounge by the fire-place sat Helen and her lover. She had fallen asleep from sheer weariness and Joe sat like a statue lest he might disturb the fair sleeper whose cheek was so near his own.

The old gentleman's face was a study. When the truth dawned upon him he flung himself into the nearest chair and laughed until he waked the echoes—[illegible] Miss Helen.

She was at first bewildered by her novel position, but soon remembered the true situation and relapsed into silence, leaving Joe to tell the story.

"And now, judge," continued he, "you may loose these fetters with the understanding that they will soon be replaced by more enduring ones. I must not let my prisoner escape."

Helen's father had always liked young Gordon, and his blessing was forthcoming.

The announcement of the approaching nuptials gave Mr. Russell a [illegible] surprise, and he settled up his affairs in short order and returned East.

The old judge used to tell with great gusto how Gordon won his peerless daughter and how gracefully she wore her fetters after she was wed.—Atlanta Constitution.

AT THE BEACH.

Sufferings of a Fat Man from the Heat.

[Written for This Paper.]

It is a fact that warm weather has certainly much to do with crime. It has always been one of my pet theories that heat, if not the actual cause of crime, certainly is an active element in its development. In July wives insist on going to the most expensive watering places and, as the average husband is aware, if refused the wife flies at him as if she was a tiger. A female never ferociously insists upon going to a watering place in January. The Sepoy rebellion broke out in summer. And does anybody suppose that the recent riot of the striking cloak-makers on Broadway would have occurred if the thermometer had been forty degrees below zero?

However, I made a practical experiment one day last week with my friend Waddles who has an office on lower Broadway. Ordinarily, if the weather is cool, Waddles is a pleasant, considerate, and even kind-hearted man, to whom it is perfectly safe to apply for a temporary loan, but when it is hot Waddles is a person to be shunned.

Incidentally, I may remark that Waddles is very portly. In fact it is a base flattery to merely call him stout. Two such men would make a mass meeting. If all flesh is really grass Waddles might be advantageously rented out as a cow pasture. He is a good fellow, and a gentleman, when the weather is cool, but he is death on buggy springs. There is no occasion for his friends to make a great deal of him. He is that already, and more.

The day on which I made my experiment with Waddles was a scorcher and no mistake. It was weather to which the English apply the adjective beastly, and very correctly, too, as it is then that the dog star rages. Verily it was one of those days when humidity is cheaper than ice drinks, and the atmosphere seems to stick closer than a brother, when the mercury soars up and takes more degrees than a Scottish rite Mason. It seems as if breaths were sold at auction and everybody was able to outbid you. However it was not quite as hot as it is in Chicago, where, if the people are not ready to die, they are at least pretty well acclimated if they are as bad as the New York editors make out.

Waddles was in his shirt sleeves, fanning himself when I called, and remarked that the weather was positively hot, too hot in fact to go skating.

"Positively hot," howled Waddles; "it is most superlatively hot. It is hot, hotter, hottest, Hottentot, Hottentotter, Hottentottest, hot as an oven, hot as two ovens, hot as Beecher once said it was. I only wish I was an angel, then all the clothes I would have to wear would be a pair of wings which I could flop, and keep myself cool."

WADDLES DISCOVERS THAT IT IS HOT.

"You would be a nice-looking angel, weighing upwards of 300 pounds in your stocking feet. However, you can fly from the heat of the city. Suppose I invite you to go to Manhattan Beach and cool off, would you accept?"

"Suppose you try me!" replied the fat man.

"Try you? Do you take me for a tallow chandler?"

Waddles refuses to smile and says: "Chestnuts."

Scientific Note.—Extreme heat is not only productive of crime, but it also blunts the sense of humor, particularly if the sufferer be a fat man.

"Well," I ask, after a pause, "will you go with me to the beach, and have an ice time of it?"

Waddles did not give me a plump refusal, but said: "All right! Let us go before it gets any hotter, and not stand here on the sidewalk like a couple of fools. We might be half way there by this time if there was any get up and get in in me. The sun is hot enough to set a cake of ice on fire."

We start off, but my friend experiences some inconvenience in climbing the elevated stairs at City Hall.

Climatic Note—Certain climes do not agree with stout people, and climbing the stairs is one of them.

We are on the train which is crowded almost as much as a Harlem flat. The heat is stifling. Waddles insists that it is five degrees hotter than it is on the street, and he means his sad fate at having yielded to my seductive wiles.

On board of the ferry-boat, which is also crowded, Waddles insists that it is five degrees hotter than on the car, which would run the temperature up to 100 degrees. He is like a coal: the redder he gets the hotter he gets.

As is always the case in the afternoon, there is a funeral on the boat, as half a dozen or more cemeteries are located near Long Island City. Waddles compares the ferry-boat to that of old Charon ferrying passengers across the river Styx, and wants to know why I didn't take him to the morgue at once. We go into the cabin, which Waddles says is five degrees hotter than outside, which brings the temperature up to 110.

At last we are in the car but the train will not leave for ten minutes. Waddles is more irritable than ever. He threatens to brain me if I ever again say Manhattan Beach to him. He aims a savage blow at the newsboy who offers to sell him an evening paper. There is a murderous gleam in his eye. He is profane because we have to wait so long. I tell him that I find it very natural that he should want to reduce his weight. He sniffs the air and says I am a buffoon.

The train has started at last. We are already beyond the suburbs of Long Island City. All at once an expression of anguish comes over the faces of the passengers. Waddles holds his nose with one hand and shakes his fist at me with the other. We are passing through the Hunters Point smells from the oil refineries. The smell is strong enough to drive a dog out of a slaughter house, but we are soon in the fresh air, and neat cottages, villagers, cabbage patches and happy Long Island peasants tilling the soil while past.

WADDLES HOLDS HIS NOSE.

The air is much cooler already, and the murderous gleam is fading out of Waddles' eyes. The conductor calls out "Fresh Pond." This is the place where is a crematory. People who have deceased relatives who prefer to be cremated bring them there for that purpose. Waddles says he would not like to be fired out of the world in that way. In Germany at the town of Gotha you can be cremated for eleven dollars, but however it will cost a good deal of money to Gotha. I reply that if I had his chances of being cremated I wouldn't worry. Waddles owns up that he has acted in a depraved manner, but hopes I will overlook it as he always uses heated language when he is warm.

Note—This is an admission that heat produces a criminal condition of mind.

We did not get off at Sheepshead Bay to see the races, although some people who do find it quite chilly. Waddles says that he bet on the wrong horse one day and he felt as if his spinal column was being rubbed with a chunk of ice. For once in his life he was a greenbacker. He backed Tenny against Salvator.

We are at last at Manhattan Beach where the air is so cool and pleasant and Waddles is a changed being. In fact owing to the atmospheric influences he has become so much of a gentleman that he insists that we shall have some clam chowder, blue fish, etc., with liquid trimmings at his expense, and yet this is the same man who a few hours ago swore like a pirate in the heated atmosphere of New York and tried to kill a poor little newsboy in Long Island City. Does this not prove that heat is the principal cause of crime?

GLEANED IN ART CIRCLES.

MR. WATTS has just painted from life a portrait of Lord Tennyson which he will give to Trinity College, Cambridge, and he will give a replica of it to the National gallery.

THE Czar has graciously authorized the use of the Government buildings at Moscow used during the exposition of 1882 for a French exposition. They consist of a large central pavilion, a garden, and eight courts and eight smaller pavilions grouped about the central building.

A PARIS dealer sold a violin this spring to Hall & Son, of London, for $10,000. It is a Stradivarius called "The Messiah," and was shown in 1872 at the South Kensington Museum, when its estimated value was $5,000. Musical instruments are beginning to rival pictures as costly objects to look at, for such pieces are rarely used.

THE Greek Government proposes to raise a monument in the form of a mausoleum to the French, Russian and English who fell fighting for Greece during the war of independence. Land for a cemetery and uncut marble for monuments have been voted in honor of the French soldiers and sailors killed at the battle of Navarino.

THE Bavarian Parliament proposes to reduce the annual appropriation of 100,000 marks for the purchase of works of art to 60,000 marks. The Clerical party is particularly hostile. But recently Prince Louis, the son of the Regent of Bavaria, made a strong effort to have the old appropriation continued and has succeeded. Prince Louis advocates the annual exhibition at Munich, and points out many gaps in the museums of the State which ought to be filled.

THE great megalithic underground building at New Grange, Ireland, shows signs of caving in. The entrance to this strange building is so low, long and filthy that very few persons have ever penetrated it. Mr. George Coffey, of Dublin, proposes to take photographs of the interior by the flash light and keep a record of its actual appearance. Those who are anxious for the preservation of prehistoric monuments in Ireland demand that steps be taken to prevent New Grange from collapse.

ACQUISITIONS of the Louvre include a "Virgin Mary" by Germain Pilon, a sculptor of the sixteenth century, which has been in the chapel at the military school of St. Cyr; a "Calvary" in oakwood containing life-size figures of Christ, Mary and St. John, by an unknown Flemish sculptor of the early sixteenth century, which has been in a church at Nivelles, and a marble "Virgin Mary" from Ecouen, which has been for half a century at Versailles in St. Louis Church. When such objects are removed the Department of the Fine Arts supplies their places with modern works of a similar subject. But in the case of "Virgin Mary" from St. Cyr the school has received in exchange a painting by Protais called "The Reserves."

ONE of the finest works by Rubens, now owned by the Belgians, is the "Four Heads of Negroes," sold for $11,000 at the dispersal of Prince Demidoff's gallery. In the last century this picture was in the private gallery at Pommersfelden, some leagues from Bamberg, where it was wrongly attributed in the catalogue of 1719 to Van Dyck. It was sold in this century to a Russian amateur for $7,000, and is now in the National Museum at Brussels. The four negroes are quarter length and in European dress. Three form a group on the right; the fourth, who looks upward as if admiring something, is by himself on the left. The middle one of the three is in a black plane of the picture; he looks out of the canvas, showing a row of brilliant teeth. They are four studies of negroes, not a composed picture, but the grouping is agreeable nevertheless. Art critics and amateurs unite in chanting the praises of this work.

OUT OF THE ORDINARY.

STANDING near the yard at Jonathan Farmer's, in Oglethorpe County, Ga., is a red oak tree which measures 27 feet in circumference two feet from the ground. It is hollow, and the recess within is sufficiently large to accommodate a half dozen men.

AN immense double watermelon attracted attention in a Georgia grocery. Double watermelons are exceedingly rare, and all who saw this, including a Southern darky, who has seen many a melon patch, declared it the first they had ever seen.

A LIVE frog was found, not long since, imbedded in the center of a fourteen-inch stick of timber, at the Omaha mine, near Grass Valley, Cal. The timber was sound, with no opening whatever in it, and the frog only came to view when a saw revealed its habitation.

THERE is a real floating island in Norway lake, Me. It has an area of one and one-eighth acres, formed of a quagmire made up of a mass of roots, weeds and fibers and a growth of small trees. It has for years been the breeding place for hens, ducks and other birds.

MR. MURRAY, of the Pittsburgh mine, near Grass Valley, split open a large log. He found a muzzle-loading shotgun that appeared to be all right, but when he tried to pull it from the hole the stock crumbled to pieces. The barrels were of fine make and the gun was evidently stolen and hidden many years

FREEHOLDERS PROCEEDINGS.

[OFFICIAL.]

ELIZABETH, N. J., July 3, 1890.

Regular meeting of the board of chosen freeholders of Union county held on Thursday, July 3, 1890, at 2:30 o'clock P. M.

Present—Director Hubbard and Freeholders Briant, Doty, Jones, Kyte, Littell, Pierson, Roll, Sullivan, Thompson, Trahon, Wright, West—12.

Absent—Freeholders Bender, Howard, Russell, Vanderbeek—4.

The minutes of last meeting were read and approved.

COMMITTEE REPORTS.

From committee on publication.

To the board of chosen freeholders of of the county of Union:

Gentlemen:—The committee to whom was referred the communication of Aug. S. Crane, of the Elizabeth Journal, in regard to increasing the price for the publication of the minutes, would report that they are unable to ascertain any reason why any change should be made.

The minutes last year were probably a little longer than former years on account of the county road act, but there is no prospect of the minutes being longer this year than those before the year just past, and would therefore recommend no change.

WM. J. THOMPSON,
WM. H. TRAHON,
GEORGE KYTE,
Committee.

On motion of Freeholder Roll received and adopted unanimously.

The director stated that the committee on Plainfield bridges report would lay over, owing to sickness of Freeholder Vanderbeek, chairman of committee.

RESOLUTIONS.

By Freeholder Thompson:

Resolved, That the director of this board, county collector and county attorney, be appointed a committee to confer with the authorities of the cities of Elizabeth, Plainfield and Rahway in regard to the duties and expenses required of the county and cities under the new election law passed at the last session of the legislature with power to make such arrangements as may be necessary to comply with the law and apportion the expense required under said act, where the county and cities are both made responsible for the same thereunder.

On motion of Freeholder Wright adopted unanimously.

By Freeholder Littell:

Resolved, That the bill of S. G. Emmons, of Cranford township, amounting to $28 for carriage hire for months of May and June, be paid when properly audited and approved.

Freeholder Kyte moved its adoption.

On roll call adopted unanimously.

By Freeholder Roll.

Resolved, That the bill of Bernard Mahon for $6,015.39 be paid by the county collector when bill is properly sworn to.

Freeholder Doty moved its adoption.

On roll call adopted unanimously.

By Freeholder Wright:

Resolved, That the bill of B. M. & J. F. Shanley, amounting to $9,104.18 be paid by the county collector when properly sworn to.

Freeholder Briant moved its adoption.

On roll call adopted unanimously.

By unanimous consent Freeholder Doty was placed on Springfield avenue road committee.

By Freeholder West:

Resolved, That the director of this board and county collector be and they are hereby authorized to sell and dispose of the county road bonds to the amount of $150,000 authorized by this board at the meeting held May 13, 1890, at the best price obtainable not less than par.

Freeholder Thompson moved its adoption.

On roll call adopted unanimously.

By Freeholder Pierson:

Resolved, That the firm of Hoffman & Hatfield be given until Monday, July 7, to perfect their bonds and sign contracts on Springfield road, Westfield township, and if not signed and perfected by that time the county engineer is hereby directed to re-advertise for bids or proposals on said road.

Freeholder West moved to amend as follows: That the contract be awarded to the next lowest bidder who is willing to assume the contract.

On roll call the amendment was carried as follows:

Ayes—Director Hubbard and Freeholders Briant, Doty, Jones, Roll, Sullivan, Thompson, Wright, West—9.

Nays—Freeholders Littell, Pierson, Trahon—3.

Not voting—Freeholder Kyte—1.

The resolution as amended was unanimously adopted.

The following bills audited and approved were read and ordered paid unanimously:

CHARLES E. REED, Clerk.

Swore Back at Him.

Mrs. Binks is a pleasant, mild-mannered little woman, says the Washington Post, who is almost heart-broken over the fact that her husband is addicted to the use of profanity.

"Why don't you swear back at him?" said her sister one day.

"I couldn't do any thing like that," said Mrs. Binks. But her sister is a woman with much force of character, and succeeded in exacting a promise that this rigorous method would be tried.

Mr. Binks came home rather tired and not in a very amiable mood.

"Well," he said, as he glanced over the table disgustedly, "if this ain't the slimmest meal I ever saw I'll be d——."

"So—so will I, John," rejoined Mrs. Binks, meekly.

Make Life Worth Living.

The world is not made for a tomb, but a garden. You are to be a seed, not a death. Plant yourself and you will sprout, bury yourself and you will decay. For a dead opportunity there is no resurrection. The only enjoyment, the only rest to be attained in this world must be secured on the wing. Each day brings its own benefit, but it has none to spare. What escapes to-day has escaped forever. To-morrow has no [illegible]

Progress of American Steel.

An interesting feature of the recently published statistical report of the American Iron and Steel Association is the increasing percentage of steel in the total production. About one-third of the bar "iron" now manufactured in the United States is steel, so is nearly half of the plate and sheet iron, and 40 per cent. of the cut nails and spikes. The rolled iron product, other than nails, only increased 7½ per cent. last year, while the rolled steel product, apart from rails, increased 33 per cent. It needs not to say that steel rails are now replacing those of iron on all the railroads which are efficiently managed. After that change is completed, what then? Will the next reform in order be wholesale substitution of aluminum for the ferric material, crowding that out of the way as the latter is displacing wood for many structural purposes? It is not improbable. Clay is much more plentiful than iron ore, and recent experiments at least indicate it as possible that the new metal will ere long be produced as cheaply per unit of volume, if not of weight, as its elder brother. Such a change would revolutionize not a few of our manufacturing processes, and perhaps some of the habits of the civilized human being.—Metall und Eisen Zeitung.

The Head and the Brain.

Dr. Starr, of London, says that it is impossible to draw any conclusion from the size or shape of the head as to the extent or surface of the brain, and so as to the mental capacity. It is absurd to judge of the brain surface by either the size of the head or the extent of the superficial irregular surface which is covered by the skull without taking into consideration the number of folds or the depth of creases. "For a little brain with many deep folds may really, when spread out, have a larger surface than a large brain with few shallow folds." What do phrenologists say to this?—Scientific American.

THE COUNTRY BOY.

You'd think, to hear the poets talk
About the country boy,
That his life was just made up of all
Earth's best and sweetest joy;
They talk about the buttercups,
The fragrant new-mown hay;
Well, I guess that I've been there myself,
And know as well as they.

'Tis easy sitting in the shade
Of "the grand old apple tree,"
To blow about the romance of
The farmer's life, you see;
But would they like, these city chaps,
Who have so much to say,
In the burning heat and scorching sun
To load this fragrant hay?

And chores, upon the average farm,
They seem to never end;
The cows to milk, the wood to get,
The sheep and pigs to tend;
And jobs that are too much for men
Fall also to our share,
And yet they say the country boys
Are free from strife and care.

While they're riding in their carriages fine,
Or lounging on soft rugs,
The country boys are pulling weeds,
Or smashing tater bugs.
But of all mean jobs upon a farm,
And I can't mention half,
The meanest thing is trying to wean
A well-developed calf.

Of one thing more I wish to speak,
Which every boy knows well;
If a farmer chance to have a call
From a stylish city swell,
The best preserves the house affords
Are piled upon his plate,
While the boy who picked the fruit is left
To pout, and [illegible], and—wait.

The time is passing quickly by,
The boys will soon be men,
And take revenge by using boys
As others have used them;
But I wish those chaps who write that stuff,
Misrepresenting boys,
Would tell the truth about the thing,
Or else shut up their noise.
—Country Boy, in Ohio Farmer.

MY WEAK POINT.

An Uncomfortable Habit, with Many Disappointments.

It's a very curious thing. I don't know how to account for the tendency, but nothing ever happens that I don't at once begin drawing inferences from it; and, in the same way, when any thing that ought to happen does not, I soar immediately into the infinite regions of the possible, and revel in deductions, always logically arrived at, but invariably wrong. I am not conceited about it; but I never met any one so hopelessly given to the practice as I am.

I sometimes think my proneness thus to draw inferences must be hereditary; my parents were great at it, so it is possible I got it from them. It was quite wonderful how much they could deduce from a little thing. For instance, when I was a small boy, I developed a mania for consuming bread and butter at odd hours and reading books beyond my comprehension. I used to combine these occupations, and preferred to indulge in them when I ought to have been at play. For a long time my parents regarded these pursuits with a lack of sympathy; my mother docked my pocket-money as often as I was reported to have "cut a new loaf;" and my father pointed sternly to the compressed dabs of butter with which I embellished the pages of his best books. I was driven perforce to eat and read in secret.

But one fine day a change came over the spirit of my parents. The change lay in their sudden adoption of a totally different course of treatment. My taste was discovered to be not only harmless but eminently praiseworthy, and I was not only permitted to read and eat, but warmly encouraged to do both. I puzzled over it a good deal before—in the course of my reading—I traced this happy change to its source. My father had been hearing anecdotes of Lord Macaulay, and had discovered, or been told, that the story of his childhood furnished an exact parallel to mine. The infant Thomas loved to sit in corners eating bread and butter and devouring books whose contents he could by no possibility understand. He avoided his playfellows and sat all by himself reading under shady trees, precisely as I was went to do. To my parents, the deduction to be drawn from these striking coincidences was obvious; another Macaulay had been born in me. As soon as they realized this, the doors of the pantry and library were thrown open, and the housemaid received orders to supply me with bread and butter ad libitum on demand. I took full advantage of my opportunities, and only wished that my great predecessor had expressed a preference for bread and jam. I ascertained when too late that the youthful Macaulay had a rooted antipathy to going to school, and that compulsory attendance was eventually found to do him no good. It was a lasting regret to me that my father had not made this really valuable discovery when he made the other. I have called Lord Macaulay my predecessor; he was regarded in this light at that time; but, long since, it has been generally acknowledged that his reputation is in no danger of eclipse by mine. It is not my fault that the authors of my being have been disappointed. They drew an inference, and it was wrong.

As it was with my forebears so is it with me now, and has been for as long as I can remember. One particular case stands out like a landmark; it owes its prominence solely to the fact that it was the first of its own especial kind, and that is why I select it from the ten thousand instances of reasoning from insufficient data, to which I am adding every day. It was when I proposed to the first of the only girls I ever loved. I wrote in a strain of devoted humanity (which was right and proper, since she was twelve years my senior), laying my hand and fortune—salary of sixty pounds a year—at her feet. How I watched the postman for the next few days! One day passed, but there came no reply; two days dragged by, and three and four, but she answered not.

"She is considering it," I said to myself. "Courage! She can't make up her mind, and wants time! Think what a flutter she must be in, and possess your soul in patience. She is wavering; and when a woman wavers she is lost—that is, gained, won, conquered!"

But she wasn't. I saw her on the evening of the sixth day, and she said she had quite forgotten my letter; she was so sorry. And then she laughed!

And I—I, unhappy one, sneak away out of the house, feeling in my pockets for two-pence to take the 'bus to Westminster bridge. Life was not worth living, of course. I groaned as I passed out of the Terrace, for I had decided upon taking the corner house, that she might be near her mother. It seemed as though the staring "To Let" over the door had been left there on purpose to remind me of it. I know better than to draw any inference from a girl's omission to answer a letter now, but for the life of me I can't help doing it sometimes.

Another time I built a whole town in the air on the strength of a letter from the publisher who has helped and guided me on my literary career, and has paid for my maiden efforts with the generosity of a rich uncle. "Can you spare time to run up and see me to-morrow?" he wrote; "I should like to speak to you." I replied by return of post that I would be with him at noon next day, and went to bed speculating. Was he going to commission me to do a three-volume novel? Hardly probable; even to my capacity of belief, that didn't seem likely. Then, as I pondered over the riddle, I suddenly solved it to my own complete satisfaction. Jones, that publisher's subeditor, had been looking seedy lately; he'd got a nasty cough, and had complained of his eyes. It was as plain as a pike-staff; Jones had been pensioned, and I was to succeed him. Now, what salary should I ask? Jones got six hundred pounds, I know. I couldn't expect so much as that, but I would ask four hundred, and take three if I were offered it. I could manage very nicely on three hundred pounds a year. Lodgings in Charlotte Square, and—and—then perhaps I might venture to speak to the then "her." To acceptance and marriage was a brief step, and having settled it all I fell asleep. Next morning I went up to my publisher's office, and as I wiped my boots on the door-mat I resolved to take the subeditorship at two-fifty.

When I got in, the publisher said: "I thought I'd ask you to come and see me about that last little thing of yours. There are some excellent points in it, some excellent points; but I'm afraid—I'm afraid"—

I forgot how I got outside again.

The habit is chronic, and incurable as consumption. Twenty years ago, an aunt of mine said something to me about her will—something very commonplace and casual; any sensible fellow would have forgotten it ten minutes afterward. I didn't; I weighed the remark, and turned it about; and having, as I supposed, accurately outlined the train of thought that gave it words, drew the inference that I was to be her heir. I put that inference away in a corner of my mind, and whenever I was hard up or in the blues, I pulled it out and furbished it up, and got consolation and comfort from it. That aunt died the other day; but my name wasn't even mentioned in her will. And yet, a week ago, because another aunt said something of the same kind, I am at it again! drawing inferences and deductions which range from a fifty-pound legacy to the dear old lady's entire fortune. I know I oughtn't to do it. But I was born with this hopeful nature, and I suppose shall die with it. I trust, however, that I may outgrow the habit, for it has done me little good until now.

And yet I don't know. When the Present treats you hardly, and the Past has not been kind, is it not well to cozen the Future into promising better things, if it gives you courage to press forward? I have been wrong all my life, and that is poor reason for thinking I shall be right at last. But leave me Hope as long as she will stay. Let me bury "the might-have-beens" out of Memory's sight and borrow what I can from "may be." This habit of inferring is one of Hope's children; a thriftless child at best; but its mother will die one day, so let me nurse the child. It will bring forth only disappointments; but they, when they are many, are short-lived, with little power to pain.—Chamber's Journal.

THE MASCULINE GIRLS.

Nowadays the World Can Stand Almost Any Thing They Do.

The woman of to-day is unique. Such a type was never known before. Now that she has decided to ride horseback man fashion, she has aroused so much alarm that a society has been formed in England for the purpose of checking her headlong career toward masculinity. The world can stand the modern girl when she wears masculine shirts, collars, cuffs, cravats, gloves, boots, jackets, ulsters, hats, rings, umbrellas, waistcoats, and even a single glass; but when she proposes to straddle a horse there is a sudden jerk backward, writes Blakely Hall to the Illustrated American. The American girl has the fad. For some inscrutable reason she has a rabid desire to lay hold of her beauty and compress it into the semblance of a brick. The purpose of her life is the abolition of the curve. The soft, graceful and symmetrical lines of the symbol of absolute beauty—the untrammelled figure of a beautiful woman — are squeezed and forced into the rigid and wooden form of men's attire. With the masculine clothes has come a grenadier-like carriage and a manner that is every thing but feminine.

In England the desire of women to ride man-fashion is not a half-hearted one at all. They claim that they are handicapped by the side-saddle in cross-country riding. They are lighter in weight and often more daring and skillful than men, but owing to the difficulty of riding a fractious or ugly horse with a pummel saddle they are nearly always behind in the dangerous runs across country which the fox-hunters take.

Women forget the advantage of the opposite sex in greater length of limb. Yet it is an advantage. I have seen plucky women in the hunting countries of England, and more notably in Ireland, who rode fiery and powerful sixteen-hand hunters over the stiffest country with perfect ease. They were often small women, and they could not have clung on their horses' backs ten minutes without a pummel to grip in the jumps.

PREHISTORIC REMAINS.

Prof. Leidy's Discoveries of Fossil Bones in Florida.

Big boxes full of curious old bones have been arriving lately at the Biological School of the University of Pennsylvania, pending a resting place in the working room of Prof. Joseph Leidy, the famous anatomist. They are were found in Levy County, Fla. The specimens have been carefully wrapped up in Florida moss and other packing to prevent breaking on the way north.

These bones are hundreds of years old. They belong to extinct creatures of the quaternary period. Dr. Leidy has been hard at work identifying the animals of which the bones form part, and this identification is now complete. His conclusions are very interesting. The chief bones, he says, are those of a rhinoceros, a mastodon, a llama, a three-toed horse and a giant sloth. There are also parts of a tapir, a small crocodile and a gar pike.

In 1887 a gentleman living in Archer, in Northern Florida, found some fossil bones in beds of clay, and wrote to the late Prof. Baird of the Smithsonian Institute about them. At that time scientists were not expecting the discovery of fossil remains in Florida at all, and Prof. Baird, becoming interested, suggested to Dr. Leidy that he go there and search for more bones. Dr. Leidy, being unable to do so, interested Major Powell, Superintendent of the United States Geological Survey, in the matter, and the latter sent one of his assistants, Mr. Dall, to Archer for two weeks.

Dr. Leidy identifies the rhinoceros as a variety whose skeleton has never before been found in this country east of the Mississippi. It is about the size of the present Indian rhinoceros, but has tusks eight inches long instead of three inches, and was probably hornless. It lived in Florida in the quaternary period, previous to the appearance of man. The mastodon, whose bones were found, Dr. Leidy calculates to have been half as large again as the present Asiatic elephant, and a different species from the common mastodon, whose remains have been found in almost every State in the Union. One of the giant sloths, pronounced by Dr. Leidy the megatherium, was also as large as the Asiatic elephant. The only living sloth known, about the size of a terrier, is a tree animal.

Dr. Leidy is satisfied that the elephant, tiger, horse and camel, being found in the same cave, lived at the same time, and thinks it likely that the others had been brought to the spot by the tiger as its food. The finding of the bones of a horse is considered strong evidence that the common horse once existed on this continent and afterward became extinct. These animals are also placed in the quaternary period.

Until these recent discoveries the eyes of scientists had not been turned toward Florida in expectation of finding fossil remains. European geologists are now on the qui vive to hear the description of the animals unearthed there. The Bad Lands, Dak., and Bridger, Wyo. T., are two of the prominent fossil fields in the West.—N. RUNNING A NEWSPAPER.

Why an Obituary Was Printed Instead of a Salutatory.

It had been the dream of my life to own, edit and publish a newspaper. I was not particular as to whether it was a daily, weekly or monthly; I simply wanted to run it, and try my hand at molding public sentiment, as my grandfather had done before me. He was a good editor and ran a weekly newspaper as long as his creditors would let him, and when at last he died of his debts the sheriff gave him an obituary of which any editor might be proud.

Well, when I had saved up sixty dollars my opportunity came. A friend of mine who owned a hand-press and a box of type offered to trade the outfit for my watch and the sixty dollars. The watch was an old Waterbury, so it did not take long to wind up the business, and I soon found myself in full charge of a flourishing country newspaper.

With great pride I prepared my salutatory, but while I was in the act of putting the finishing touches to it, and had just penned the usual words: "We are here and here to stay," a prospective subscriber stalked into the sanctum and seating himself calmly upon the editorial desk, said:

"That's your salutatory, is it? Now, you're a stranger here, and may be you'd like a few hints as to what the people want? Well, I'm the man to give 'em to you. Let's see what you've wrote there?"

He suited the action to the word and took the editorial from my reluctant hands.

"It won't do," he said, when he had labored through my ponderous sentences. "I see you don't understand this people very well. You know, there's more Baptists in this community than there is Methodists. In fact, we just rule things, and if you don't put in a good word for the Baptists you're a ruined man. By the way," he continued, mistaking one of my red slippers for a spittoon and flooding it with tobacco juice; "what church do you belong to, anyhow?"

I was almost afraid to tell him, but I ventured to hint that I had a leaning toward the Methodists.

"Keep it quiet," he said, almost in a whisper, "for the Methodists ain't nowhere around these diggin's. They only have preachin' once a month, and they ain't got but one man on the town council, while the Baptists is got one mayor, four aldermen, one express agent and two telegraph operators. O, we're in the lead, I tell you; so you'd better keep your weather eye open, and look to your interest. That's all I've got to say."

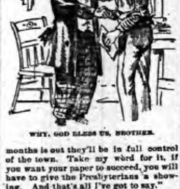
And he left me to my sad reflection.

But I was not left entirely alone, for ere the footsteps of my Baptist friend had died into an echo, a tall, slim man, wearing a nervous smile and a pair of spectacles entered and tip-toed toward me.

"I saw old Jenkins coming out just now," he explained, as he sat down on my ink bottle, "and I'll bet I know what he was up to. He was trying to tell you how to run the paper—now, wasn't he?"

I admitted that his language had impressed me in that way.

"Don't mind a word he says," said my new adviser. "He's crazy on the subject of religion, and don't know what he is talking about. What you want to do is to praise up the Presbyterians. They're getting stronger and stronger every day—going to build a brick church and a public school next week, and before six months is out they'll be in full control of the town. Take my word for it, if you want your paper to succeed, you will have to give the Presbyterians a showing. And that's all I've got to say."



WHY, GOD BLESS US, BROTHER.

I heaved a deep sigh of relief as he vanished through the door, which I was about to lock after him when an old man, wearing the look of a Methodist preacher, pushed his way in.

"How is it with you, brother?" he asked, shaking hands heartily, as he plumped down in the only chair in the room.

I told him it was not as well as it might be, but that I hoped to pull through.

"You'll never do it," he said, "by listenin' to them Baptists and Presbyterians. They are tryin' to run this town, but we're goin' to git up a revival which will sweep 'em from the face of the earth!

"Baptist?"

"No, sir."

"Presbyterian?"

"Not exactly, sir."

"Episcopalian?"

"Not very much, sir.

"Why, God bless us, brother," he exclaimed, as he jumped up and grasped my hand, "you're a Methodist, ain't you?"

I told him no, but that I had once fallen from grace, and that I supposed that was the next thing to it.

"Don't worry over it," he said, soothingly, and giving me a slap on the back which set me to coughing. "You ain't the first man that ever fell from grace. But we are going to throw the props around you and keep you up. Now, I'm goin' to git right down here and pray for you—right on this floor, which ain't been swept in ten years—and I want you to git down with me."

It was in vain that I told him I was in a big hurry and would rather wait till dark. He would take no denial, and in a second he had started a revival in that office which would have done credit to a first-class camp-meeting. He had warned me beforehand that he would remain upon his knees until I was converted, and I mentally decided that my case was hopeless. As the good old man prayed for my salvation he beat the air wildly with his hands, and as I was in the air myself, I came in for a good share of the beating. He followed me all over the room in the agony of his plea, now knocking my head against the composing stone, or jostling my breast with a severe blow in the ribs, just to emphasize his words. Sometimes I would dodge, and his hand would hit the wall hard, but he only shouted the louder when this occurred.

We were both perspiring freely with the exercise; his paper collar had melted and run down his back, and my celluloid cuffs had caught fire five times. One or the other had to weaken, and I felt that the other was myself.

"Brother!" he shouted in desperation, "is the work done yet? Do you feel any change?"

I was about to tell him that I had spent the last cent I had, and felt no change at all, but I knew he wouldn't let me up on that, and so I told him yes, that I was a changed man.

"Where do you feel it?" he asked, as he paused for breath.

"In my back and side," I answered. "In fact it's all over me!"

He gave a shout that shook the building, rose to his feet, told me that I was a sinner saved by grace, mopped his brow in the office towel, said to me that he would call on me to lead the meeting that night and went forth rejoicing.

Then I sat down to my desk again, weak and helpless, and wrote my own obituary; and when I recovered from the spell of sickness which ensued, I sold my paper to the Baptists for seventy-five dollars and hired out to a heathen as clerk in a grocery store.—F. L. Stanton, in Atlanta Constitution.

SEMI-HUMOROUS STORYETTES.

MR. JONES was giving his son an object lesson in natural history. "You see, my boy," said he, "how mysteriously nature, that suspends coccanuts on tree branches a hundred feet from the ground, to the great annoyance of travelers, distributes her gifts. There is the humble and slow-going turtle, for example, out of whose shells the best combs are made, but which, in turn, is unable to use them, not being able to boast of a single hair."

AN old Quaker lady tells in her quaint way this story of Emerson: "Thee knows that when Mr. Emerson was abroad he went to Egypt, and while there he stood one morning in front of the Sphinx, and gazed long and earnestly at the silent figure. There they stood, Emerson gazing at the Sphinx and the Sphinx at Emerson. The silence was heavy. Suddenly the lips of the stone figure trembled, and the mystic words, 'You're another!' fell from them."

HERE is Murat Halstead's conclusion to a brief dissertation on the luscious Southern product—the watermelon: "The Georgians say, and it is discouraging, that the very best melons grown in the State are so fragile that they can not be transported, and those who would enjoy the top flowers of this wonderful product of the sun and sand must go where the exquisite spheres glisten among the dewey leaves of the generous vines whose marvelous distillment of sweetness is the dainty distinction of a favored land."

A THOROUGHLY reliable gentleman informs a correspondent that he saw near Scottsville, Va., two small snakes deliberately engaged in swallowing each other, a goodly portion of each snake having been taken into the stomach of the other. This reminds us of the old farmer who saw a large bullfrog basking in the sun on the bank of his mill-pond. A large water moccasin commenced to swallow his frogship by taking in his legs. Meanwhile the frog began the same process by taking in the tail of the snake. The swallowing process, as the story goes, continued until the reptile and the frog swallowed each other and both disappeared from view.

A GYPSY CAMP.

A Peep at Their Wild and Nomadic Life.

The Gypsy Always Chooses a Pretty Spot for His Camp—Their Musical Ability—The Traveling Wagon and Other Paraphernalia.

[COPYRIGHT, 1890.]
[Special Correspondence.]

Going down the Narrows, from New York to Sandy Hook, on the wooded height back of Fort Lee, just across the river from New York City, will be found a gypsy camp. It is a novel experience while walking along the Palisades to come suddenly upon the white tents and covered wagons. The spot is chosen with an eye to rural beauty, but a motive purely mercenary. You will never find the gypsy encamped in a forbidding situation. A fondness for landscape is born in him, and he invariably makes his stopping place near a running stream, among the rocks and trees, where his fire of sticks will be protected from the wind.

By a lucky chance I was able to gain the confidence of this camp of gypsies and learn something of their mode of life.

These gypsies, it appears, have been only four years in the United States. The camp consists of Tenet Bucklin, his wife, their five sons and their families, in all some thirty persons, with seven horses, dogs, a green parrot and an excellent road outfit.

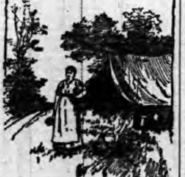
It is strange how a few generations will change the orthography of a name. Bucklin, I have no doubt, is the corruption of Beckland. The youngest son of the Bucklin brood bears the name of Plater, probably after his remote ancestor, Plato Beckland, a famous English Romany, of whom the song relates:

Two Romany fellows were banished afar,
Far away over the dark-rolling sea,
Lasho for robbing,
And Plato for fobbing
The purse of a lady as great as could be.

And when they came to the far-away land,
The land that is over the dark rolling sea,
One came to the halter,
But one at the altar
Soon married a lady as fair as could be.

Would you like to know who the lady was?
'Twas the lady whose purse he had stolen, d'ye see;
For the chap had an eye
Black, witch-like and sly,
And she'd followed him over the dark-rolling sea.

Bucklin is a man of more than ordinary intelligence, and, unlike most of his kind, he talks freely and well about gypsy life and tradition if you win his confidence. At least he did with me. The old man was pleased with my hearty interest in the Romany character; he saw that I had picked up some quaint information about it, and he was willing to add to my stock of knowledge.



A GYPSY MAIDEN.

"Is fortune telling as profitable as it used to be?" I asked him.

"No," he responded, with a sly twinkle in his gray eye, "people know too much these days. There was a time I mind in England when the folk flocked to our tent at the fairs and our prettiest woman in a gay gown and decked out with trinkets told their destinies for hours together, or it might be an old granny saw the lines of fate in their hands and warned them of the threat of danger. Silver was showered upon us and times were good. Why, the country people were so simple then they would bury gold in a pot to multiply if but a wrinkled hag bade them to. Nowadays everybody makes little of our skill, and our women have to beg the Gentiles to show their palms and be told what the future has in store for them."

"Then how do you contrive to live so well? The children are all fat, the young women are plump, the old people look hearty, and even the dogs have enough to eat."

"Well, we are all musicians, as you see. There isn't one of us that doesn't play on some instrument, and when the crowd comes over here on Sundays we entertain them with some of the finest strains on the fiddle you ever listened to.

"You should know," continued old Bucklin, with a proud ring in his voice, "that the Romany is always a born musician. From us have come many kings of the violin. Our composers, Csermak and Bihary, take high rank, and the great maestro Liszt himself states his belief that the gypsies created the national music of Hungary. Poor folk, you well know, pay liberally as their means go for the playing of familiar airs, and it's a common thing for us to take in between ten and twenty dollars of a Sunday. Then, a gypsy can do a little of every thing. He can shoe a horse, doctor a cow, mend a kettle, make baskets, clean a clock, snare birds and rabbits and, I needn't tell you, sell a horse and lose nothing by the bargain. Altogether, we make out to live and have no need to worry much."

Two things in connection with the gypsies had always excited my curiosity, and I sounded Bucklin upon them; they were the burial of the dead and the Romany religious faith. I entertained a vague notion that these people had the earth for a cemetery, that they laid their loved ones away in the forest solitudes or in the breezy downs, but the old man shook his head and a sad-faced woman sitting by us said:

"We bury our dead in the cemetery wherever we's 'appen to be. They's allus kind to we then."

"No," Bucklin added, "we are as civilized as the Gentiles in that respect, and death is a more serious affair to us than to you. No gypsy, for instance, would have his dead cremated. The idea is terrible. We have a reverence for the cold clay. The garments of the deceased are generally burned, the family show their sorrow by fasting, and a mother in some instances never partakes again of the favorite dishes of her son. We are such children of nature that it seems hard we can not live on forever among the grasses and woods, changing our tents from season to season and following the summer sun.

"Creed we have none," he responded to my question; "you will find gypsies who are Roman Catholics, gypsies who are Protestants and gypsies who are Buddhists; yes, and gypsies who are heathens. We are an impressionable people, and just as our cheerful temperaments are reflected from the bright sky we take our religion from those by whom we are surrounded. There are bands of gypsies that always keep a fire burning in camp and carry the smoldering embers with them as they move from place to place. Perhaps this is a kind of fire worship. The fact is, we have no creed or ritual and in the Gentile sense no religion."

"I have heard that your people seldom or never intermarry with the Gentiles," I remarked.

"That is not the case," said the old man. "Our young women have a kind of dark beauty much coveted by the Anglo-Saxon, and where will you find a handsomer man than the gypsy? Intermarriages do and always will occur while human passions last. In England they have not been uncommon since the law has regarded us as vagrants and driven us from the downs and lanes. But we have our family pride, just as you have, and the Romany whose blood is pure is honored among his people."

I had my fortune told before I left these hospitable people by an olive-cheeked, dark-eyed maid whose glance and touch were magnetic. I was willing to believe she could see into the future for the pleasure it gave me to look into her eyes. Holding my palm in her small hand she traced the lines demurely, and, observing my admiration, artfully told me that I was to marry a stately, dark lady, who would be my guiding star in a very stormy life. But I should have a larger portion of happiness than fell to the common lot, and my declining days with the paragon of womanhood mentioned would be peaceful and happy. It was the same old story and told in quaint and grammarless phrase, but I am afraid I pressed the round silver dollar into her brown hand with undue and lingering feeling. The whole camp turned out to bid me good-bye, with warm invitations to come and see them again, and I could not help thinking as I turned down the precipitous road toward the ferry that these children of the open air had many lovable traits.

THE REAL OBJECT.

The Government of the United States was established as an organized representation of the free will of the governed, and for the purpose of securing and preserving unimpaired, through the legitimate functions of legislation and administration, national honor, equity, peace, good order, and the general welfare of the people, irrespective of class or condition, sectionalism or partisanship.

This was the object, and the sole object, [illegible] of the Republic had in view.

Towards an oligarchy of corrupt politicians for the [illegible] of venal ends, [illegible] regardless of means or consequences, and as far removed from the designs of the patriotic fathers as it was to have been perpetuated the rotten borough election system and the aristocratic class distinction of England, all of which the Constitution of the United States entirely repudiates.

We are a Government of the people, by the people and for the people, and any deviation from that true and trustworthy standard, by any partisan organization whatever, is disloyalty to the organic law of the American Union and the reserved rights of the States composing it.

OUR CONGRESSIONAL REPRESENTATIVE.

The Elizabeth Journal has started out on a crusade against our present able representative in Congress, Hon. J. A. Geissenhainer, of Monmouth county, claiming in its columns that Mr. Geissenhainer has made but two speeches before the House since his acceptance of his seat, and attempts to belittle his record. The Journal's efforts to place Congressman Geissenhainer in a false light before the public and other efforts made by partisan leaders to mislead the public that the efficient representative from the Third Congressional District, is not desirous of a re-nomination, will fall flat to the ground when the convention for re-nomination convenes. Mr. Geissenhainer has proven himself an able representative of the people he represents, and there is no reason to doubt but that he will be returned to Congress by a larger majority than he received at his previous election—which was a surprise to even his political opponents.

A BUGLE CALL.

"Our call is to members of no party. It is to the people who love justice for themselves and neighbors.

We appeal to no sectional or class prejudice or animosity.

The greatest good to the greatest number is our aim.

In [illegible] unity, in all things charity, is the doctrine that should rule.

Industry, not idleness, is our badge of honor.

We insist that there shall be no privileged class or persons.

No tribute to monopoly.

No watered stock to absorb the greater part of our products in extortionate freight tolls.

No restriction of coinage or volume of money by corporations or leagues of money lenders.

No laws to unduly fatten office-holders.

No banking of State funds to dominate party organizations.

There must not be a government by corporations for corporations, but by the people for the people.

And we ask for a secret ballot as far [illegible] it so, bribery and counting [illegible] can be divided.

Our call is to the people.

The people rule in America, if they will, and in Colorado there is great need that the people save themselves from those whose rule means ruin.

Let none rest until it can be said that ours is a clean government, and that our courts are temples of justice in fact as well as in name."

The foregoing call has been issued by a joint committee of the Grange, the Farmers' Alliance, the Knights of Labor, and other organizations in Colorado, summoning a convention to meet at Denver, Aug. 20, to take action on behalf of their mutual interests and for the nomination of State officers.

It is a stirring appeal, and clearly betokens a popular uprising against the many unjustifiable wrongs now imposed upon the toiling and honest masses, the determination to right which is not confined to any particular State, but exists with growing power from end to end of the Union.

The tenor of the above quoted call is just, true and timely, and significantly voices the long cherished and avowed principles of Democracy.

It is a healthy sign.

"The people rule in America, if they will."

Then one and they should, for their own freedom and safety, assert sovereignty, and bury beyond the hope of resurrection political corruption, [illegible] and monopolistic extortion of every name and kind.

They who value and deserve freedom must themselves strike the blow, and if necessary, pile stunning blow on blow.

The political pot will soon begin to boil in Union county. Candidates for Sheriff are plentiful.

Give us good nominations and Union county will roll up her old time majority of the Democrats.

The Democrats of Union county should begin to prick up their ears regarding the candidates for County offices. This is a critical one and none but the best men should be placed in nomination.

READ TO THEIR OWN INTERESTS.

The People of North Plainfield Seemingly Apathetic About the Opening of [illegible] Street in the Borough.

Councilmen Hegeman, Buckle and [illegible], composing the Borough Street Committee, and Mayor Place, met Monday night in the North Plainfield Council Chamber to hear the people upon the question of the opening of Peace street from the city's limit to the [illegible]. Though a number were present, the [illegible] as a whole gave no evidence of their interest in a project of such importance to them.

Councilman Hegeman stated that the meeting was called for the special purpose of considering the opening of Peace street through the Borough, should the City widen it to its limits. The only action the Borough Council could take, he thought, would be to give the tax payers official support and recognition when they came forward with a petition and formulated plan for the opening of the street. The matter had been called up and the present meeting arranged, because of the message of the Mayor concerning the project published in full in The Press of Tuesday, Aug. 5. Mr. Hegeman said further, that he understood the City of Plainfield [illegible] no decided action in the matter, as the Y. M. C. A., had purchased a lot for their new building directly in the line of the proposed widening and extending of Peace street in the city's limits. He understood that the Association had named $6,000 as the amount it would be damaged. Nothing would be done, therefore, until the city did its part in opening the street to the Borough line.

Mr. Hegeman spoke further of the great benefit there would be to the Borough at large, as well as to the property owners directly effected, by the opening of a thoroughfare from the City through the Borough, between Woodruff avenue and [illegible] street.

He said he could speak with assurance for his own committee and with confidence for the whole Council, that they would aid all means the people in anyway towards the consummation of the project.

Still it must be remembered that the Borough was not in a position to do anything financially. It must all be accomplished by private enterprise and public spirit. The people must give their property and their own money. But after the street had been laid out, the Council would keep it in order.

Mayor Place said he had had a talk with Mayor Male about the matter, and found the latter very much interested in it and anxious for the success of the plan. Mayor Male said that he would recommend that the City pay the Y. M. C. A. $2,500 damages for the loss of such portion of their lot as might be thrown into the street, and with that sum they could buy a strip adjoining on the other side. The property of the Association would be more valuable on the corner of a thoroughfare, than as now on the corner of a lane. Mr. MacDonald who is the largest owner on Peace street in the City, Mayor Place said, had agreed to give free all of his land that was necessary for the proposed widening; and though Councilman Manning, who also owned a property on Peace street, had refused to do the same. But until the matter was brought more definitely before the Council by those personally interested and effected, the Mayor thought nothing could be done.

Councilmen Buckle, Needham and [illegible] also spoke of how much the proposed street was needed in the Borough, and how great a benefit it would be to North Plainfield in increased population and value of real estate. John Goodwin, the only one of the people present who had anything to say out loud, said that the Township had years ago spent $1,500 in the making of a way that had the proposed street all laid out, but they found that the Allen estate was entitled to property, and they could not cut through it.

Chairman Hegeman said he would see the Chairman of the Plainfield Street committee and try to arrange for a joint meeting with the North Plainfield Street Committee, of which due notice would be given. The meeting then adjourned.

MAY EAT MEAT ON FRIDAY.

Catholics of Plainfield Can Take Advantage of the Indulgence.

There are many Catholics in Plainfield who are in doubt whether they can eat meat or not next Friday. Many of the Catholic and secular papers have contained copies of a circular in which an indulgence is granted to the members of the church and allows them to eat meat, instead of not doing so as the established rule for Friday.

A number of Plainfield Catholics told a Press reporter this morning that their bishop had given them no notice about the indulgence, but that the information was very generally known. They had no reason to suspect that the circular letter published was not genuine, and if the Catholics of Plainfield wish to take advantage of its provisions, they can do so.

The permission to eat meat on next Friday grew out of a request presented to the Pope in the beginning of the present year. It was known that the Feast of the Assumption, which is one of the most religiously observed of the Catholic feasts, fell this year on Friday, and it was [illegible] necessary for the joyful observance that no restriction consequent upon the feast falling upon Friday should be permitted. It was to this feeling that the attention of the Holy See was called and [illegible] intervention sought. It was promulgated by Cardinal Monaco, Prefect of the Congregation of the Holy Office, on July [illegible]. This is a translation of his letter to Bishops all over the world:

"As the Feast of the glorious Assumption of the Blessed Virgin Mary falls this year on Friday, the Holy Father, Pope Leo XIII., yielding to the solicitations of the Bishops of many Sees, has granted to all Christians throughout the World the privilege of eating meat on that day, August 15, without, however, removing the obligation of fasting on Thursday, the vigil of the Feast. The Holy Father will be pleased that all the faithful, in return for this favor, will say the third part of the rosary, according to this intention."

Mrs. Moore Died With Dropsy.

Mrs. Amelia Moore, wife of David S. Moore of Brooklyn, and daughter of the late Robert J. Randolph of Plainfield, died at the Grand Hotel, Catskill, N. Y., Thursday, August 7. Funeral services were held from her late home, 122 Fort Greene place, Brooklyn, Monday morning. The remains were brought to Plainfield in the afternoon and interred in the Randolph family plot at Evergreen Cemetery. The grave into which the casket was lowered was completely lined with evergreens.

Mrs. Moore was widely known in this city, where, as Miss Randolph, she lived many years on the old homestead at West Front and New Streets.

DIED IN THE CAUSE OF CHRIST.

Frank Gates, Who Left This City for Africa in May, Is Cut Down in the Very Beginning of His Work.

News has been received of the death of Warren J. Harris and Frank Gates, missionaries, at Sierra Leone, Africa, of fever, July 8. Gates is a nephew of Wm. L. Garrett of this city, and Harris is a son of Gen. [illegible] Harris of Augusta, Me.

The young men were in Plainfield, Sunday, May 11, and spoke at the Y. M. C. A. rooms and the Crescent Avenue church. They attracted many friends and sympathizers by their earnestness and sincerity. Mr. Garrett told a Press reporter this morning that he had heard nothing of the circumstances surrounding the death of his nephew. He had just received a letter from missionary Gates' brother, containing merely a statement of the death.

One of the party wrote home upon their arrival as follows:

SIERRA LEONE, WEST COAST OF AFRICA, June 26, 1890.

The little party of eight that sailed from New York May 14, reached Sierra Leone on the 16th of June. The following two weeks have been spent in getting settled in our temporary quarters and in much waiting before God for further plans. We have taken a house for a month or longer, as we shall be led to remain, and are now comfortably located in a healthful place. Not one day of sickness has come to any member of the party since landing and indeed our Lord has been pleased to take from us even the [illegible] that were brought with us from Kansas and elsewhere. [illegible] Neither is the praise for this due to medicine, for not one grain of it has been taken, but wholly to the abiding faithfulness of our Lord, whom alone we trust for all things.

The rainy season had commenced two weeks previous to our arrival and will last through October. This is considered the unfavorable season for both health and travel, especially the latter. Mr. Kingman had therefore thought it would probably be wise for us to remain in Sierra Leone until dry weather, and according to the prevalent idea here anything else would seem out of the question. However, we remember that "the time is short" and "the coming of the Lord draweth nigh." We are reminded also that less than a year ago this little party looking from their Western homes toward Africa through seemingly impassable barriers. When the first three started from Kansas, altogether they possessed not enough to pay the fare of one of them to New York—and yet the number [illegible] to nine and without human promise of support, the impossibilities have faded away, the ocean has been crossed and all now stand "by the will of God," on the border of the [illegible]. After much prayer therefore, it has been decided to send three of the brethren into the interior at once, planning for one to return as soon as the necessary information about the people and country can be obtained, probably in from three to five months. Messrs. Kingman, Gates and [illegible] have been set apart to go forward and bear the hardships while the rest remain behind for a time and minister to them in prayer. We are now arranging as rapidly as possible for the trip and hope that they may start about the Fourth of July. Looking forward to what we know they must encounter through the sun and rains of the season, it is with a deep desire that we can express that we who are left behind ask our brethren at home, with us, to commit unto the God of the sea, and the wilderness, of David and the Hebrew captives, these three who go for His sake into the "regions beyond."

Believing that God himself hath committed unto our prayer and care this great field, we are bold to ask Him for help, and we confidently hope that the great Missionary Convention at Indianapolis next September will be the "Farewell meeting" for the largest Missionary party that has ever left America.

On the next mail I hope to write you more in detail concerning the equipment of the first expedition and also much information that will be helpful for the next party.

They Got Off Easy.

James Cashon, one of the two reckless drivers arrested by Councilman Smalley and Marshal Rutledge in the Borough, Sunday, was arraigned before Mayor Place, on Monday, and fined five dollars. This is the same price charged the other for his share in the offence, and is much too small. Councilman Smalley said he would not again go through what he did in helping to make the arrest, for twice the amount of the fine imposed.

An Equine Wanders Himself.

A horse belonging to a Washingtonville farmer got tired of standing still in front of a Park avenue store this morning and began to embarrass himself for his own amusement and the edification of the public. After successfully removing his head stall he began straining at his collar, and made several futile efforts to walk away from his harness altogether. The current of life among the Park avenue clerks was so fresh that not until all had watched the equine exhibition several minutes did one of them shake off his apathy sufficiently to be able to re-harness the horse.

Bound Brook Suffering From Tramps of Both Sexes.

To THE EDITOR OF THE PRESS:—The people of this place are doing some very deep thinking in regard to having police protection. There are places in town where the rougher classes make their headquarters and insult most every passer by. It is hardly safe for a lady to venture past these places after dark. A lockup is also spoken of, and no doubt one will come before long. With a lockup and a few policemen, the ladies would have no fear of going and coming from church, at least.

A number of girls have banded themselves together and won the name of "The Five Cent Fiends." Every night they are out making victims of all the young men they possibly can. At times they are unsuccessful but most always when they surround their victim, the poor young man for the sake of getting rid of them will gladly pay them each the five cents they demand. Lately a young man was captured by them, who is now doing his best to wipe them out. Every young man in town wishes him success.

A Business Man's View of the Force Bill.

Wm. L. Saunders, of Mercer avenue, furnishes the following to the press for publication:

SIR: I send you herewith a letter which we have just received in the ordinary course of business. It touches so pointedly on a subject of general popular interest at this time, and coming from a representative Southern business man, it seems to me that it might be of interest to those of your readers, who, like myself, regard the South as a field for business, not for battle.

"... You will pardon us for digressing from business matters to politics, and we will here add that a man's politics and religion never have anything to do with us in business. We wish to call your attention to the effect the 'Force Bill' will have upon the business of this country should it become a law. Already our customers are laying plans for curtailing their building and other enterprises they have in view, and they are only awaiting the final action of this bill before they determine what they will do. As to the question of 'boycott,' we take no stock in it and it is not the thing we want. We do not want any law passed which will demoralize, disorganize, and disrupt this great improvement and building boom now upon the South. Our company is composed of Northern men and Southern men, of Democrats and Republicans, and we are all opposed to the 'Force Bill' or 'boycott,' and are in favor of peace and harmony between all sections. Now, if it meets your views, we will be glad to have you use your influence to prevent this iniquitous bill being placed upon us.

Peter Brown, whose house near the mountain was burned some weeks ago, has taken possession of a new house which his friends have kindly aided him in procuring; and he wishes to express to them, through THE PRESS, his sincere gratitude for the generous assistance which they have given him in his time of trouble.

For Plainfield Fishermen to Catch.

Three wagon loads of trout fry have been released by Fish Commissioner F. M. Ward of Newton, in the streams surrounding Dover. Some of the fry were yearlings several inches in length. A great abundance of trout has been caught in the vicinity of Dover this year, and the Commissioner is determined that a plentiful supply shall be maintained.

He Concluded Not to Jump.

Newsboy VanNest, one of the smartest of THE PRESS carriers, ran down the track to the gas house, Saturday, where a Philadelphia express had stopped, and got on the rear platform to show the other newsboys how easily he could get off when the train flew by the station. He was carried through to Bound Brook, however, where he soon sold enough papers to pay his fare back on a coaler.

Elizabethans Bow to Plainfield's Acting Mayor.

Elmore De he Moffatt, says the Elizabeth Journal, who is deputy county clerk and also president of the Plainfield common council, is acting as mayor of that city during the six weeks' absence of Mayor Job Male from the city. The mayor pro tem. bears his honors meekly, and the attaches of the county clerk's office pay their respects to him each morning on his arrival with more dignity than usual.

They Ran Against Rutledge's Club.

Two old sports, James and Charles Cashon, borrowed a horse and surrey of Peter Fender, of North Plainfield, Sunday, and were making things hum along the driveways of Washington Park when they fell into the clutches of the law. They were arrested by Marshal Rutledge and Councilman Smalley. Fender's surrey and new harness were scratched, and the skin had been knocked off the horse in spots. In making the arrests Rutledge swung his club around and struck one of the men a smashing blow in the head.

Fought and Threatened Arson.

The family troubles of Patrick Day of West Third street, are said to have caused another big boulevard row Saturday, and the police have been trying to secure evidence enough to warrant arrests. The fight is said to have originated over the gift of a bedroom suit to one of the younger Days. A Day youth is reported to have struck his father in the jaw, and this, it is reported, promptly caused a free fight. The distribution of kerosene through the house, preparatory to converting it into a huge bon fire, is mentioned as one of the interesting incidents.

A Little Lad Breaks His Leg.

Freddie, the two-year-old son of Mr. and Mrs. Fred. Bird, of East Front street, met with an accident on Saturday evening. While playing upon the back stoop the little one accidently fell to the ground. Dr. Probasco was summoned and upon examination it was found that the large bone of the right leg had been broken. The leg was so swollen that it was impossible to set it until Sunday when Dr. Probasco, assisted by Dr. Hedges, put the limb in a plaster cast. It is not expected that the little sufferer will be able to be around for a couple of months.

Mr. Rose Speaks From Experience.

A very interesting address was delivered in Reform Hall, Sunday night, by Mr. Rose, late of Worcester, Mass. He had formerly been addicted to intoxicating drink, and the story of his reformation, coupled with the terrible results of liquor drinking he had witnessed and experienced, produced a marked effect upon the audience, among whom was quite a representation of young men. George M. Angleman followed with a few appropriate remarks.

President Harper presided, and Mrs. King, Miss Hawkins, Miss Smith and Mr. Spencer composed the efficient choir.

That's Nothing!

TO THE EDITOR OF THE PRESS:—I see by THE PRESS that Messrs Egbert and myself caught 27 black bass on Friday and that one weighed 3½ pounds. Now I would not lie about a little thing like that. The number was correct, but the largest one weighed three pounds and fourteen ounces.

Respectfully,

E. P. THORN.

Oh, well, Ed, don't mind a little discrepancy on weight, like that. You know that you and your old partner have caught a larger number and of more weight, in a day, than last Friday's catch, more than once in times gone by.

Ex-Councilman Bowers a Director.

The New Jersey Postal Telegraph Company has just completed its organization and has begun the construction of its line. The officers of the company are: President, Everett Frazar; Vice President, Henry P. Winter; General Manager, Joseph A. McClary; Secretary and Treasurer, Edward Aldon; Directors, Benj. O. Bowers, of this city; Jos. S. Case, New York city; Gardiner Colby, Orange, N. J.; Everett Frazer, Orange, N. J.; John R. Livermore, Montclair, N. J.; Philip Lowry, Newark, N. J.; Jos. A. McClary, Rahway, N. J.; Francis A. Upton, Orange, N. J.; Henry P. Winter, Orange, N. J. John R. Hardin, of Newark, N. J., has been appointed counsel of the company.

A Rock in His Hand, and Murder in His Heart.

John Keely and Max Newman, the two hackmen who chased each other around the block Thursday evening, throwing stones, pulling coat tails and calling names, appeared in court before City Judge Codington on Monday to answer to the charge of violating city ordinances. Newman pleaded guilty and was fined five dollars. Keely pleaded not guilty, and trial was set for Friday morning at ten o'clock.

Patrick Keely, John's father, was tried on the charge of using profane and indecent language to Policeman McCue when the officer was arresting John by the back of the neck. Patrick was adjudged guilty, and will be sentenced Friday, when he will also be tried on the charge of fast driving on Broadway and Peace street.

Patrick is determinedly on the warpath. He says that Newman was chasing John with a great big rock in his hand and murder in his eye and heart, and he wants Newman arrested for murderous assault. He also wants hackman James Farley arrested for assault and battery, and wishes to bring charges against Policeman McCue for "inefficiency, cowardliness, and rudeness," for ordering a hackman back to his stand when that hackman left his horse and carriage and told McCue that Newman and young Keely were "hitbeliefs" each other.

HOME OF THE COUNTY COUNTRY CLUB.

A Brief Description of the Plans of the Building Already Under Way.

The erection of the future home of the Union County Country Club, is rapidly progressing at the corner of West Seventh street and Arlington avenue, according to the elaborate plans by Architect Barlow of New York, as accepted by the building committee of the Club. The walls of the Arnold house standing on the property, are to be utilized and added to in a grouping that is exceedingly pleasing to the artistic sense and taste, appropriate to the eye and completely arranged for its interior purposes. The club house proper will face on Seventh street, while the Casino will stretch along Arlington avenue. The building will thus form an L in the inside angle of which will be the tennis grounds overlooked by balconies as in a Spanish court.

On entering the club house from Seventh street, members will step into a large reception room about 22x16 feet, with open fireplace, handsome mantels and rich furnishings. From this opens a reading room and a parlor, all of which are so constructed that with the dining rooms on the same floor they can be thrown together should occasion demand. There is also on this floor but not exactly in the club house proper, a ladies room that by its dimensions alone will be a source of gratification to the women visitors. It is just across the foyer of the Casino and opens into the hall at the foot of the staircase leading from the gentlemen's room above.

The Casino's auditorium is 75x40 feet with a convenient stage. 300 opera chairs will seat the audience upon the occasion of concerts by the Melopeia, lectures before the Monday Afternoon Club, private theatricals or other like entertainments. These chairs, however, will not be fixed and will be removed when the Assemblies are held. Below this auditorium floor are four bowling alleys of regulation length, and thoroughly well ventilated by windows opening on Arlington avenue.

This basement story also contains bath, toilet and coat rooms; store rooms and kitchen. The latter is connected by dumb waiters with the butler's pantry adjoining the dining rooms above. Supplies of all sorts and coals will be taken in through an area from the Arlington avenue side out of sight of the Club house windows.

In the second story of the club house on Seventh street, are located a spacious billiard room, four card rooms and a private dining room. From this floor also is a balcony looking on the tennis courts, and opening from the front of the house is a roomy gallery. In the building will be living rooms for the Chef and such other servants as may necessarily be always in attendance. The house complete, but unfurnished, with the price of the land, is to cost $90,000. It is to be ready for occupancy in three months at the most. The construction of the building is in the hands of John Chandler.

The Colored Champions Fall.

The remarkable pitching of Michael Gregg, Saturday, which has never been equalled on the Crescent League's grounds by anybody, defeated the colored Gorhams by the score of 8 to 3. Otherwise the game was not particularly interesting. Jones caught to perfection, and the infield was up to the mark. McIndoe played with his usual listlessness and did not even try to make a hit. Gillis got two singles, a two-bagger, and two earned runs. At last an umpire to suit the cranks has been discovered. Wash Berriman, of the Brooklyn Association, who officiated Saturday, pleased everybody. The attendance, in spite of threatening weather, was 800. The score:

Fought Over a Game of Cards.

Jacob A. Clark and Alfred J. Upton were enjoying a game of cards in Bock's saloon, a few evenings ago, when a dispute arose and Clark made an uncomplimentary remark concerning Upton's veracity. As a quick and effective way of responding to the assertion Upton struck Clark heavily between the eyes. The sharp seal of his ring cut Clark's nose open, and Clark went outside, bled several pints of blood, and sought out Justice Nash, in whose office he bled another pint. On Clark's complaint Upton was arrested and held under bonds to await the action of the Grand Jury. Monday Upton, who had admitted Clark's charge, made a counter-complaint that Clark had stabbed him in the hand with a knife. Clark denies the accusation, but will have to furnish bonds for the Grand Jury.

Who Are the Sons of Revolution.

The officers of the Society have issued a neat pamphlet containing the Constitution, By-Laws, and list of members. The objects of the Society as simply set forth in the Constitution, are purely patriotic, historical and social. Any descendant of the Revolution of the age of twenty-one years is eligible for membership, provided that he be properly vouched for by "at least one member of the Society or some well-known citizen of New Jersey;" and the eligibility clause has been so carefully and clearly worded as to render it impossible for any man to obtain admission whose ancestor did not render material service to the cause of American Independence. The initiation fee is $5, and the annual dues $3, the payment of $50 constituting a life membership in the Society.

The greater part of the book, some eighteen pages, is devoted to an alphabetical list of 126 members who have been admitted to the New Jersey Society prior to the 20th of May. The following were the members from Union county up to that date:

Andrew D. Mellick, Jr., George P. Mellick, Charles W. Opdyke, Capt Samuel C. Peek, Jr., Julian Scott and Wm. M. Stillman, of this city. Alexander S. Brown, George C. Brown, Dr. Henry R. Cannon, Henry B. Cannon, David B. Downer, Gov. Robert S. Green, George B. Halstead, Col. Rufus King, Joseph G. Ogden and George T. Parrott, all of Elizabeth. Joseph T. Crowell and John H. Lafferty, of Rahway, and Appleton Morgan, of Westfield.

Of the 126 members, there are two sons of Revolutionary sires, twenty-five grandsons, eighty-nine great-grandsons, and nine great-great-grandsons.

They'll Do What They Think Will Benefit the City.

It is said that the Little 5 will oppose the putting of a fire alarm service in the city, just because it is proposed by the Big 6. This may not be so—but the vote will tell. However, if the Big 6 think it will be a benefit to the city, the service will come.

The Best Plainfielders Eat.

M. A. Haven, Manager for the Plainfield Beef Company, reports that during the week ending Saturday he has sold 30½ carcasses of beef, each weighing on an average 665 pounds, at an average price of 6.66 cents per pound. The number of sheep and lambs sold during the week was 146, and the average price per pound was 9.46 cents.

Who Located That Lamp?

In 1889 an electric lamp was located on Stiger alley at the corner of Lake street. It has burned there out of sight at some expense to the city, ever since. The Council of '9 however, do not see the necessity of it, and have instructed the Lamp Committee to take it away and save the people the price of it. By the way, who located it there?

Those of the Little 5 Make a "Mistake".

Councilmen Jenkins, Johnson and Rushmore, the Auditing committee of the Council, did not pass Officer Grant's bill for police duty with the rest of last month's bills, and he has thus been kept out of his wages.

Such an act will be considered a mighty mean piece of spite work by those who may not hear that Chairman Jenkins says it was a "mistake."

Boys, Read This.

Among the new New Jersey laws is one relating to smoking by boys, which provides that on and after the 1st of September next, no child actually or apparently under sixteen years of age shall smoke or in any way use cigars, cigarettes or tobacco, in any form whatever, in any public street, place of resort, and that any violation of this act shall be a misdemeanor punishable by a fine of not more than $10 nor less than $2 for each offence.

Saved a Month's Interest on His Fine.

A battle was waged between two denizens of the festive boulevard, about a month ago, and such a noisy fight it became that even the neighbors of the delectable region raised objection. As a consequence one of the fighters, Peter Ross, was arrested and fined $5. The other, Michael Cox, kept his successful hiding till Friday, when he fell into the hands of the law and was taken before City Judge Codington. He pleaded guilty and was on Saturday fined three dollars.

A Plainfield Lawyer President of a Shoe Company.

The long established business of J. Bach & Sons, manufacturers of fine shoes, which was founded by the elder Bach many years ago, passed into the hands of a new regime Friday, when a number of capitalists met in Plainfield and incorporated "The Bach Manufacturing Company." The incorporators were Harry M. Bach, Albert Bach, Michael Regan, Wm Abel, M. Murphy and L. Heltzmann, of New York; Wm. A. Coddington of Plainfield; Geo. M. Homan, A. J. Redden and Frank P. Haffner of Dunellen, and J. R. Phillips of Evona. The capital stock paid in was $50,000. Wm. A. Coddington was elected President, and will have charge of the Plainfield office of the concern. The *membership of the Board of Directors in*cludes W. A. Coddington ex-officio, F. P. Haffner and A. J. Redden of Dunellen, and J. R. Phillips of Evona. Mr. Haffner is Vice President, Mr. Homan Secretary, and H. M. Bach Treasurer. The manufactory will continue to be at 30 Warren street, New York.

Property Changing Hands.

The following transfers of real estate in this city and vicinity, have just been recorded:

Randolph M. Stelle, of Plainfield, to Sarah F. Brett, Plainfield, land on West side of Central avenue, Plainfield, intersection of Stelle avenue, 200x200 feet, $4,000.

Central New Jersey Land Improvement Company to David Ballan, of Brooklyn, lot in Plainfield, East corner of South avenue and Prospect place, 125x40, $350.

Frances T. Humbert and William P. Humbert, of New York city, to James Frank Hubbard, of Plainfield, land on Madison avenue, Plainfield, 139 feet South east from corner of Sixth street, 55x154 feet, $1,925.

Frances T. Humbert and husband to F. Adelbert Dunham, of Plainfield, land in Plainfield, on Madison avenue, 84 feet Southeast from Sixth street, 55x158 feet, $1,925.

Walter L. Hetfield, exr of Antoine Debaud, deceased, of Plainfield, to William Frano, of Fanwood, lot on West side of Barth avenue, 100 feet Southwest from Stout avenue, 50x100 feet, $60

Walter L. Hetfield, exr to e d erick Coombs, of Westfield, two tracts of land in Fanwood township, on stage road or Main street, containing 30-100 acres and 2 acres 4 rods, including the old Scotch Plains Hotel and grounds, $7,152.50.

The Growth of Christianity.

H. K. Carroll, D. D., of North Plainfield, Chief Clerk of the Bureau of Religious Statistics of the eleventh census of the United States, with offices in the Chotola building, this city, furnishes the following figures for publication. They are the only statistics officially coming from him. In some cases the figures are estimates, but on the whole the results very closely approximate the truth.

There are in the United States 151,261 churches of all denominations, 103,300 ministers, and nearly 22,000,000 members. During the year there has been an increase of 8,500 churches, nearly 4,900 ministers, and nearly 1,000,000 members.

The most numerous denomination is the Roman Catholic, with its 7,500 churches, 8,300 priests, etc., and 8,277,000 population, of whom 4,676,000 are estimated to be communicants.

Then come the Methodists, with, in round numbers, 4,980,000 communicants; Baptists, 4,292,000; Presbyterians, 1,229,000; Lutherans, 1,086,000; Congregationalists, 491,000, and Episcopalians, 480,000.

The increase in the Catholic population during the year was 421,700. The estimated gain in Catholic communicants was over 238,000.

The growth of Protestant membership was 668,000. The Methodists gained more than 256,000, the Baptists more than 213,000, the Lutherans 98,000, the Presbyterians nearly 40,000, the Congregationalists more than 16,000, and the Episcopalians about 9,200.

The accession of new members was even larger than these figures, since in every denomination there were deaths of members whose places were filled by new acquisitions. The number of deaths in the Methodist Episcopal body, for example, was reported at 28,300.

This is a highly satisfactory and encouraging showing to all who have the welfare of the church at heart. A gain of nearly 1,100,000 in membership in one year, with a corresponding increase in the number of churches and ministers, indicate that Christianity is marching on with no uncertain stride.

METHODISTS IN MORMON LAND.

Bishop Vincent Present at the Laying of the Corner Stone of the Utah University in Ogden, U. T.

The corner stone of the Utah University of the Methodist Episcopal church was laid there Tuesday afternoon with appropriate and brilliant ceremonies. The foundation and much of the superstructure of the majestic main building are completed upon one of the most eligible and sightly locations in the city. The landed and money endowments of the university are already large; and the series of buildings, costing upward of $500,000, will be pushed rapidly to completion. They will include the main building, men's hall, ladies' hall, library, laboratory, gymnasium, observatory and residences of the faculty.

The programme embraced appropriate music and the solemn ceremonies of the Methodist ritual. The corner stone was set in place by the Rev. Bishop John H. Vincent, formerly of this city, and the famous founder of the Chautauqua assemblies of the World. There was an immense concourse of people present, including distinguished representatives of the church and public dignitaries.

*The address of Bishop Vincent was elo*quent, and prophetic of the value and achievements of the institution in the causes of Christian education, civilization and patriotism.

A Furniture Store Changes Hands.

E. B. Fairchild has sold his furniture business to his brother, Geo. H. Fairchild, who has already taken possession. E. B. Fairchild will remove with his family to Yonkers, N. Y., Sept. 1, to assume proprietorship of an old-established furniture house at that place.

The Rejected Suitor Gets the Bridegroom's Cash.

A young colored fellow named Gordon, whose home is in Plainfield, is being sought for by the Newark police. Gordon visited Arthur Thompson, a newly-married colored grocer, of Thomas street, Newark, Monday. Thompson had never met Gordon before, but Gordon had been an old flame of Mrs. Thompson when she was Martha Rich, a Westfield damsel, and the Plainfielder was told to make himself "entirely at home." Soon after Gordon's departure Thompson missed his *savings of $175 cash, and at once connect*ed their disappearance with Gordon's absence. He told the police at once.

Marshal Rutledge's Club Again.

Another offender arrested in the Borough and brought before Mayor Place Monday night, accused Marshal Rutledge of clubbing him. It is about time that the Marshal should be notified that he must stop his too free use of his club or it will be taken away from him.

The prisoner mentioned was accused by the Marshal with being drunk and disorderly, and of threatening him. The Marshal had no witnesses, so the accused could not have been very disorderly nor have "exposed" himself much when there was no one in sight, and it was after dark of Saturday. The Marshal said that the prisoner threatened to cut his throat.

The accused was too teutonic to entirely understand the Mayor and the Marshal. He said, however, in a general way to the latter: "You vas a lie!" A companion of the accused testified that he heard him say to the Marshal: "I'll gut your drote of you clup me some more, already!" This witness whose name was John Bremmer, also said to the Marshal: "Don't you hit him!"

The Mayor fined the accused $10, and $2.50 costs. It was paid on the spot.

Lock Thrust Upon a Morris County Farmer.

Everybody has seen and admired Palmer Skillman's big gray coach horse. Its mysterious disappearance was told of exclusively in THE PRESS some week's ago. The camps of the outlying gypsies and the stables and barns of the vicinity, were thoroughly searched by amateur and professional detectives actuated by a tempting $50 reward. Still no trace was discovered anywhere.

The owner, who is occupying the handsome home called "Norwood," on Somerset street, had given up all hopes of getting back the horse which was valued at $1,200. It was supposed that thieves had dyed the animal in a way to disguise it, and had subsequently sold it. The family were compelled to content themselves with their bob-tailed span of cobs, and their stylish surrey horse.

But the big gray has been found. It strayed into the fields of a Chatham farmer who kept it and advertised for an owner in the Morris county papers. When Mr. Skillman heard of this he applied at the address given, identified his horse and presented the farmer with $50. The latter used the money towards lifting a mortgage off his little property.

Changes in Realty.

The following are the transfers of real estate in this city, and consideration therefore, recorded in the County Clerk's office recently:

Central New Jersey Land Improvement Company to Charles H. Westphal, of this city, land 33x52. $100.

John B. Mills and wife and Francis S. Runyon, of this city, to Nicholas Bowers, of Warren Township, Somerset county, N. J., lot Northeast side of Bay street, 100x40, $2 660.

Wm. M. Stillman and wife, of this city, to Amanda Doty, of this city, land on Southeast side of Fourth street, corner of Prescott place, 100x50, $2,000.

Cyrus W. Field and others of this city, to Mary Field of this city, 29-100 acre land corner of Liberty and Third streets, $1.

Mary Field to Daniel H. Thickstun of this city, lot on Liberty street, 50x100, $400.

Fredrick F. Glasby, Sheriff, to Isabella L. Titsworth and John H. VanWinkle, executors of Randolph Titsworth, deceased, land on Southeast side of Front street, this city, 58 feet Southwest from Netherwood avenue, being 52x143 feet, foreclosure of mortgage held by the estate of R. Titsworth against Albert H. Jones and wife, $1,259.40.

—A man from South Plainfield tried to maintain possession of the entire length and breadth of Plainfield avenue, last night, but was unsuccessful. This morning he was fined five dollars for intoxication.

New Postal Cards for Women.

The Postoffice Department has issued orders for samples of pearl gray postal cardboard. This board is to be used in the manufacture of cards to be used by women and is intended simply for a correspondence card. The card for women is to be one-third smaller and the business card one-third larger than the present card. The mill is now running two machines on the cardboard for the regular cards. The card factory prints 2,200,000 cards daily and from 1,950,000 to 2,000,000 of these are packed ready for shipment each day.

SPEER'S

GRAPE WINES,

ALSO

UNFERMENTED GRAPE JUICE

Used in the principal churches for communion. Excellent for females, weakly persons and the aged.

ADOPTED IN HOSPITALS AS THE BEST FOR INVALIDS

Speer's Port Grape Wine,

FOUR YEARS OLD.

THIS Celebrated Wine is the pure juice of the dead ripe Oporto Grape, raised in Speer's vineyards, and left hang until they shrink and become partly raisined before gathering. Its invaluable Tonic and Strengthening Properties are unsurpassed by any other Wine. Being produced under Mr. Speer's own personal supervision, its purity and genuineness are guaranteed by the principal Hospitals and Boards of Health who have examined it. The youngest child and the weakest invalid use it to advantage. It is particularly beneficial to the aged and debilitated and suited to the various ailments that affect the weaker sex. It is in every respect A WINE TO BE RELIED ON.

Speer's Unfermented Grape Juice

Is the juice of the Oporto Grape, preserved in its natural fresh sweet state as it runs from the press by fumigation and electricity, thereby destroying the exciter of fermentation. It is perfectly pure, free from spirits, and will keep in any climate.

Speer's (Socialite) Claret

Is held in high estimation for its richness as a Dry Table Wine, especially suited for dinner use.

Speer's P. J. Sherry

Is a Wine of superior character, and partakes of the rich qualities of the grape from which it is made.

Speer's P. J. Brandy

IS A PURE distillation of the grape, and stands unrivaled in this country for medicinal purposes. It has a peculiar flavor, similar to that of the grapes from which it is distilled.

See that the signature of ALFRED SPEER, Passaic, N. J., is over the cork of each bottle.

CITY DEPARTMENT

OFFICIAL PAPER OF THE STATE, THE COUNTY AND THE CITY, AND HAS THE LARGEST CIRCULATION OF ANY PAPER PUBLISHED IN THE COUNTY OF UNION.

A. DEMAREST, - - City Editor.

—The wild carrots in the City Park are knee high.

—The New York Sun says that a pessimist is a man who growls, even when the home club wins a game. Plainfield is full of 'em.

—On the door of a little shop next to Rogers's coal office, is this sign: "This exchange will be closed until Sept. 1st. The manager has gone away to have a good time."

—The tournament of the Middlesex Gun Club will take place one week earlier than previously announced. Instead of October it will be in September. Full notice later.

—The oil in a lamp at U. B. Crane's store on Park avenue, caught fire Saturday night and threatened serious consequences. A clerk carried it out and put an end to the blaze.

—There will be interesting shooting matches on the grounds of the Middlesex Gun Club, August 27, at live and inanimate targets. In October there will be a week's tournament on the grounds.

—During the morning service, Sunday, in the Bound Brook Reformed church, a portion of the ceiling fell and striking Mr. Conover on the arm badly bruised him. A PRESS correspondent writes: "The officers of the church arose and left precipitately."

—One of the old barns on the Gardner estate on East Front street, just above the Stiles building, collapsed Monday, and a portion of it was carried away by the water of the raceway over which it stood. The barns have been landmarks a long time.

—Farmers in the vicinity of Plainfield report legions of rabbits this year. They say that this game has not been so plentiful before in fifteen years, but don't let anybody get over-excited. Perhaps the report is set afloat to boom the powder and shot trust.

—The piano that was in the Crescent League club house and badly damaged at the time of the fire, was covered with a "floating" policy that went with the instrument wherever it was rented. It was the only piano so covered of all the music dealer had rented.

—A large bat flew into a Plainfield drug store last night and caused considerable excitement among clerks and customers. The bird knocked over several bottles and caused two or three crashes in glassware. It finally flew through a window-pane and vanished.

—Ex-Officer Eugene Laine came to the rescue of an unfortunate man, Thursday. Dennis Shanis, who works for L. A. Sheridan & Co., was overcome with the heat or some other sickness, and fell on North avenue. Laine carried the man into his shop, and after much effort succeeded in reviving him.

—The Plainfield Hod Carriers' Union was organized at St. Mary's Hall, their regular place of meeting, Monday night. Officers were elected as follows: President—Patrick Bergen; Vice President—N. Kelly; Secretary, Thomas Brown; Treasurer—James Muldowney; Sergeant-at-Arms—John Burns. The Union has thirty-seven members.

—In that haven of saintly rest, Asbury Park—remarks the New Brunswick Home News—a local doctor and a Plainfield drug clerk have had a good, square, old-fashioned slugging match because they could not agree about the fatality of one of the doctor's prescriptions. Had such a thing happened anywhere else it would have been regarded as lamentable.

—Through the kindness of Joe Miller, the manager of Lew Dockstader's Minstrels an attractive advertisement banner has been flung to the breeze across Front street, opposite Music Hall, announcing the date of performance here, August 28, of the newly-organized George Thatcher's Minstrels. Joe is generous in thus advertising his friend, who is also in the same line of business.

—The Plainfield fisherman who are always complaining about the scarcity of bait may be interested in knowing that a good way to secure angle-worms for bait is to make a strong solution of salt water and sprinkle it over the ground thoroughly where the worms are likely to be found, when they will speedily crawl out. This is a method that involves no labor and dismisses the use of a spade on a warm day, a consideration of vast importance to Reed, Rockafellow, Vanderbeek, Swain, Stelle, et als.

—The workmen engaged in cleaning out the sewer-basins along the streets of this city, seem to consider it a part of their duty to act as a society for the dissemination of disagreeable odors. Instead of removing the malodorous excavated material promptly they dump it along in great heaps by the curbing and let it lie, offending sensitive nostrils, as long as possible. Monday the point of offence was the corner of Park avenue and Front street. Tuesday it was the Park avenue railroad bridge. It is impossible, however, to cart it away until it drains dry.

Still Crazy Enough for Confinement.

John Ryman, of Sumner place, North Plainfield, who was taken to the insane asylum three months ago, was brought home "cured" last week, but Monday he became again violent, ripped up his wife's carpets, smashed pictures and tried to get hold of weapons to kill his neighbors and himself. Tuesday he was taken back to the asylum.

His First Vacation in Eighteen Years.

Peter Hoagland, the expressman, whose face is familiar to all Plainfielders, has left town for an extended visit among relatives in Illinois, Wisconsin, Iowa and Kansas. This is Mr. Hoagland's first vacation of any kind since he bought his express business of Charles Bryan, in 1872. His constant and careful personal attention to business has brought him a large custom, the care of which has of late been so great as to make a period of rest imperative. During his absence his son, Alvin E. Hoagland, who has for some time been associated with him in the business, will be in charge of the express, which is now the oldest established in Plainfield.

Prof. T. J. Miller, formerly Vice Principal at the Stillman High School, and very popular in Plainfield, has accepted the professorship of Latin at Brown University, Providence, R. I. Before taking the chair he will make perfection perfect by studying a year at Yale.

Thirteen musical compositions by Dorsey W. Hyde, including three piano pieces, an anthem and nine selections for the organ, have just been accepted by the John Church Publishing Co., of Cincinnati, Chicago and New York. The young composer so honored, deserves it.

L. E. Woodson, Secretary of the Endowment Rank, Knights of Pythias, received a check Monday morning for $3,000, payable to Mrs. Amy E. Lorton, widow of the late Eugene V. Lorton, who died on the 12th ult. This is considered one of the promptest returns on record for a similar case.

Miss Georgie L. Chamberlin of Madison avenue, will in September discontinue her present work at Chautauqua Headquarters in Buffalo, and will become Secretary of Dr. W. R. Harper's new Chautauqua School of the English Bible, with headquarters at New Haven. She will have charge of correspondence with pupils all over the World.

A persistent party of expert whist players, including Mrs. Eaton and Mr. Tobey, Mr. Eaton and Mr. Kirk, who have played night after night for a month past in the reading room of The Netherwood, found when they adjourned Friday night that the continuous count stood 1309 to 1301. Only one point difference in [illegible].

Miss Phoebe Neal, daughter of Rachel and the late Wm. H. Neal, died at her home on Central avenue on Saturday, after a brief illness. She went on the excursion of the Park Avenue Baptist, First Presbyterian and Congregational churches to Asbury Park August 1, and during the day was stricken with nervous prostration, which resulted in her death.

Mr. and Mrs. John C. Berry of Craig place, Tuesday, observed, in a quiet way, the sixty-first anniversary of their wedding day. They were surrounded by their children, grandchildren, and great-grandchildren. Owing to the illness of one of the great-grandchildren, no attempt at elaborate celebration of the event was made, but all pleasantly enjoyed the day.

John K. VanNess has taken possession of his recently purchased "Rutka Villa" on East Front street, and will soon commence the erection of a handsome new dwelling on the premises. Mr. VanNess is a prosperous attorney, whose office is at 212 Broadway, New York.

Love Letters Stopped the Way.

Two young ladies sat in a carriage on Park avenue on Tuesday, reading letters, and all unconscious that they were causing a blockade of vehicles. A bad tangle of horses and wagons resulted. When the girls got ready they folded up their correspondence and drove merrily away, while coachmen frowned and tradesmen's drivers said naughty things.

American Day at Asbury Park.

In the article which appeared in THE PRESS recently, relating to the grand celebration and parade of the Jr. O. U. A. M., at Asbury Park on August 20, next Wednesday, their was an error in the time. The train will leave Elizabeth at 8:30 returning leave Asbury Park at 9 instead of the time mentioned before. The tickets will be one dollar from Elizabeth.

Just a Sample of "News."

A correspondent who has been reading a lot of dead religious notices used to fill up the empty columns of another paper, asks if the Rev. Mr. "Stinson" is pastor of the New Market Baptist church, as that paper has stated for weeks and weeks. A sufficient reply to the query is: "If you don't see it in THE PRESS, it isn't so." The Rev. Mr. Cubberly is pastor of the Baptists, and the Rev. Mr. Stinson of the Presbyterians of Dunellen and New Market.

A Child Carelessly Run Over.

Frank Campbell, the young son of druggist Campbell of Stelle's pharmacy, was run over by a horse and phaeton at the corner of Park ave., and Front street, on Thursday. The lad was carried into Stelle's, and as soon as a carriage could be procured was sent home. It is thought that no bones were broken, but the boy is severely bruised, especially about the legs. The accident is attributed to the carelessness of the driver, who drove on without being recognized.

Who Are These For?

The following letters are now lying in the post office awaiting identification. Even Second Assistant Postmaster Godown can't guess where they are intended to go:

Mr. Cornelius
260 Six st.
in care of Mr Bil Gard

Mr. John Slamery
117 Shefield st
New Jersey

Mr. Willie Hill
Yorktown
Under Hill
In haste

Out of Town Jockeys Race Plainfield Horses.

The local sporting fraternity enjoyed a half-mile race between George Conover's bay horse "Doctor" and N. B. Smalley's grey horse "Frank", on the track of the Gentlemen's Driving Park Association, August 6. The stakes were $20 a side. Dudley Clark, of Westfield, who weighed sixty-eight pounds, rode "Doctor", and Jockey Miller, of Somerville, rode "Frank". Andrew Lutkins started the race, and Peter Emmons, Andrew Love, Jr., and August Trust were the judges. "Doctor" early took the lead and won by a few yards in fifty-nine seconds. That's pretty good time.

Vice President Corwin Condemns the New Stamp.

Charles B. Corwin, of East Ninth street, was elected Vice President of the American Philatelic Association, at the session Aug. 6 of the fifth annual convention of the Society, and was toast-master at the annual banquet at the Manhattan Beach Hotel [illegible] night.

On the centre of each menu card at the banquet was a four-cent stamp of the new series, bearing an excellent portrait of Abraham Lincoln. Vice President Corwin said that this stamp was the best executed one in the new series, and that the new two-cent stamp was an abominable botch and was condemned by the association.

Must Plainfield be Forever Misrepresented Abroad?

That the World is still the victim of fake correspondents in this city, is again shown by the following in this morning's issue. There is not a word of truth in the whole story, as everybody knows:

> The hot weather of the past few weeks has produced rabies among the mongrel homeless dogs in the country surrounding Plainfield. In the past few months several mad dogs have entered the city limits, caused consternation among the people and bitten several dogs. These were so far as possible killed. On Monday a small bull dog went mad and bit several dogs on Somerset street, a cow and some hogs belonging to a resident of Greenbrook road, and was killed after beating a small dog to pieces. The bitten dogs were either instantly killed by their owners or are kept securely chained to await developments.

—Ed. Thorn and his "old partner" Tuesday nearly broke the record of a recent catch of black bass reported in these columns by Ed. and friend. They caught thirteen "dandies," as the saying goes, and could have done better, only they desired to leave a "few" for others. A monster snapping turtle had the audacity to swallow a choice bait on partner's hook, and became a captive in consequence. The scene of the "catch" was at Cranford river. Now don't all go at once.

A TRAMP AS A TENANT.

Tribulations of a Netherwood Farmer With an ex-"Hired Man".

A Netherwood farmer was approached Tuesday last week by genteel tramp, who asked politely if he might repose in the farmer's barn.

"If you want work"—said the granger—"I'll give you an abundance of it, and you may not only sleep in my barn, but I'll give you wages besides."

The honest tramp confessed that he desired employment, but had been refused so many times that he was disheartened, and had grown weary of asking.

With much joyousness, therefore, he received the farmer's orders, first, to take care of a herd of cattle, and departed with jubilation to the meadow indicated by the horny-handed tiller of the soil.

Not for long, however, did the new "hired man" attend the lowing herd. He had been told to turn the bovine creatures into another pasture, drive them to their watering-place, bring back two calves for market, and let the others roam about at will till nightfall.

He satisfied himself with turning them loose into the wrong field, a neighbor's, and then made a circuit to the barn, where the farmer found him, some time later, sleeping contentedly in the haymow with the stem of a lighted pipe held loosely between his teeth.

With a Pan-American war-whoop the farmer aroused the cherub-faced gentleman of leisure and ordered him to "clear out".

The tramp carefully arranged his garments and sauntered away. At nightfall, however, he quietly returned, and in the morning, yesterday, his urbane countenance once more smiled on the irate farmer. The tramp was once more verbally ejected, but four times during the day the farmer again discovered him reclining on the greensward in various parts of the farm, and once in the corn-crib.

At evening twilight occurred the final exasperation. The farmer had been working hard since five o'clock, and returned at about seven, to find the tramp sitting placidly on the back steps pointing out to himself the beauties of the sunset. This time the farmer kicked the tramp, who smote not back, but grew mournful of feature and walked away.

The farmer was hot, and not very hungry. He ate but little supper, and then started out for a stroll across his cool broad acres. Not a hundred yards away the tramp sat on top of a rail fence. The farmer got an axe and snaked his way Indian fashion through the grass. When within twenty feet of the fence the tramp dismounted and turned and smiled on the farmer.

"I guess you must be wantin' me to move on," he said.

The farmer leaned against the fence, and the tramp went on two hundred and fifty feet and sat down, his back to the farmer, near the barn. For nearly half an hour the farmer kept sneaking up with his axe, and the tramp kept discovering him just in time to wander to some other spot. A public road was near at hand, and, though it was now growing dusk, a number of wheelmen and one or two driving parties had halted to witness the scene. By and by the farmer crawled into a wet ditch with water in it and went back to the house in anger, disgust and wet soiled clothes, and with a rusting axe. This morning, bright and early, the tramp slunk out of the farmer's barn and sat down on the railroad bank near the pumping station of the new water works, where he became apparently absorbed in studying the science of hydrostatics.

The farmer has discovered that his larder is being systematically robbed. The tramp will probably be around again to-night, and so will the farmer and his little gun.

Lost a Finger in a Mill Wheel.

Charles Amerman, in the employ of M. H. French, the miller, was adjusting some of the gearing of the mill, when a wheel weighing about 200 pounds fell on the index finger of his right hand, severing it at the middle joint as completely as if done by a knife. Dr. Probasco dressed the wound.

There's a Law Against Sling-Shots.

A large number of Plainfield boys carry sling-shots, or catapults, and not only carry them, but use them with considerable effect along the streets. Song birds are daily maimed and killed by them, and not a few window-panes are broken. Besides, people walking out where the whizzing sling-shot missiles are flying about are constantly in danger of being struck. Last evening a woman walking along Sixth street was stung in the face by several small shot. She gave a short cry and saw a small boy hastily thrust something into his pocket and scamper away in the darkness. There is a legal penalty for the mere carrying of sling-shots and similar weapons, and for the results of using them there are penalties which in many cases are very severe.

Looking for a New Home.

The meeting of the Crescent League, on August 6, being principally for a consideration of the purchase of a club property, the attendance was unusually large. President Reed occupied the chair, and Charles Lyman was elected Secretary.

Fully one hundred members took part in the discussion of plans for a new home. A number of desirable locations were considered, but that which was most generally favored was the home of the late Henry C. Latimer, on the corner of Front street, and Bank place. A resolution was offered to the effect that the Board of Trustees be authorized to purchase the property if it could be bought for $6,000. This is the figure at which it had stood in the market for some time until the League confessed an approval of it. Then the price advanced to $6,500, and to $7,000.

The resolution that the Latimer property be purchased, was unanimously lost. It was the expressed sense of the members, however, that not more than $6,000 be expended for any property for club purposes.

Sidewalks Not Made for Wheels.

Bicycling on sidewalks is again getting to be a great nuisance in Plainfield. Most of the offenders are young men of a smaller growth, and their impudence in taking possession of the places that belong to pedestrians is ofttimes astonishing. Complaints come from various parts of the city, but the commuters who rush down Broadway and Park avenue every morning seem to be especially aggrieved. The young wheelmen, with an air of superb impudence, dash up and down along the smooth pavements, swerving neither right nor left, and calmly maintain possession of the centre of the walk as far as they please.

Plainfield's driveways are good enough for anything that runs on wheels, and if there isn't considerably less violation of the sidewalk-riding ordinance, some of the violators may find themselves in trouble. It must be said for the ladies who ride that most of them bravely obey the law and show no hesitation about taking their chances among the crowds of horses and wagons on the business streets. They seem satisfied with the driveways, and they set a good example.

How Intelligent Women Decide.

When the question has to be met as to what is the best course to adopt to secure a sure, safe and agreeable remedy for those organic diseases, which afflict the female sex, there is but one wise decision, viz., a course of self-treatment with Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription. It is an unfailing specific for all functional disorders that render the lives of so many women miserable and joyless. They who try it, praise it. Of druggists.

Cut by Falling Plaster.

A part of the ceiling in the dining-room at the home of Mrs. L. Prescott, 31 West Second street, fell at noon Saturday. Mrs. Mary L. Force, the mother of Mrs. Prescott, was slightly cut on the head by a piece of the plaster.

A Hackman's Horse Over a Bicyclist.

A daughter of Asa Collier was riding a new safety bicycle on the driveways at Crescent Park Saturday when a horse and carriage driven by a hackman collided with her machine and threw her to the ground. The horse was driven directly over both wheel and rider. The bicycle was considerably damaged, and the girl was severely bruised.

Jabbed Tolu in His Eye.

A young short-haired miss engaged in the cultured occupation of manipulating chewing gum with smacking lips and soiled fingers was walking up West Front street on Saturday when a grimy, barefoot urchin of eleven Summers crept up to her side, whispered a juvenile insult in her ear and drew back grinning, and expecting "sass." The girl said nothing, but her eyes blazed volumes, and with a sudden sweep of her arm she slapped her treasured chewing gum into the eye of the broad-mouthed youngster. The boy set up a howl, clawed away at his injured and gummed-up optic, and danced about in grotesque attitude on the pavement. The girl walked on majestically, evidently conscious of having resented an insult with maidenly dignity and effectiveness.

Badly Hurt in a Runaway.

Jno. Mahyer, who works the Blake farm in the neighborhood of Stirling, back of the Watchung Mountains, was seriously injured in a runaway accident on Somerset street, North Plainfield, Saturday afternoon.

He was driving near Arnold's store when his horse was frightened and dashed off towards this city. Mahyer did his utmost to check the mad plunges of the an*imal, but at Harmony street his* wagon struck an obstacle and he was thrown heavily to the ground. He still clung pluckily to the reins, but was dragged with his foot in the wheel over the ground. At Craig place he was forced to release his hold, and found himself suffering such severe pain that he had to be assisted to Warren Engine House.

Three physicians, Dr. Carman, Dr. Mattison and Dr. Hedges, soon reached his side and attended to his hurts. He had bad cuts and gashes on the face and back of the head, and was injured seriously in various parts of the body. Fears that his skull was fractured were dispelled by examination.

Struck an Innocent Man.

Those gathered in Chas. Smith's barroom Thursday night were startled to see the head barkeeper strike his assistant heavily across the face with the flat of his hand, and punch him in the chest with both fists. Instead of striking back, the subordinate, whose eye was already beginning to swell from the force of the blow, went upstairs, removed his apron, and put on his coat and hat. He told the chief dispenser of beverages that he was going to leave, and asked for his money. The head barkeeper said he owed him none, and the other walked out.

Friday morning the victim of the head bartender's wrath sought out Justice Nash, and asked him to collect $6 due him from his former chief. Justice Nash examined into the case and said that as the man had left of his own free will before his time was up he could not collect anything. The head bartender denied that any wages were due.

The trouble is said to have originated because Mr. Smith's little boy told his mother of something the head bartender had done. The head bartender thought his subordinate had been the tale-bearer, and therefore struck him. The assistant bartender said he would have had his assailant arrested for assault, but Mr. Smith was away, and if the arrest were made there would be no one to take charge of the saloon.

A Gay and Goodly German.

The German at The Netherwood, Friday night was complete in every way. Its consummation left nothing to be desired, and when dancing ceased at one o'clock this morning not a feature that combines to make such affairs enjoyable, had been missing.

The ladies looked unusually handsome and were especially well clothed. None were more charming nor more bewitchingly attired than Mrs. Oliver B. Bridgman and Mrs. H. A. Lattin, who distributed the favors so satisfactorily. These pretty gifts were selected in New York by Miss Plum and the Misses Forker, chaperoned by Arthur Rice. Supper was served at eleven o'clock.

The dance was led by H. W. Williams, and well led, too. He introduced a number of new figures that of course augmented the success of the affair. Eighteen couple took part, including Mr. and Mrs. H. W. Williams, Mr. and Mrs. D. F. McCabe, M. and Mrs. W. E. McCreedy, Mr. and Mrs S. C. Scott, Mr. and Mrs. A. E. Wimple, Mr. and Mrs. H. D. Brewster, Mr and Mrs. W. J. Thorn, Jr., Mr. and Mrs. W. H. Raser, Mr. and Mrs. W. J. Boome, Mr. and Mrs. Trafton, the Misses Forker, Miss Plum, Miss Gregory, Miss Burt, Mr. Weston, Mr. Rice, Mr. Webster and Mr. Bridgman.

Musicale at Hotel Netherwood.

A very enjoyable musicale arranged by Mrs. F. E. Miller for the entertainment of the 200 guests of the Hotel Netherwood, was carried out August 6, with entire success according to the following programme:

PART I.
OVERTURE—To the Opera, "Raymond."..Thomas
ORCHESTRA.
SONG—"The Stirrup Cup."...... ....Arditi
MR. W. E. MCCREEDY.
PIANO SOLO { a. Waltz, ...Thome / b. Air de Ballet, ...Chaminade
MISS QUINLAN.
FLUTE SOLO—"Mélodie de Chopin."......Chopin
MR. W. H. GARDNER.
SONG—"Beauty's Eyes," (with Flute obligato)..Tosti
MRS. W. E. MCCREEDY.
PART II.
MARCH—"Fidelis,"....................Leo Pinner
LEO PINNER AND ORCHESTRA.
VIOLIN SOLO—"Serenade,"..................Schubert
MASTER [illegible] L. PINNER.
WALTZ SONG—"Il Bacio,"...................Arditi
MRS. W. E. MCCREEDY.
PIANO SOLO—"Pavane,".....................Sharpe
MR. LEO PINNER.
FOURTH SYMPHONIE—Allegro-Vivace..Beethoven
ORCHESTRA.

It is needless to say that the entire programme was commendable and received sincere approval. The vocal solos of Mrs. McCreedy and the instrumental solos of Mrs. Quinlan, were especially worthy of note; while the performances of Mr. Pinner and his son excelled the efforts of many professionals. The numbers rendered by Greenop's philharmonic quartette, were remarkably praiseworthy. The Netherwood has never before had such an orchestra.

At the close of the programme, the artists were tendered a little supper by Mr. Miller, served in the famed "Parlor B."

—The excursion of the Temperance Society and the Emerald Association, connected with St. Mary's church, takes place August 27. The trip includes a fine sail up the East River, to Grand View Park, on the steamer Blackbird and barge C. A. Arthur, allowing all an opportunity to witness the many interesting sights that are to be seen. Dancing will be indulged in, and Prof. Cahill, of Elizabeth will furnish the music. All who go will be assured of a pleasant time.

Died in Her Mother's Arms.

A woman with a child in her arms dismounted from an afternoon train at Dunellen Friday and engaged a hack-driver to take her to Taylor's Hotel. On the road her child gave a sudden gasp and died in her arms.

Plainfield Knights to Parade.

Plainfield members of the Uniformed Rank, Knights of Pythias, are planning to participate in the annual parade of their order in New Jersey, to be held at Red Bank, Sept. 1. Nearly one thousand Knights are expected to attend. During the day there will be a competitive drill for valuable prizes.

Paralyzed While at Work.

Chas. A. Westervelt was at work decorating the interior of a house, Thursday afternoon, when he was stricken with paralysis. His tools fell from his hands, and he sank to the floor. He was assisted to his home at No. 7 New street, and medical aid was summoned. His entire right side is helpless, and his voice is paralyzed. He is a well known fireman.

Not Satisfied With Their Success.

Two hundred dollars is the profit to the Reform Club from Thursday's excursion. Except for a tedious delay at Brooklyn, which was no fault of the Club management, the day's entertainment was thoroughly enjoyed. The Club is so elated that they propose running an excursion to Mauch Chunk, next month.

A Reporter Discovers an Unprecedented Case.

There is a child on LaGrande avenue who is suffering an attack of whooping-sneeze. Unless THE PRESS is mistaken, it is the first to record such a case. The neighbors have been kept awake recently by a noise they could not describe nor account for, until the reporter discovered the phenomenon. The child "whoops" and sneezes in rapid succession for many minutes at a time.

The Correct List.

The following is the official list of the Commissioners of Deeds for this city, appointed by Governor Abbett, as recorded at the County Clerk's office. There has been an omission in all previously published lists.

First ward, Walter L. Hetfield, Louis F. Wadsworth, and Edward P. Thorn; Second ward, John Mortimer and James A. Demarest; Third ward, Levi C. Kline; Fourth ward, Wm. A. Coddington.

The Testimonial of a Connoisseur.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE PRESS:—I wish to call the attention of the ladies of Plainfield to the taste and ability of Wm. J. Stephenson of North avenue, as a caterer. From experience I know that he is qualified and equipped in every way to furnish as well-ordered, well-cooked and well-served a supper as most of the metropolitan caterers, and at a price more satisfactory.

MRS. GEORGE LISSIGNOLO.

Gershom Gives the Little Ones a Fresh-Airing.

It is evidently the desire of Gershom *Frazee to be known as the George Fran*cis Train of Plainfield. Scarcely a day passes that he does not appropriate, for a time, the use of one of the toy wagons standing on the sidewalk in front of a Park avenue store, pick up some wandering infant in the street, jam him in the wagon, and give him a ride around the block. Certain youngsters are now beginning to look for the favor, and very soon Gershom will have his hands full of his self-appointed work of humanity.

Changed Their Constitution to Elect Mr. Corwin.

The members of the American Philatelic Association, which has just concluded its fifth annual convention at New York, were so anxious to have Chas B. Corwin of East Ninth street, as their Vice President, that they made a change in the Association's constitution expressly that he might be elected. Heretofore no two officers could come from the same State, and one of the officers holding over was a Jerseyman. Acting on Mr. Corwin's idea, the Association will give an exhibition of the postage stamps of the World, in New York, next year.

Mistress and Servant "Cuss" One Another.

A story of household infelicity was reported to Police Captain Grant Tuesday by Lizzie Mallin, who had been working for Mrs. Martin Geagan, of West Front street. Lizzie said that she and Mrs. Geagan had had a row, and Mrs. Geagan had abused her and sworn at her.

"Are you sure she swore at you?" asked the Captain.

"Yes," was the response. "And I swore at her too."

"I guess you were as much to blame as she," said Mr. Grant, and advised her to make no complaint.

Lizzie said she'd have the satisfaction of leaving, anyway, and went to Mrs. Geagan's to resign and get her clothes and wages.

The Universal Complaint.

(From the New Brunswick Home News.)

The postal arrangements for transmission of newspapers are simply outrageous. New York morning and evening papers arrive here by mail three or four hours after publication, but Plainfield and other New Jersey papers, which reach New York in the evening, do not reach here until from one to three days.

For instance, a Plainfield paper mailed there at four o'clock Monday was not delivered at this postoffice until this morning and that is a common occurrence. Subscribers to the HOME NEWS complain that it takes three or four days for them to get their papers in places like Asbury Park, Long Branch, etc., and frequently three or four papers are delivered at a time. Such mismanagement of the mails is unbearable and calls for immediate remedy in New York.

Mr. Plummer Says Mr. Darling Ruined Him.

John F. Plummer, whose home was formerly in Plainfield, where he was widely known, has arrived at Duluth on his way from Tacoma to New York. He is the guest of Charles M. Colby, ex-president of the Wisconsin Central and a prominent stockholder in the Northern Pacific, who is returning with a party of friends in a special train from a trip to Alaska.

Mr. Plummer stated that although he had lost all through the dishonesty of his partner, he was as hopeful as ever, and believed he would yet retrieve his fortunes. He said he contemplated embarking in an enterprise on the Pacific Coast which he thought would yield him good returns. As Messrs. Rockafeller and Colby, his warm friends, are heavily interested in the Puget Sound country, it is probable that he will be interested in schemes with them. Mr. Plummer declares that he has done with a mercantile life.

Sought for the last hundred years: a remedy for catarrh, hay fever and cold in the head, found at last in Ely's Cream Balm. Safe and pleasant to use and easily applied into the nostrils. It gives relief at once and a thorough treatment positively cures. Price 50 cents.

A GROVE STREET MYSTERY.

Story of a Strange Bundle and Its Sensational Sequel.

A man with a straw hat and a big brown bundle is the cause of a sensation that has just begun to spread in Plainfield. The individual with the headgear of vegetable fibre crossed the Grove street bridge from the Borough at dusk Monday evening, bearing a large package with wrappings of a diluted chocolate color. At the high board fence inclosing the grounds at the rear of the Schepflin building the stranger halted a moment, tossed his burden over the fence, wheeled about, and returned to the seclusion of North Plainfield.

Wm. Campbell saw the queer proceeding, and at once reported to Geo W. Grant, Captain of Police, that he had run against a mystery. Captain Grant visited the scene of the bundle-throwing, and by the aid of Mr. Campbell's friendly boost was able to see the bundle as it lay where it had rolled, down the bank sloping towards the raceway, in a corner of the fence. The gates were closed and locked for the night, and owing to the presence of a sharp-edged fringe of spikes along the fence-top the fence could not be scaled. It was therefore decided to let the bundle lie in its seclusion till daylight.

At five o'clock Tuesday morning the gates were opened according to custom. Between that hour and the hour when Captain Grant arrived the bundle vanished. It has not been heard from since, nor has any one interested in solving the mystery of the bundle seen anything of the man with the straw hat.

Next morning, however, Nicholas Conway found in the spot where the bundle had been, a cigar box filled with tiny bones, seemingly those of an infant. He devoted hours to detective work, in his efforts to ascertain the source of the box and its osseous contents, before he found out that his friends in Schepflin's had been playing a practical joke.

If the second bundle was a joke, however, the original package wasn't, and the employes of Schepflin & Co., are spreading among their friends the tale of mystery, and all are wondering what was in the bundle and why it appeared and disappeared so strangely.

Peaches a Failure but Jersey Farms a Good Investment.

A correspondent writes that the peach crop in Southern New Jersey has been a disastrous failure this season. Orchard after orchard has barely enough fruit to furnish a dozen cans of preserves for the owners. The reason for this is said to be that the very mild Winter caused the trees to blossom, which was followed by blighting frosts. One may ride over a large tract of country without finding half a dozen trees which bear any fruit at all. This means a considerable loss to the farmers down there who rely largely on their orchards for their profits.

On the other hand, there has not been such a successful berry season as the one just passed in many years, and some of the farmers have cleared large sums out of their berry farms. Sweet potatoes are also unusually promising, and perhaps between them and the berries the farmers will be tided over. As a rule South Jersey farms are very valuable and give large net returns.

In talking with the farmers the writer learned that the value of the farms has increased very largely within the past few years, although the vineyards have proved failures. In a number of instances farms that had been bought for $2,000 five years ago have recently been sold for $10,000 and $15,000. A good deal of speculation is going on there, too, and some of the farmers are holding land with the expectation of continued increase in values.

And Old Army Wound Stops a Sermon.

A colored preacher visiting in Plainfield preached in the Immanuel Mission rooms, in Cutter's Hall, Sunday, and was in the midst of his discourse when an old sore, the result of an army wound, burst, and bled so profusely that in a few minutes the preacher became very faint, and medical assistance had to be summoned. The minister was assisted from the pulpit to his stopping-place. He is still confined to his bed with the resultant weakness.

A Denial Concerning John Reinmann.

Mrs. Reinmann, whose husband was returned to the Trenton asylum, Tuesday, as still uncured, says he was not violent in any way. When Dr. Ward permitted the patient to leave the asylum Saturday, he told Mrs. Reinmann that he could not tell how her husband would be affected upon returning to live among his children and neighbors; and he told her to send Reinmann right back if he was the least flighty.

The unfortunate man remembered all his old friends and familiar faces, when he arrived home Saturday evening, and greeted everybody cordially. He was perfectly rational until Sunday night when he insisted that the pictures in the room were hung crooked, and he got out of bed and took them down. It was therefore thought best to return Reinmann to the asylum, and he accompanied his wife there Tuesday as told in THE PRESS. Mrs. Reinmann wishes to deny all reports that were given the papers for publication, to the effect that her husband was violent.

Indigestion

IS not only a distressing complaint, of itself, but, by causing the blood to become depraved and the system enfeebled, is the parent of innumerable maladies. That Ayer's Sarsaparilla is the best cure for Indigestion, even when complicated with Liver Complaint, is proved by the following testimony from Mrs. Joseph Lake, of Brockway Centre, Mich.:—

"Liver complaint and indigestion made my life a burden and came near ending my existence. For more than four years I suffered untold agony, was reduced almost to a skeleton, and hardly had strength to drag myself about. All kinds of food distressed me, and only the most delicate could be digested at all. Within the time mentioned several physicians treated me without giving relief. Nothing that I took seemed to do any permanent good until I commenced the use of Ayer's Sarsaparilla, which has produced wonderful results. Soon after commencing to take the Sarsaparilla I could see an improvement in my condition. My appetite began to return and with it came the ability to digest all the food taken, my strength improved each day, and after a few months of faithful attention to your directions, I found myself a well woman, able to attend to all household duties. The medicine has given me a new lease of life."

HOW CAN THE LONG BE THE SHORT ?

A line may be a very long one and yet be the shortest between given points. For instance the St. Paul, Minneapolis & Manitoba Railway has over 3,000 miles of road; magnificently equipped and managed, it is one of the greatest railway systems of this country; for the same reasons it is the traveler's favorite to all points in Minnesota, North and South Dakota and Montana. It is the only line to Great Falls, the future manufacturing center of the Northwest; to the fertile free lands of the Milk River Valley; and offers a choice of three routes to the Coast. Still it is the shortest line between St. Paul, Minneapolis, Fargo, Winnipeg, Crookston, Moorhead, Casselton, Glyndon, Grafton, Fergus Falls, Wahpeton, Devils Lake, and Butte City. It is the best route to Alaska, China and Japan; the journey to the Pacific coast, Vancouver, Tacoma, Seattle, Portland and San Francisco will be remembered as the delight of a life-time once made through the wonderful scenery of the Manitoba-Pacific Route. To fish and hunt; to view the magnificence of nature; to revive the spirit; restore the body; to realize the dream of the home-seeker, the gold-seeker, the toiler, or the capitalist, visit the country reached by the St. Paul, Minneapolis & Manitoba Railway. A LITTLE BOY'S "THANK YOU."

The Agreeable Change That Was Wrought By a Bit of Politeness.

It was a tall, grim building, crowded among other tall, grim buildings in the midst of a great city's noise and confusion. The sunshine, because of those high buildings on every side, was for the most part shut away from it. The fresh breezes from the wide flower-scattered prairies were tangled among a network of streets and alleys, and tainted with many a city odor before they reached it, and the smoke from the many tall chimneys around hung over it in a cloud that dropped everywhere in a sooty grime. Inside the long rooms the din of machinery sounded from morning till night, and a company of men and boys hurried about their work for the most part in a decidedly surly fashion. For the outer grimness seemed to have crept, not only within the thick brick walls, but also within the hearts of the men who made up the force of Short & Farnham's large printing establishment.

Nobody could tell just when it began or quite how it came about; but so it was that every one in the tall building—took it the contagion of habit—from the proprietor in his private office down through the foreman, the compositors, the pressmen, to the messenger and errand boys, all went about incased in gruff indifference. Indeed, from long disuse, courtesy and politeness had become so unknown that any one who had ventured upon them would have been scoffed at for his pains. Outward kindness of speech and manner were in evident disrepute, and bluntness and rudeness had become the rule. As one of the men had expressed it, the motto at Short & Farnham's was "Every man for himself." And the worst of it was that they rather prided themselves than otherwise on this state of affairs.

Into this establishment there came one new boy, Jimmy Allen. He was a little fellow not more than ten years old, the youngest, the smallest, the weakest in the whole building. The other boys played tricks upon him, the men ordered him about. But an atom of humanity he seemed—a most insignificant atom at that, whose head, you would have said, could hold no power whose influence would be so feeble as to tell on the air unfelt and unanswered.

It was but a few days that he had been at work when the foreman had occasion to send him a long distance, and, with the parcel he was to take, handed him a car fare.

"Thank you," was Jimmy's acknowledgment, with a smile, as he took the coin.

"See here, youngster," and the foreman's voice was more than usually crusty, "we don't put on any such frills here. Thanking folks isn't in our line; and you had better save that sort of thing for some place where they use it."

Jimmy looked up at him with a surprised expression in his frank, blue eyes. "If you please, sir," he said, respectfully and half timidly, for the foreman was to him a very important personage, to say nothing of being decidedly formidable, "my mother"—and Jimmy's voice trembled slightly as he mentioned the name that represented to him now but a memory, the dearest earth held, but still a memory only—"my mother told me to always say 'Thank you,' when any one did me a service or a favor; and I wouldn't feel right not to say it." Then taking his parcel, he sped on his way.

The next noon it fell to Jimmy to carry the foreman the pail of hot coffee for his lunch. He took it from his hand with a responsive "thank you."

"Isn't that a considerable change?" was the comment of a companion who was eating beside him, and who noticed the act, simple in itself, but noticeable because so unusual there.

"Well, he thanked me for a car-fare yesterday, and I don't want to have less manners than a boy ten years old," replied the foreman, who did not care to repeat the reproof that the wee lad had so innocently and unconsciously given.

"There is nothing in that," admitted the other, looking thoughtfully after the little figure as it passed down the long room.

So Jimmy, the youngest, the smallest, the weakest of all the employes in the great printing establishment, went his way, with his cheery face, obliging manner and ready and smiling "thank you" for any and every service of kindness.

It may be that others among the men shared the foreman's feeling; that they did not want to be outdone in politeness by a child, or it may be that his example shamed them, or touched and aroused the latent kindliness of their natures. At any rate, as daily he went in and out among them, more and more frequently did he receive his little coin of courtesy again; a little coin of courtesy, trifling in itself, and of value as a [illegible] interchange so [illegible] and gladden life, bringing always more to the givers than to the recipients.

Then, from acknowledging a service at Jimmy's hands, it was an easy transition to acknowledge the same from each other. So, though nobody could have told exactly how it came about, yet, as the weeks went by, a change gradually became apparent—the working of a leaven that in time extended from foreman, compositors, pressmen, and messenger boys to the proprietor in his office. And, as a result, the tones grew softer, and manners less brusque, and kindly words and little acts of thoughtfulness more frequent. The clouds of smoke still hung over the tall building, the sunshine [illegible] and broken; but a gleam of [illegible] sunshine—that of all is the most truly of the skies—had pierced the darkness of the living walls, and lingered there to cheer and lighten the toilsome days. And little Jimmy, youngest, smallest and weakest of all, as he went his daily round, with his bright face and pleasant word, thought it must be because he was getting better acquainted with the men at Short & Farnham's that they seemed so much pleasanter than when he first came. He never once dreamed, in the modesty and humility of his young heart, that it was the magic of his simple "thank you" that had worked the transformation.—Christian Intelligencer.

Princess Louise's Walking Work—Girls We Can't Tell—A Story from Narragansett—The Prettiest Woman in New York—An Entertaining Flirtation.

[COPYRIGHT, 1890.]
[Special Correspondence.]

The Henley shirt is doomed. Four-in-hand scarfs, diamond shirt studs, natty jackets and mannish silk sashes with big buckles will delight the eyes of my dear Four Hundred friends no longer. I have a haunting fear that even the pretty pangee-leather top-boots must go, too.

All these jaunty things have had sentence of eternal banishment pronounced upon them by no less a personage than Mrs. Elliott F. Shepard. She says they're loud and fast and not becoming; and that, really, ladylike women—but wait; I'll tell you just exactly what she said.

I got into a Fifth avenue stage the other day after a narrow escape from dislocation of the spine—Fifth avenue stage drivers have a pleasant habit of starting up when you are about half way in. And there I found Mrs. Shepard with a friend. They had come to the city for a day's shopping; and, just as women do who belong to the Four Hundred Thousand they were discussing what they were going to buy.

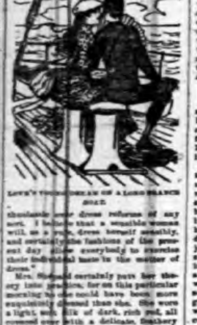
"I don't object to a silk blouse," said Mrs. Shepard. "Indeed, I think them rather pretty, and they are certainly very cool and comfortable. But the Henley shirt and all its appurtenances are in the abominations."

"But the Princess Louise wears one," said her companion, slyly.

"Yes, and she carries a cane, too. But if there is any thing that I dislike more than mannishness, it is the craze for copying every thing that English royalty does. I have an additional reason now for disliking the Henley shirt."

Then the ladies drifted into general fashion talk and Mrs. Shepard's friend asked her if she had ever worn the divided skirt.

"No," said Mrs. Shepard, and she said it in a way that indicated that she never intended to, either. "To be honest," she went on, "I'm not very enthusiastic over dress reforms of any sort. I believe that a sensible woman will, as a rule, dress herself sensibly, and certainly the fashions of the present day allow everybody to exercise their individual taste in the matter of dress."

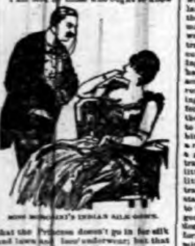


LOVE'S YOUNG DREAM ON A LONG BRANCH BOAT.

Mrs. Shepard certainly puts her theory into practice, for on this particular morning no one could have been more exquisitely dressed than she. She wore a light, soft silk of dark, rich red, all covered over with a delicate, feathery figure in black. The skirt was plain, save for a graceful drapery of airy, black thread lace. The waist was made surplice fashion, shirred down to a point in front. Her hat was of cream Tuscan with airy trimmings of black gauze. Mrs. Shepard never wears any birds. She is a member of the society of women who have pledged themselves never to wear as an ornament anything which encourages the slaughter of birds.

I had two or three glimpses of the wife of the Marquis of Lorne while she was here. I think it requires some exercise of the imagination to make oneself believe that she is beautiful. She has the fresh, red and white complexion and abundant, glossy hair of all well-groomed English women. She looks wholesome and good, but her figure is much too stout for grace, and her taste in dress is—well, I don't blame Mrs. Shepard for her remark.

I am told by those who ought to know that the Princess doesn't go in for silk and lawn and lace underwear; but that she wears wool all the year around, high in the neck and long in the sleeve. If all these things be true one might almost get the impression that American girls haven't Anglomania so badly, after all.



MISS MOROSINI'S INDIAN SILK GOWN.

The young ladies from the Berkeley Lyceum who are in the country are profiting by the year's instruction in swimming which they received. It makes them independent. There is no longer any more excuse for the assistance of a manly arm in the water than there is on land. And it gives to them the, perhaps unChristian, but, all the same, delicious knowledge, that the other girls are envious. The Berkeley girls can dive and float and tread water, and deep water has no terrors for them.

Ella Wheeler Wilcox has an aesthetic suit of pale blue. She is quite a diver. I have seen her take a downward plunge from an elevation of twenty feet.

Miss Minnie Hatch is another graceful swimmer. She is taking her plunges at Narragansett pier.

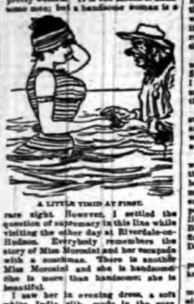
And the mention of Narragansett pier brings to my mind a little story which has been wafted in on the breezes from the romantic pier. It is of a beautiful young girl who had an experience. She is a belle, and lives in a big, old-fashioned country house a few miles back from the coast. In the same house lives a gentleman whom she disliked and whose attentions she scorned. On that fearfully hot Tuesday, which will remain on record so long as records endure, after darkness had come it occurred to the young lady that she would bathe. She went to a little pond—it wasn't big enough to be called a lake—where she had often been before in the daytime. She fancied herself that it was her own individual bathing place. It was a sequestered spot almost hidden by big, friendly old trees. It was so deserted on this hot evening that when [illegible] got there it occurred to her that it would be delightful to dispense with the trammel of a bathing suit, for once. So she entered the water in the same condition that Venus is supposed to have come out of it. Scarcely had she done so when she discovered to her horror that the object of her aversion was there before her.

A [illegible]

Involuntarily her eyes fell and she saw that the sandy bottom of the pond was plainly visible. Upon that sandy bottom rested her pretty feet. She could see them plainly, and if she could see them, that awful man must have seen them too.

The story winds up with the statement that the young man overcame the young lady's dislike for him and earned her eternal gratitude, by resolutely turning his face away and shutting his eyes while she escaped.

There has been a great deal of discussion from time to time as to who was the prettiest woman in New York. The discussion is rather senseless, it seems to me, for New York is not famous for pretty women. It is the Mecca of handsome men; but a handsome woman is a rare sight. However, I settled the question of supremacy in this line while visiting the other day at Riverdale-on-Hudson. Everybody remembers the story of Miss Morosini and her escapade with a coachman. There is another Miss Morosini and she is handsome. She is more than handsome; she is beautiful.



A LITTLE TIMID AT FIRST.

I saw her in evening dress, a soft white India silk, made in the very simplest style. You might almost have called it a wrapper, made low-necked and sleeveless. It was confined at the waist with a white silk girdle and was worn without an ornament, save a single, great, creamy rose, fastened at the breast. I thought of Tennyson's Alice, who > "Went by dale and went by down,

> With a single rose in her hair."

Miss Morosini has splendid dark eyes and a wealth of blue black wavy hair. Her figure might be modelled for that of Diana. Of course I offer my opinion for only what it is worth; but I think Miss Morosini is the handsomest woman in New York.

I see the season's moralist has come to the front and has begun to lecture upon the sin and folly of flirting. I may be very wicked, but I think it's a sin to deprive the boys and girls of their bliss of flirtation. I have a firm belief in the old chestnut that "there's nothing half so sweet in life as love's young dream." I got a lot of real, genuine enjoyment the other day, aboard the iron steamer, watching a young couple going down to Long Branch. He was about twenty, and wore a bicycling suit with a natty round jacket. She wasn't so old by a year or two. She wore a girlish costume of pretty foulard, with a Fauntleroy collar of lace and a cunning little soft cap nestling down over her bangs.

CARRIE CARELESS.

A SMART DOG.

A Little Dog That Waves a Red Flag When a Train Is Signaled.

Scarcely any one who passes the point of intersection of the Gravois road and the St. Louis & Oak Hill railway fails to notice a little dog acting as flag-man at the railway crossing. This little animal is named Curly and is the property and assistant of Flagman Edward Howard, stationed at the above named crossing. Curly is a Spanish fox terrier, scarcely over two feet in length and not quite two years of old. When the Oak Hill Railway Company began to operate its road Flagman Howard was assigned to watch the Gravois road crossing, and to trim the signal lamps. Curly made her home at the watch-house and when her master would go out to collect the switch lamps the dog would lie down at the door and patiently await her master's return. One day as Howard was busy cleaning the lamps a train dashed into sight around the curve. Several wagons were approaching the crossing, and would probably have driven on, meeting with a serious accident, had not the little animal rushed past its master and began barking furiously, which had the desired effect of stopping the teams. An idea then struck the master to train the dog to hold a flag. She could stand on her hind feet with perfect ease, and to hold a red signal flag in her mouth would be a great help to him, as the passing trains are numerous. It took but very little time "to break her in" to hold a little red flag, and now every time a train whistles she runs to fetch it, and, standing on her hind legs, holds it aloft to warn drivers of wagons of the danger. The engineers all know the little dog and look out for her. Curly performs a variety of tricks and is a good mimic. Just now she is rearing a family, but every time an approaching train whistles she gets her flag and does her duty.—St. Louis Post-Dispatch.

Curious and Useful.

You have a mill in your mouth for grinding food, and a good one it is. It has twenty teeth in it on purpose to grind up this food, and while this mill is at work there are little factories there preparing a fluid to moisten it, too.

And just as the food of plants needs moistening. The rain does that when it falls and soaks into the ground. In the spring of the year the farmer loosens the earth, to break up this food so that the plants can use it better. If the rain does not come for a long time the food is so dry that they can not manage it well, and they wilt and die. The dry earth is to them just what our food would be if we had no fluid to moisten it. These saliva factories of ours do a great deal of good, and we could not well live without them.—Mrs. G. Hall, in Our Little Ones.

—A new colony of strange people are farming southeast of Pierre, S. D. They are under the leadership of a woman, and hold their property all in one common lot. The woman is rather handsome and of commanding presence, and rules over the colony of about two hundred in a rather despotic manner. Their religion savors somewhat of the Mormon and old Jewish religion, and recently they offered burnt offerings in the way of calves, etc. They positively refuse to allow strangers who will not be one of them in their midst, and all attempts to gain any information from them by the ordinary means have failed. They have called their town Moab.

—Somebody has been collecting figures giving the distance to which sound is conveyed under favorable atmospheric conditions. J. S. Stranahan states that the whistle and the noise of the train on the trestle at Erie were formerly heard at a distance of nineteen miles. W. J. McC[illegible] of San Pablo, Cal., writes that on calm, clear days, especially in the fall, they hear the rumble of the cars on a trestle located eighteen miles distant. J. H. S. says that he has frequently heard the railroad shop whistle at Grand Island, while living at Orville, a distance of twenty-eight miles. C. V. Swartwout, Cape Vincent, N. Y., frequently hears the whistle at Kingston, Ont., twenty miles.

TEMPERANCE IN BOSTON.

Howard Fielding Becomes Involved in the Meshes of Reform.

The Chow, the Coacher and the Pickle as Aids to Moderation in the Use of Strong Drink.

[COPYRIGHT, 1890.]
[Special Correspondence.]

In passing through Boston a few days ago I met a middle-aged temperance crank, who claims to be a friend of our family. He called me his dear boy and fractured a few bones in my hand. A great grip has he; and I was glad that my hand wasn't a dollar because in that case he never would have let go.

"You haven't been in Boston lately," said he, "and doubtless you notice and are delighted with the change."

"I am delighted to find that by living in some other town I'm able to have a little change in my pocket," said I. "Boston is not what you'd call remunerative to a young man."

"Ha! ha!" said the temperance crank, in metallic accents. He is one of those men who greet a modest attempt of that kind with the hearty and jovial note of approbation affected by the laughing hyena when he finds a new corpse in the desert. "That isn't the change I was speaking of," he continued, "though it amounts to the same thing in the long run. I refer to the new law regulating the liquor traffic."

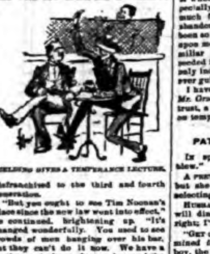
I thanked him for supposing that I must have learned all about it in the fifteen minutes since I arrived. In fact, I had read about it in the papers, as most people have done, but had not thought much about it.

"A great law, that," said he; "a great step forward in the cause of temperance. But, of course, it is only a step; we shall go further. We are too lenient with the saloon-keeper.

"I believe in temperance, sir, and I would have it even if we had to call out the militia and shoot the neck off every bottle in the city. We haven't punishments enough. We don't stick closely enough to the one great cause of temperance in all things. I'd have every liquor dealer hanged, sir, hanged on Boston common where our forefathers first showed how to resist tyranny. Down with the saloon power."

"It is hard to make the mass of the people coincide with these moderate and reasonable views," said I.

"Yes, unfortunately it is," he admitted, "and the more's the pity. Why, sir, any man who fails to deposit his ballot in favor of temperance legislation ought to be whipped to the ballot-box with raw hides, and his children disfranchised to the third and fourth generation.



FIELDING GIVES A TEMPERANCE LECTURE.

"But you ought to see Tim Noonan's place since the new law went into effect," he continued, brightening up. "It's changed wonderfully. You used to see crowds of men hanging over his bar, but they can't do it now. We have a grating up in front of every bar, and the men who want to drink must sit down at little tables. Let's walk by Tim's place. I like to have him see me for it must make him rave. I've been an humble instrument in the hands of the Lord in this reform; yes, blast me if I haven't, and nobody else has been anywhere alongside of me."

We walked down toward Tim's place, and I couldn't help feeling sorry for him, in spite of my naturally strong principles against over-indulgence. Graves, the crank, led the way into the place, much to my surprise, and took a seat at one of the tables. Then he turned round and glared at Tim, who stood behind the grating which guarded the bar.

Tim, contrary to my expectations, was looking very well. He had gained ten pounds or so of flesh, and wore rather better clothes than in the old days. His saloon was much more handsomely fitted up. He remembered me and nodded cordially.

Immediately, a long, thin female who looked ridiculously like the typical Boston "blue-stocking," brought a plate of crackers and a dish of cucumber pickles, and placed them on the table between Graves and me. Graves bit a cucumber in two, and I thought that the milder acid of the pickle softened his expression into something like a smile.

"I suppose we ought to buy something," said I. "It is hardly right to use his chairs for nothing."

"I would not add to the profits of his nefarious business," said he.

"Then have a glass of water," I replied, "and I will take a whisky cocktail for medicinal purposes. I have had a bad night on the boat."

Whether by mistake or the promptings of Tim Noonan, the waiter brought two cocktails, and set one before Graves, whose wrath was something fearful to witness, and was mollified only when I drank the two cocktails in order to get them out of his sight.

There were not many people in the place. Four men sat at a table near us, and were ordering drinks in turn. As they had forgotten where the rounds began they would probably go on indefinitely, trying to make the thing come out even—at least, that was the explanation which Tim whispered in my ear. In a corner sat a man with his head on the table. Several young clerks had dropped in for a hasty glass of something cooling—for the day was very hot—and having met friends were chatting comfortably at the tables, while their employers doubtless wondered where they were.

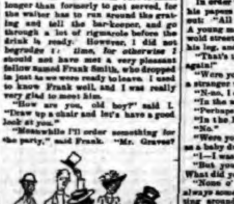
I was just rising to leave the saloon, when who should appear but my old friend Tom Banks. I hadn't seen him for years. We greeted each other affectionately, and then I introduced Graves.

"Won't you and Mr. Graves have something?" asked Tom, summoning a waiter. Graves scowled, and I excused him to Tom, but of course, after that, I had to order something myself. I took a mild punch, for I am not a man who indulges in strong drink.

Under the new Boston rule it takes longer than formerly to get served, for the waiter has to run around the grating and tell the bar-keeper, and go through a lot of rigmarole before the drink is ready. However, I did not begrudge the time, for otherwise I should not have met a very pleasant fellow named Frank Smith, who dropped in just as we were ready to leave. I used to know Frank well, and I was really very glad to meet him.

"How are you, old boy?" said I. "Draw up a chair and let's have a good look at you."

"Meanwhile I'll order something for the party," said Frank. "Mr. Graves? Pleased to meet you, Mr. Graves; what'll you have?"



FIELDING AND FRIEND GO HOME.

Graves wouldn't have any thing, but the rest of us had a little claret with mint.

"You're quite right 'bout it, Mister Graves," said I. "A Boston s'loon's a different place now."

"It's a heap more nice and comfortable," said Tom. "Hello, here's Billy Webster; you used to know him, Howdy, didn't you?"

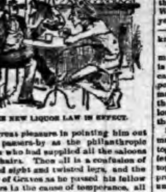
"Know Billy? Well, I sh'ay I did. Come 'long, Billy, an' moisten your epiglosh—epiglochis—epiglottis. Had it right in my throat all time, but somehow couldn't get it out."

Billy always has money sticking out of all his pockets, and he ordered a bottle of champagne. Graves took another cucumber pickle.

"Shu shay, Tom," said I, "'s a heap more comfo'ble drinking this way than kicking toes off un'er a bar. Gen'lemen, 'low me to introduce Mizzur Graves. Mizzur Graves's the man who ins'tuted this reform. All drink to Mizzur Graves."

By the time that Billy's bottle was empty several more friends had dropped in. I couldn't really say how many. Sometimes I thought that there were five and then again there appeared to be ten, so I ventured to put the inquiry: "How many are you of there, anyhow?" whereat everybody laughed. A good many people seemed to be laughing all about me, and I was on the point of getting offended when Billy said: "Sit down, Howdy; it is the effect of the new law."

The next thing I remember Mr. Graves was bundling me into a herdic, and we were riding down Tremont street. I was just preparing to go to sleep when an express wagon knocked the hind wheels off our conveyance, and I went out through the back window, which I understand was only seven-by-nine in dimensions. Graves picked me up and braced me against a lamp-post, where for a few moments I stood, and took great pleasure in pointing him out to the passers-by as the philanthropic citizen who had supplied all the saloons with chairs. Then all is a confusion of crooked sight and twisted legs, and the horror of Graves as he passed his fellow laborers in the cause of temperance, all of whom appeared to have turned out especially for that occasion. It was too much for his generosity and he finally abandoned me to the fate which he had been so largely instrumental in bringing upon me. Fortunately I made out a familiar hotel near by and in it I succeeded in sleeping off the effects of the only indiscretion of the kind that I was ever guilty of.



THE NEW LIQUOR LAW IN EFFECT.

I have just finished a brief note to Mr. Graves which contains, I hope and trust, a strong presentation of my views on temperance legislation.

HOWARD FIELDING.

PAT, PERT AND PUNGENT.

In speaking of color, "the winds blew."

A pretty girl isn't often in a hurry, but she usually takes a short-cut when selecting a bathing suit.

Husband—Dr. Foote, the chiropodist, will dine with us to-day. Wife—All right; I'll order corned beef.

"Get on to the bloke with the calcimined feet," yelled an irreverent newsboy, the other day, as a dude strutted by, wearing a pair of white duck overgaiters.

"Will shoes be higher?" asked the market reporter. "Not until men's legs are longer and hotel porch railings are raised," answered the paragrapher, as he dodged a paper weight.

First student of medicine—"I say, Fritz, did you see those boys stick out their tongues at us?" Second student—"Yes, and it does me proud. They evidently take us for full-fledged doctors."

A census enumerator in Hannibal, Mo., after asking a woman in that city all he could think of about her family of seven boys and girls, finally asked if they were all white. She replied: "They generally are when their faces are clean."

Little Brother—"See that pretty bird out there in the rain. I wish he would go to sleep in the grass so I could catch him." Little Sister—"Why don't you wish he'd go to sleep on the sidewalk, 'cause then you could catch him without getting your feet wet?"

"Do you think your sister likes me, Tommy?" "Yes, she stood up for you at dinner." "Stood up for me? Was anybody saying any thing against me?" "No, nothin' much. Father said he thought you were a good deal of an ass, but Ethel spoke up and said you wasn't, and told father he ought to know better than judge a man by his looks."

A Belfast, Me., wag decorated a milk team that stood on the street. He harnessed the horse wrong end to the wagon, placed an old hat upon its head, hung a milk can upon either side, and a placard bearing the words: "Sweet milk" upon the tail. The poor old beast stood all the afternoon, causing a smile to appear on the most solemn countenance.

He had made a hearty meal at a restaurant, and, getting up, he said to the waiter: "I declare if I haven't forgotten my purse." The waiter fired up, and hurled big words at him for full three minutes before pausing for breath. When a chance came the stranger continued: "But I have a five dollar bill here in my waistcoat pocket." The waiter couldn't smile to save his life.

A sea captain who was asked by his wife to look at some pianos while he was in the city with a view of buying her one, wrote home to her: "I saw one that I thought would suit you; black walnut hull, strong bulkheads, strengthened fore and aft with iron frame, sealed with white wood and maple. Rigging: steel wire—double ratlines and whipped wire on the lower stays and heavy cordage. Belaying pins of steel and well driven home. Length of taffrail, over all, six feet, one inch; breadth of beam, thirty-eight inches; depth of hold fourteen inches; hatches can be battened down proof against ten-year-old boys and commercial drummers, or can be clewed up, on occasion, and sheeted home for a first-class cyclone."

THEY WERE TIRED.

But the Old Man Came Out Just a Little Ways Ahead.

In order to prevent being "stuck" on his papers yesterday a newsboy cried out: "All about war with England!" A young man sitting in front of a Griswold street hotel heard the cry, slapped his leg, and exclaimed:

"That's the stuff! I'm ready to go again!"

"Were you in the war of 1776?" asked a stranger who sat near.

"N-no, I don't suppose I was."

"In the war of 1812?"

"Perhaps not."

"In the Mexican war?"

"No."

"Were you even able to toddle around as a baby during our civil war?"

"I—I was over a year old."

"But you spoke about going again. What did you mean?"

"None o' your business, sir. There's always some old shell-back like you sitting around to throw cold water on a young man's patriotism, and it makes me tired."

"Does, eh? See where that finger went to? Observe this wooden leg. Want to feel this scar on my head? I was there. I am also tired. I am tired of hearing young squirts like you talk about war. Go home, bub—go home and have your mother change your bib and wipe your nose."—Detroit Free Press.

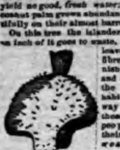
OUR YOUNG FOLKS

SAVAGE ARMOR.

Some Queer Garbs That Are Worn by War-Like Tribes.

In the Central Pacific Ocean is a small group of islands entirely covered with white coral sand. They are known as the Gilbert Islands, and, almost all sand, yield no good, fresh water; yet the cocoanut palm grows abundantly and beautifully on their almost barren soil.

On this tree the islanders live. Not an inch of it goes to waste, for its wood, leaves, fruit, fibre and sap furnish food, shelter and clothing for the savage inhabitants. The way in which these uncivilized people make their armor and weapons, and equip themselves, almost wholly by the aid of the cocoa-tree, is ingenious and interesting.



HELMET.

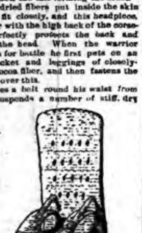
They twist the fibre of the outer husk of the cocoanut into a hard, close cord, and weave this into a framework made of the slender, tough midribs of the leaves. This framework forms a round jacket or corselet opening in front and extending up the back, so as to form a flat shield, protecting the head.

That it may fit snugly under the arms, the sides and fronts are cut out, and strong shoulder-braces are made connecting front and back. Such a corselet a bullet, arrow or spear can not easily penetrate, and the warrior wearing a shield so fashioned goes fearlessly to battle. Peculiar patterns are woven into these jackets, to vary according to the different households and villages. Worked in black on a background of yellow—the color of the cocoanut fiber—each design stands out like an old knightly device.

The warrior's hemlet, however, is not made from a tree, but from a fish. This is the porcupine fish, which, when caught, puffs itself up like an angry porcupine almost to bursting, and so remains after being killed. In this state the fish's thin skin, studded with hard, long spines, is dried and then made into the helmet, the tail forming the crest.

Some dried fibers put inside the skin make it fit closely, and this headpiece, together with the high back of the corselet, perfectly protects the back and top of the head. When the warrior prepares for battle he first puts on an under-jacket and leggings of closely-woven cocoa fiber, and then fastens the corselet over this.

He fixes a belt round his waist from which suspends a number of stiff, dry pandamus leaves, which make a queer, rustling noise at the slightest movement. The next and last thing put on is the helmet. But of what good would all this splendid defensive armor be if the warrior had no offensive weapon?



CORSELET.

So the native has other means of war in the way of spear, club and short sword. The spears are long and heavy, being made, as are all the other wooden implements, of the outer layer of the cocoanut palm.

There are various kinds of clubs, some pointed at both ends used to hurl at the enemy, and others like a policeman's club slung from the waist. Armed thus from head to foot the Gilbert Island warrior is a terrible foe; but is so only as long as he keeps his enemy at a distance. This, however, he can not do for long, for fierce rage to kill impels him to fight at too close quarters.—Laura Gardiner, in Santa Claus.

Experiments by means of photographic plates in the Mediterranean Sea show that in the middle of a sunny day in summer the rays of the sun do not penetrate the waters of that sea a depth of more than one hundred and fifty fathoms. In September the distance penetrated is much reduced, the depression on the plates at the above depth not being greater than that made by starlight.

Nevada has what are termed "traveling stones." They are described as being perfectly round, about as large as a walnut, and of an ivory nature. When distributed about on the floor, table, or other level surface within two or three feet of each other, they at once begin to move toward each other until they meet in a common center and there lie huddled in a bunch. They are largely composed of magnetic iron ore.

Telepathy is being developed from phenomena to a recognized science subject to definite and traceable laws. It is simply psychical telegraphy, and there is no doubt but that as the finer civilization advances to use higher and subtler forces, it will take as recognized a place in the activities of the world as telegraphy does now, and it will be no more marvelous to the people of the year 2000 than is the telegraph to the people of the year of grace 1890.

According to analysis by Dr. Lancaster, an eminent physician of London, a human body weighing 154.4 pounds contains the following: 23.1 pounds of carbon, 2.2 pounds of lime; 22.3 ounces of phosphates, and about one ounce each of sodium, iron, potassium, magnesium and silicon, 5,595 cubic feet of oxygen, weighing 21 pounds; 105,900 cubic feet of hydrogen, weighing 15.4 pounds, and 52 cubic feet of nitrogen. GOLDEN ROD.

In all the world, embraced in mortal sight,
There's nothing seems more like the smile of God
Than flowers do when kissed by morning light—
And Queen of them is lovely golden rod.

In ancient days where'er sweet Flora [illegible],
In every path the [illegible] golden trod,
[illegible], with lovely hand, she freely threw,
To deck her [illegible] with brilliant golden rod.

Whate'er the songs that Nature's voices hymn,
There can be none more like the songs of God
Than songs of birds, [illegible]
"For Flora's gorgeous fields of golden rod.

Though every bud that blooms with beauty shines,
And bears the tender touch of love of God,
There's none that wider blooms and brighter shines
Than Queen of all, the gorgeous golden rod.

It blossometh not in spring or summer rage,
When [illegible] beauties stud the sod;
But later on, in robes of [illegible] days
And regal splendor, blooms the golden rod.

No rival beauties justly can contend
That decorate the field or velvet sod—
With softer shades [illegible] richer colors blend,
Adorning all, this brilliant golden rod.

'Tis not the dainty sort of tender care,
Nor doth it need a special clime or sod,
But beautiful it blossoms everywhere,
This royal beauty, splendent golden rod.

And though it royal be it blooms for all,
And sweetly, lowly bends with [illegible] nod,
To lesser grasses of the golden fall,
Their noble sister, brilliant golden rod.

Although it bears itself with stately mein,
It smiles alike for all, with smiles of God,
Of every field and [illegible] the floral queen,
This ever rich and brilliant golden rod.

The odors pure that precious flowers yield,
Exhaled by [illegible] from rain and sod,
Exquisite pleasures give, through wood and field,
Distilled by Him who gives the golden rod.

The perfume sweet that Heavenly Flora makes,
As 'twere the breath of angels and of God,
Is taste of what's beyond the "pearly gates,"
To be bestowed when fades the golden rod.

In all the world embraced in mortal sight
There's nothing seems more like the smiles of God
Than flowers do when kissed by morning light—
And Queen of all is lovely golden rod.

SALLY SPARKS.

The Pathetic Story of Her Last Disappointment.

JUST to ease my bursting heart I am going to write out an account of my last disappointment. It is meant only for my own perusal. If I thought anybody else would ever see it I should certainly faint away on the spot.

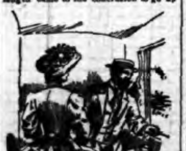
In the first place, I will set down here what I wouldn't on any account breathe to any living being—I am forty-one years old this spring; and yet I have never quite succeeded in securing a partner to walk with me the thorny paths of existence, as somebody very poetically and feelingly remarked. If I'd only known at sixteen what awaited me I really believe I should have given up. Sixteen! Only think, that was twenty-five years ago—though I give it out to the public that I'm most thirty—but I'm afraid there are some of them that don't believe it.

However, I don't intend to give an account of all my past life. I'm only going to set down the particulars of my last summer's disappointment.

It was just about the first of June that the thought popped into my head, what a good idea it would be to go to the country to board. I'd pretty much given up the prospect of finding a husband in Millville, for the fact is, them factory girls—impudent, brazen hussies, as they are—monopolize the attentions of all the men, so that those who are delicate and refined, like myself, don't stand any chance, because they won't stoop to use the same arts that they do. Bless me! what a long sentence! However, as no eye but my own is ever to read it, it don't make so much difference.

Well, as I was saying, I concluded to go to some country town to spend the summer, hoping that, by passing myself off for a rich heiress or fashionable belle, I might be able to catch a beau.

So I began to look over the advertisements of country board, and at length came to the conclusion to go up to Huckleberry Corner, in New Hampshire, where all the people that ain't farmers are agriculturists.



HE WAS LOOKING OUT OF THE WINDOW.

I provided myself with as many fine dresses as I could afford, for, you know, I wanted people to think I was wealthy. I found it so expensive that, before I got through, I found myself obliged to sell the half-acre of land that *Grand*father Sparks left me in his will. But then I thought how much more valuable a husband would be than a half acre of land. So I submitted to the sacrifice with Christian fortitude and resignation, feeling pretty confident that my reward would come sooner or later.

It wasn't till about the last moment that the most brilliant idea of all came to me. It was this: I would pass myself off for a Southern widow, with a great cotton plantation. I felt pretty sure the men would nibble at that bait. Of course there wouldn't be nobody in Huckleberry Corner that would know me, so I could get along well enough.

I didn't quite know what State would be the best for me to hail from, but I finally concluded that Alabama would be as good as any. So I decided on that. I likewise concluded to change my name so as to avoid suspicion, and I went down to the city on purpose to have some cards struck off with my new name. They looked like this:

MRS. COL. SPARKINGTON,
Sparkville,
Alabama.

I thought Sparkington sounded sort of aristocratic, and as I didn't know the names of any places in Alabama, I thought I would put Sparkville, as that would give people an idea that my husband had been a man of some importance, to have the whole town named after him.

Well, every thing being arranged, I left Millville without letting anybody know where I thought of going. Indeed, I hinted round that I didn't know, but I should visit some of my relations in Boston, which wasn't a falsehood, because I do expect to, sometime, if I live long enough.

On the morning of the second day, I found myself on board the stage that went to Huckleberry Corner.

There wasn't but one other passenger in the stage but myself. He was a tall man with elegant black whiskers and looked as if he might be about thirty years old. I was immediately struck by his appearance, and considered how I might draw his attention to me, for thus far he hadn't taken any more notice of me that if I had been a cat. After a little reflection I thought I would slip one of my cards out of my pocket, and contrive to drop it accidentally at his feet, so that he couldn't help stooping to pick it up; when, of course, he would see the name, and would think more of me in consequence.

So I just took the opportunity when he was looking out of the window at the scenery, and slily dropped the card just at his feet. But would you believe it, the provoking critter kept a looking out of the window for some time, and when he got through doing that never thought of looking at his feet. So I coughed slightly, and remarked in what I considered to be an aristocratic tone:

"Would you be kind enough to hand me the card which I accidentally let fall?"

"Certainly, ma'am," said he, indifferently, stooping to pick it up. But when he saw the name he said in a more interested tone: "I perceive that you are a Southern lady."

I bowed.

"Would you allow me?" he continued, "to retain this card and give you one of my own in exchange?"

"I should be pleased to have you do so," said I, quite delighted at his desire to make my acquaintance.

He handed me a card on which was inscribed the name of Erastus Lyon, M. D.

"Are you indeed a physician?" said I, enthusiastically. "It is a profession that I venerate. It is the mission of the physician to go about relieving pain and sickness, and although my own health has been remarkably good, I value the profession none the less. Let me see. I haven't been sick for twenty years, and as that was when I was a mere child, under ten, I don't remember much about it."

I said this so that he might make a calculation about my age, and think me under thirty. He looked a little surprised, I thought, and pretty soon he said:

"Have you ever been North before?"

"Yes," said I. "In fact I feel pretty well acquainted with you Northerners."

"And how do you like us, may I venture to ask?"

"Very much indeed. In fact I may say that I feel quite as much at home among you as at the South. Since the death of my husband, Colonel Sparkington, I have passed all my summers at the North."

I might have said that I had passed all my springs, falls and winters also, but I thought it wasn't necessary to tell the whole truth.

"May I inquire," said Dr. Lyon, "whether you intend to stop any length of time at Huckleberry Corner?"

"I am thinking of passing the summer there if I like the place and meet agreeable people."

"You have never been there before?"

"No, and I know no one there."

"Indeed," said Dr. Lyon, thoughtfully. After a moment's pause he added: "If our brief acquaintance will justify the offer, I will suggest that the place at which I myself have engaged board is an excellent one, and very pleasantly situated."

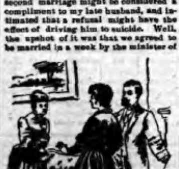
"Indeed, sir," said I, considerably more pleased than I was willing to show. "I shall be very much obliged to you if you will take that trouble."

When we reached Huckleberry Corner, I stopped at the stage office while Dr. Lyon went over to engage board for me. He came back in about half an hour, saying it was all arranged and I could go right over.

*Half an hour afterwards I found my*self settled in a very comfortable room at the house of Ezekiel Preston. He didn't take but two boarders, Dr. Lyon and myself. I wanted awfully to know how much board I was expected to pay, but I didn't dare to ask, as I wanted to pass for a rich Southern widow, to whom money was of no consequence. The next day Dr. Lyon happened to mention to me, of his own accord, that they *charged seven dollars a week. It al*most made me jump when I heard it, for I had calculated on not having more than half that to pay, and I felt sure that they piled on the price because they thought I was rich. However, when he told me I only said very coolly: "Oh, very well. Quite reasonable, I think." I knew that remark made quite an impression on him, for after that he became quite attentive to me. So three weeks passed away. Every day regular we used to walk out together, and I know the people of Huckleberry Corner had a good deal to say about the rich Southern lady that boarded at Mr. Preston's.

At length the expected declaration came. Dr. Lyon told me that ever since he had seen me he had been powerfully attracted by my beauty and attractions and entreated me to accept him. I told him it was very unexpected, and I didn't know as it would be right to the memory of Colonel Sparkington to marry again, but if he thought it would be right I would make no objection, as I felt to deplore my unprotected situation. I confessed, with blushes, that I had never met a man whom I thought so worthy to fill the place of the dear departed and insinuated that he bore a very strong resemblance to the Colonel.

Dr. Lyon answered that in that case a second marriage might be considered a compliment to my late husband, and intimated that a refusal might have the effect of driving him to suicide. Well, the upshot of it was that we agreed to be married in a week by the minister of Huckleberry Corner. Dr. Lyon said he would invite a lady cousin to be present and stand up with me, as I couldn't be expected to have many lady friends at the North. Little did I anticipate who that female friend was. Two days before the ceremony she came, and to my horror I recognized her as my old enemy, Clarissa Higgins, of Millville.



"WHY, THIS IS THE OLD MAID, SALLY SPARKS!"

"Mrs. Col. Sparkington, of Alabama," said she in her shrill voice, when we were introduced. "Why, this is the old maid, Sally Sparks, that has lived all her life in Millville."

"Good heavens! is this indeed so?" asked Dr. Lyon, looking from her to me.

As for me, I fainted away in mortification, and when I came to I was told that my husband that was to be had left town, and the marriage was indefinitely postponed. I used up my last cent in paying my board bill and stage fare, and here I am at home again, a penniless and forlorn spinster—no longer Mrs. Col. Sparkington, of Alabama, but Miss Sally Sparks, of Millville.—Caroline F. Preston, in Boston Globe.

A SUCCESSFUL AUTHOR.

An Article That Attracted General Attention and Brought Good Pay.

It is not every ambitious writer that secures success with his first article. I know one such, though his name has now slipped my memory. At that time he was county treasurer. For weeks after his article appeared in print he was visited by different neighbors and fellow-citizens of that county, who showed their appreciation of his article by leaving with him sums of money varying from one dollar to several hundred dollars in amount.

His theme might have been called "Discourager of Hesitancy," although it was not, for that is what the article did—discouraged the hesitancy of many citizens. The only objection to the article as a literary production was that the story had too many heroes. There were no fewer than 1,500 characters, and each character was a hero in the story. The title of the story was "D.' Lynn Qu'Ent Tacquealist." The title looks Frenchy in print, but the story was entirely American, and the scene was laid in the author's own county.

What makes me remember the story so well, though I have forgotten the name of the author, is that I was one of the characters mentioned. What was said about me ran something like this:

S¼ lot 30 jetters Ad. C. B. Holding.........$31.25

I bought one of the papers and took it home to show the paragraph to my wife.

I was informed by the author, when I went up a few days afterward with my father-in-law to congratulate him on his success, that the story had netted him something like $7,750, including the $31.25 which we left with him for mentioning my name and so graphically describing my residence.

The story was published at the author's expense. Several publishers offered to print the narrative for what there was in it, but the author chose to pay for the work outright, and declined the offers of the publishers. The end justified his choice.

I have mentioned this little incident as an offset to the theory that no writer need expect great fame or great pay at the beginning of his career. This incident also illustrates another truth. To be a successful writer one must weave into his history incidents and characters about which his readers are thinking or in which they are personally interested. All the scenes described in this story were such as possessed real interest for every reader. Indeed the same story is published annually and *never fails to excite comment and cre*ate interest.—C. B. Holding, in Writer.

Chapter 1—The dainty ormolu clock on the mantel had just chimed eight in silvery tones which Algernon Percy de Villeford came to time looking fresh as a daisy. The match was to be to a finish, for Ethel Vane had told him it was to be their last meeting. Ethel's father acted as timekeeper. She did not make a move. It was evidently her tactics to wait for Algernon to force the fighting while she played for his wind. Algernon was foxy from the first.

"Algernon," she said, after considerable feinting, "I love you. My soul throbs with the subtle magnetism of your presence. Oh, love, love, is it not a horrible thing? See how it transforms angels into monsters and monsters into angels. When I am with you there is no time, no eternity—nothing but you. The sun shines that it may beam upon your face. The stars glitter only that their light may kiss the path that you are treading. Do not turn your head away. Do you not hear me? Can you not feel the blood that rushes through my hands, madly tingling to the refrain 'I love you! I love you!'"

Algernon came up groggy.

He spoke in monosyllables, undertak*ing a series of short-arm blows. She* made a gallant lead, but he countered.

"Ah—I—am—so—poor," he said. "Were I rich—but think of your family."

"What is wealth or position to me?" she cried.

He reached for her with both hands for a mad embrace. He was playing for her neck, but she caught him with a stunner over the heart.

*His breath came heavily; he was evi*dently pretty well winded.

"Will you consent to brave the future and be mine, in spite of my poverty and humble position?"

"Oh, Algernon," she murmured.

She had knocked him clean over the ropes.—Washington Post.

Crazy Dudes.

All of the dudes in Washington are nearly crazy over a pretty face and a fine figure. One of these tender young things who suck their canes in the front row discovered a remarkably pretty girl in the chorus of a comic opera. He winked and blinked and smiled at her, but she gave no sign of recognition. His antics became so violent, however, that his fellow dudes became aware of his passion, so that the whole front row fell into spasms almost whenever the big, cold, blue eyes were turned towards them. Under no circumstances could she be persuaded to take the slightest notice of any of them personally, individually or collectively, save as she would notice weeds or noxious plants by the roadside. This was a truly distressing state of affairs, for even notes, flowers and all the usual means of scraping an acquaintance were found to be utterly useless. But what distracted, the entire front row more than every thing else was the fact that this charming young girl was discovered to be a very near relative of President Harrison. This, of course, stamped her with the undeniable mark of royalty and lifted her higher into the atmosphere of worshipful queenship, so that the front row could do nothing more than wear out the knees of its pantaloons figuratively, by worshiping at a safe distance. The cane brigade is still in position and nearly crazy, but the pretty little relative of the President has gone away with the company and will not be here again for some months. Though lost to sight her memory is very dear to all of them.

DAINTY "HAMMOCK GIRLS."

They Bewitch the Masculine Imagination in Summer-Time.

Hosiery and Laces That Queens Might Envy—Mrs. Mackay's Beaded Gloves—Maud Muller Maidens Who Do Gardening, and Others.

[COPYRIGHT, 1890.]
[Special Correspondence.]

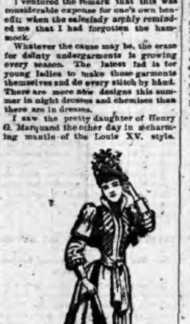
Manufacturers of silk and hosiery ought to pay a handsome royalty to the man who invented hammocks. To get in or out of a hammock without a display of stockings is a thing impossible. Nobody understands this better than the girls whose allowance enables them to make their position in a hammock very attractive. Black stockings are still worn; I hardly think they will ever go out of style, but they are not so universal as they were.

I saw Miss Amy Wetmore the other day buy a dozen pairs of silk stockings, and none of them was all black, though some had black feet. The colors she chose were salmon pink, pale lavender, dull old gold and one pair were a rich queen's purple. The saleslady told me that there was a great demand for fancy colors in hosiery this summer. I asked if she could give any reason for it, and she laughingly said: "Well, I think it's because the colors look so pretty through the light lace trimmings of a girl's underwear. You know that linen lawn and silk are being used exclusively this summer for skirts and chemises, and they are trimmed with quantities of the lightest, finest lace that can be bought."

I ventured the remark that this was considerable expense for one's own benefit; when the saleslady archly reminded me that I had forgotten the hammock.

Whatever the cause may be, the craze for dainty undergarments is growing every season. The latest fad is for young ladies to make these garments themselves and do every stitch by hand. There are more new designs this summer in night dresses and chemises than there are in dresses.

I saw the pretty daughter of Henry G. Marquand the other day in a charming mantle of the Louis XV. style.

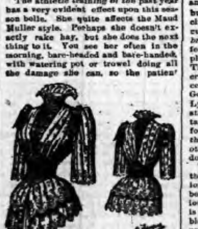


MISS BELMONT'S ENGLISH GOWN.

She is a tall, blonde girl with a very handsome figure, and the mantle seemed to have been designed especially for her. It was of lace, very rich and heavy, fitted down to the figure with a full cape sleeve and high collar. Miss Marquand's mantle was quite plain, but I have seen some of the same style trimmed with scroll work of passementerie in black and silver. The garment was lined with satin, and therefore is warm as well as dressy.

An attempt has been made to introduce Mrs. Mackay's fashion of wearing beaded gloves with beaded belts to match, but so far they have not found much favor. Some of Mrs. Mackay's gloves are quite magnificent. One pair she had made to match an evening dress of pale blue that was brocaded with tiny blossoms. The gloves were of the very palest shade of blue, embroidered with pink and blue opal beads. The tops were edged with pearls, and they fastened at the wrist with Rhinestone buckles. Last week at a reception given by Mrs. Harrison to one of John Wanamaker's daughters at Cape May, the young lady wore a pair of gloves the backs of which were almost entirely of pink coral.

The athletic training of the past year has a very evident effect upon this season belle. She quite affects the Maud Muller style. Perhaps she doesn't exactly rake hay, but she does the next thing to it. You see her often in the morning, bare-headed and bare-handed, with watering pot or trowel doing all the damage she can, so the patient gardener thinks. This is one type of the maiden who tries to be a wee bit mannish. Another is the girl who drives. It isn't considered in the least good form for a man to hold the reins this season, and the result is that the turnouts have a variety in style and dash about them that they never had before. As to the daughters of John themselves, well, if you don't think they're stunning, just come out on the avenue and take a look at them.

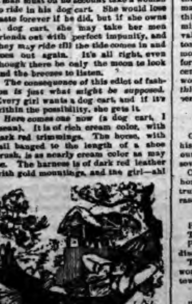


LOUIS XV. MANTLE.

In the first place, let me tell you that a man must on no account take a woman to ride in his dog cart. She would lose caste forever if he did, but if she owns a dog cart, she may take her men friends out with perfect impunity, and they may ride till the tide comes in and goes out again. It's all right, even though there be only the moon to look and the breezes to listen.

The consequence of this edict of fashion is just what might be supposed. Every girl wants a dog cart, and if it's within the possibility, she gets it.

Here comes one now (a dog cart, I mean). It is of rich cream color, with dark red trimmings. The horse, with tail banged to the length of a shoe brush, is as nearly cream color as may be. The harness is of dark red leather with gold mountings, and the girl—ah! the girl! Just look at her. She is Miss Cora Wilson, just back from a year abroad. Miss Wilson is pretty, and a blonde. None but a cream white girl would go well with that outfit.



THE HAMMOCK GIRL.

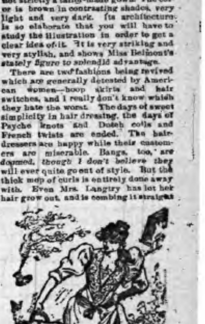
She sits with her feet braced against the bar. On these feet are cream white shoes with red heels, and just above their tops we catch a glimpse of red silk hose. The skirt is red, trimmed with five rows of inch-wide cream braid, and above this is a cream sailor blouse, under the collar of which is tied a four-in-hand scarf with red stripes in it. Over the blouse is a red silk jacket, open in front, with the sleeves slashed up to the shoulder, below which falls a long, full sleeve of white, finished with a close cuff. The driving gauntlets are red.

The hat is a sailor, of course, white, with a red band, and a mask vail of red gauze keeps the yellow curls in order.

An ordinary young man rides beside her in a light flannel suit, and a groom with big buttons rides behind. But they don't count. It's the girl and the dog cart and the get-up that the people look at.

Miss Belmont has just received an odd gown. It is of English make. It is made by a tailor and of cloth, but it is not strictly a tailor-made gown. The color is brown in contrasting shades, very light and very dark. Its architecture is so elaborate that you will have to study the illustration in order to get a clear idea of it. It is very striking and very stylish, and shows Miss Belmont's stately figure to splendid advantage.

There are two fashions being revived which are generally detested by American women—hoop skirts and hair switches, and I really don't know which they hate the worst. The days of sweet simplicity in hair dressing, the days of Psyche knots and Dutch coils and French twists are ended. The hairdressers are happy while their customers are miserable. Bangs, too, are doomed, though I don't believe they will ever quite go out of style. But the thick mop of curls is entirely done away with. Even Mrs. Langtry has let her hair grow out, and is combing it straight back, leaving only a misty fringe about the forehead.



MAUD MULLER.

I saw the youngest daughter of Sir Roderick Cameron the other day for the first time. She is here preparatory to making a cruise on her father's steam yacht Evelyn. Miss Cameron is one of the youngest of this season's debutantes, and such a dainty maid she is. She looked, the day I saw her, as if she might have stepped from between the yellowed leaves of one of Martha Washington's fashion books. She was fair enough to have been Tennyson's ideal of a queen-rose in the "rosebud garden of girls." Her dress was of the softest black challie. It had a full, round skirt, trimmed with innumerable rows of shining satin ribbon. The full baby waist was drawn softly up to the top of the dimpled shoulders and held there with loops of ribbon. Under this was worn a guimpe of the finest India silk with high-puffed sleeve and a dainty lace collar falling away from the lovely throat.

Long silk open-work gloves covered the soft, round arms, and her hat was a quaint old-fashioned poke made of lace and crowned with a tuft of black os*trich plumes. The dainty fairness* of her skin showed in fine relief against this inky gown. Every man on the hotel piazza turned to look at her, and every woman, way down in her secret soul, could not but admire the pretty child in black.

Miss Helen Gould, as a rule, dresses very plainly, but she has a new hat of which she says "papa thinks it's a bit rakish." It is vastly becoming to her, though. The brim is wide, very wide in front, and is trimmed not with the conventional butterflies and lace quills, but with a cluster of feathers that shade from biscuit brown to crimson. Miss Helen is a brunette with eyes and hair almost perfectly black, and this crown of brilliant plumage seems just the thing for her. The top of Miss Helen's hat is a great crimson flower made of velvet with a center of little crimson berries. Miss Gould is a member of the Berkeley Lyceum Athletic Club, and is a very strong swimmer. She can cross the big tank in the natatorium which is thirty-four feet wide, with one stroke, and that is something which none of the other swimmers have yet been able to do.

There is great strife among some of the ladies who are extremists in fashion to obtain a certain perfume which I believe has no name; it is too mysterious and imperceptible to be named. It is the origin of it that makes it desirable. The fable runs that deep in the unexplored wilds of Africa, there grows a marvelous lily, which the natives hold sacred.

The leaves of this wonderful flower contain a perfume so potent that it is employed by the ignorant heathen in the same way that we learned Christians make use of what we call hypnotism. Mr. Stanley found this flower and brought back a large jar of its leaves to his bride-elect. Immediately every great dame in England wanted it, and by some mysterious process some of them obtained it; and now, of course, the women of New York want it and they won't be happy till they get it. Mr. Stanley says that the natives call this flower Kanonga and that botanists call it Anona odoratissima. Those who have caught a whiff of this wonderful perfume say that it is a mixture of jasmine, lilac, lily of the valley and rose, and is altogether intoxicating. The thing that makes it most desirable of all is its price, which for the oil or essence is twenty-five cents a drop; but when a New York woman wants a thing, particularly a thing so essential as an entirely new perfume, money is no object.

RIGHT.

Mr. Blaine in his outspoken advocacy of reciprocal intercourse with South America and the West India Islands, or, more admittedly stating his proposition, the free admission into the United States of the products of those countries, provided our products are by them, or any portion of them, accorded like freedom of entry, shows practical statesman intelligence, and in fact, voices the Democratic idea, of protecting home industry by enlarging the profitable demand for labor and skill, which is the very life blood of real protection.

Mr. Blaine is right.

Could we enjoy full and unfettered reciprocal business relations with the different South American States, the West Indies and Canada, the impetus and rich rewards that would thereby be given American industry and enterprise of every description, agricultural, commercial and manufacturing, cannot be over-estimated. New, increasing and valuable foreign markets would be opened to us and for the mutual benefit of all the people.

There is not a particle of McKinley tariff absurdity and monopolistic extortion in [illegible] reciprocity.

But it is freighted with honesty, equity and general [illegible] wealth.

Mr. Blaine deserves credit, even though his [illegible] is Democratic.

He is a [illegible] man and a Republican party leader.

Here we must be permitted to interpose a query.

Suppose Mr. Cleveland, or Mr. Carlisle, or any other prominent Democratic statesman had publicly avowed the doctrine of international reciprocity, as Mr. Blaine has done, what would we now see and hear?

It needs no prophet to foretell a result like unto the following:

From Maine to California, by day and by night, excited Republican partisans rushing to and fro and shouting louder and louder—down with Free Trade! Free Trade!!! DEMOCRATIC FREE TRADE!!!

Aye, and then every Republican journal, from the Tribune of the Metropolis to the [illegible] Axe of Dudleyville, would be hard pressed to find type large enough to warn the people against the terrific ruin predicted by Democratic Free Trade.

But note and noting smile.

The Republicans are as gentle as kittens and their tongues as mute as mice in regard to reciprocity.

Why?

Because Mr. Blaine is a mighty Republican chief who never was and probably never will be a Democrat.

That we admit, yet, nevertheless, applaud him for nobly uttering the convictions of truth and justice.

The man, we care not what his political name may be, who valiantly and in defiance of customary opposition dares to do right is deserving of honorable mention.

COLORED REBELS.

The Republican party leaders are painfully surprised because the colored Democratic vote throughout the South is so rapidly increasing.

The cause is plain.

Like the farmers and working classes of the North and West, the colored men of the South are fast learning what political humbug means, and therefore resolving no longer to be servile [illegible] for [illegible] politicians and [illegible] monopolists.

At a recent Republican County Convention in Kentucky, a colored delegate thus talked to his pale-faced colleagues:

"If we are good enough to vote and work, we are good enough to share the spoils.

The stuff is there, but, unfortunately, my people are not able to get any of it.

You white men will not vote—any of you—if you do not see at the end of it that glorious thing, the almighty dollar.

I tell you it will be impossible to keep the colored people in line for the party if you do not give them their share of the spoils."

That certainly word paints a life picture of the modern professional politician, one of those persons who is ever after the "almighty dollar" and regardless of how he pockets it.

ANOTHER FAIRY TALE.

[illegible] Which Sounds Well for the Judgment of Ex-Postmaster Force in the Selection of Capable Men to Serve the Public.

(From the New York Press.)

Plainfield's Republicans are dissatisfied because the new Postmaster, Elias R. Pope, does not discharge the staff of clerks and carriers left to him by the Democratic administration and appoint some of the 124 Republican applicants in their places. Postmaster Pope says that the force is very efficient and should not be disturbed, but a petition is being extensively signed, to be sent to Washington, asking that Mr. Pope be "instructed" to make a radical change and distribute the spoils of office. Several of the applicants are men who were turned out four years ago to make room for Democrats. Mr. Pope says he will be governed strictly by civil service regulations, and will dismiss no man who is doing his duty satisfactorily. The postmaster is supported by the Plainfield women, who are the chief patrons of the [illegible], most of the men being New York commuters, and who are preparing a petition, to offset that of the politicians, to have the present service continued.

(From the New York Star.)

The Republican patriots of Plainfield, N. J., have forwarded a petition to Washington asking that E. R. Pope, the postmaster, be directed to discharge the clerks and carriers left in office by the Democratic Administration, and to substitute in their places "deserving" Republicans. The postmaster has only been in office a few months, and he has already received 124 applications for positions. Mr. Pope says he will adhere to Civil Service Law.

[But right here in connection with the report that such a petition has been either circulated or signed, it is proper to remark: As you didn't see it in THE PRESS, it isn't so! ED.]

MAYOR MOFFETT DEALS OUT JUSTICE.

Circus Men and Circus Attendants Rampant on the Boulevard.

Not satisfied with the circus presented by their employers, Washburn & Arlington, Wm. Shils, of Montreal, and James [illegible], of New York, two [illegible] and [illegible] man-of-all-work, visited the boulevard saloons Monday night and sought to have a rip-roaring circus of their own. In Patrick Day's liquid refectory on West Third street they attempted to take complete possession, and a vigorous fight resulted. Just as the winding-up proceedings were at their height officers appeared and conveyed the [illegible] circus workmen to the police station.

Bright and early on Tuesday Elmore D. Moffett, President of the Common Council, and in the absence of Mayor Male and Judge Codington acting Mayor and City Judge, sat in the judicial chair, heard the evidence in the case of Shils and sentenced that worthy to ninety days' imprisonment in the county jail. This [illegible] dose of Jersey justice staggered him worse than boulevard rum had staggered him the night before, and he decided to plead not guilty and to ask for a postponement, "to procure witnesses" for his defense.

Two other cases were heard by Mayor-Judge Moffett before he took his accustomed train for Elizabeth.

David Morning, looking as though he had been up all night for a week, was accused of permitting himself to become a victim of paralysis of intoxication and wanting to make the entire length and breadth of South Second street his personal couch. He was reprimanded, and sentence was suspended.

PLAINFIELD TAXES CLIMB HIGHER.

The Increase Attributed to County Road Improvements.

The local tax rate for the coming year was fixed by the Plainfield Common Council Tuesday night at $2.34 on $100. This is an increase of 9 cents on $100 over the rate fixed last year. The cause of the rise is attributed to the county road improvements, because of which the county tax is increased 14 cents on $100. To counteract, in a measure, this somewhat heavy upward leap, the Council has made reductions, as far as possible, on the other taxes. The State school, fire and school taxes remain the same. The city tax is reduced 3 cents on $100, the school bonds and interest tax 2 cents, the poor tax one-half cent and the library tax one-half cent. Last year the tax rate was $2.15 on $100, the year before $2.18.

The total valuation, together with the percentage and the various amounts to be raised by taxation for the coming year, is as follows:

MR. NEWHALL AND THE WATER-WORKS.

The Councilman Makes a Speech of Self-Exoneration.

Councilman Henry B. Newhall made a brief statement concerning the Plainfield Water Company, the Water Board, and himself as Chairman of the Board, at Tuesday's meeting of the City Common Council, just before adjournment.

"I wish to contradict," said the Councilman, "the statement in a recent issue of The World intimating that the default in the payment of money by the Water Company to the city, was understood and consented to by the Chairman of the Water Board [Mr. Newhall himself]. The statement is entirely without foundation. The fact is that about July 1 I left the city for several weeks' vacation. The June check had not then been paid by the Water Company, but it was only a few days overdue, and the Board did not consider it wise to make a very strong point of the delay. The July check was not forthcoming prior to the August meeting of the Water Board, and after a conference it was agreed to call the attention of Council to the default and advise that the Corporation Counsel be consulted with in regard to taking summary proceedings concerning the double default. At the last meeting of the Council it was for some reason deemed inadvisable to give consent to this proposed method of action, but we still feel it quite important to take notice of this first default. Up to July 1 the Water Company had not rendered itself liable, but is now certainly in default, and we think that prompt and vigorous action should be taken, either against the Water Company or against its bondsmen, or both. The city has a contract carefully drawn; it is a strong contract. It is indorsed by bondsmen who guarantee the faithful fulfillment of the contract in detail—bondsmen who are abundantly able to protect the city. I, of course, am aware that as this is but an adjourned session of the meeting at which the matter first came up, the action then taken cannot be reconsidered, but I do hope that at the next meeting the Councilmen will be prepared to take summary proceedings if they consider them advisable."

[THE PRESS stated last Saturday that it had reason to believe that the first payment deferred was with Mr. Newhall's understanding and tacit consent. In spite of Mr. Newhall's speech, THE PRESS continues to hold such belief. Mr. Newhall most certainly understood that the payment would not then be made, and by silence, at least, consented. ED.]

More Than The [illegible] Could Stand.

An affair that was a disgrace to Westfield occurred at its railroad station Saturday evening. Four or five of the fair colored sex and their male friends—whose names THE PRESS has in its possession—were most disorderly in behavior and vulgar in conversation. Chief of Police Marsh was absent and they took advantage of the fact. Matters grew so bad with the women that the men in the party left.

In Full to Date.

The following receipt speaks for itself. The Water Works Company of Plainfield now owes the city nothing; the Water Board's professed ire will be appeased, and those who may have undertaken to crowd Contractor Moore into a hole, can call off their dog:

OFFICE OF THE CITY TREASURER,

The Crescents to Go to Norwich.

The Crescent League's team will go to Norwich, Conn., next week, and play that city's crack team on Wednesday. The team that Plainfield's nine will meet is the strongest in that section of the country. It has a salary list of $[illegible] a day for five of its men picked from the Boston league reserves and other professional organizations.

The Crescent nine's managers want to see just how Plainfield's team would be pleased with such players. They also want to give the boys a pleasant trip and a day or two of recreation before meeting the Cuban Giants on the next Saturday and the Alerts of Elizabeth and the Ridgewoods on the Monday following. A number of the Crescent League members will accompany their team.

A FLASH IN THE PAN.

An Attack on the Water Works Company of Plainfield Treated With the Contempt It Deserves.

The attack of the week upon the Water Works Company of Plainfield, has fallen as usual with a thud as dull and sickening as the paper itself. Those interested in the Company who had noticed the attack at all, said it was too ridiculous to be taken seriously, and too plainly what the boys call a "strike" to have any effect on even the ignorant.

No matter at how cheap a price a man may offer his mouth, the Company has no need to pay a cent of hush money. The work as it progresses will speak for itself, and time will prove the good faith of the Company with the people, better than words can.

The franchise was granted by a majority of the Council of 1889, under the leadership of Mr. Newhall and the advice and direction of the Corporation Counsel. If it was granted under an unconstitutional law (which it is not) the present Council is not to blame, and if the contract is leaky (which it is not) the fault is the fault of the last Council.

Contractor Moore was Friday morning shown by a PRESS reporter, the attack on the Company that had been made upon such disjointed misrepresentations and ragged legal specifications as had been furnished probably by Mr. Carey's Attorney, Frank Bergen. Col Moore glanced over a few lines, laughed heartily at the utter nonsense of the article, said he was too busy to read it but would have his secretary write an open letter and ask the editor his price as a matter of curiosity.

WHAT HAS BECOME OF ELLEN?

A Plainfield Servant Girl Mysteriously Disappears.

Search is being made in Plainfield, Newark and other cities for Ellen Donomore, a domestic who has worked, during the past few years, for many Plainfield families.

Ellen first came to Plainfield from Newark. Her employers soon found that she had a faculty of leaving their employ without a word of warning and returning to her former home. She always pleaded homesickness as the cause, adding that she felt ashamed to leave so good a place for so trivial a reason and therefore went away by stealth. Never until now, however, was she absolutely "missing." Three months ago she was "working out" in various Plainfield households, but suddenly left for Newark. She spent several weeks with a sister, and then mysteriously and effectually disappeared. She left her sister's house a month ago to board a train for Plainfield, and since then her friends have had no tidings of her whereabouts. Inquiry has been made in every quarter, and vigilant search is still in progress, but nothing has been learned tending to effect a discovery, and the woman's relatives have given her up as lost. She was sober, industrious, and apparently happy and contented, and the only theory on which her friends can agree is that she has fallen into evil hands.

A Borough Detective [illegible].

A young man who had become intoxicated and was being quietly assisted homeward by two friends, was arrested Sunday night by Marshal Rutledge of the Borough, and some indignation was aroused because the inoffensive youth was taken away from his friends and made a prisoner. The young man was released, later, by the Marshal himself, who said that he had desired only to ascertain where the victim of alcohol had procured his liquor.

Bovine and Canine Nuisances.

Complaint is made that Borough Marshal Rutledge confines stray cows in the rear of the Borough lock-up and that the imprisoned creatures make a nuisance of themselves by bellowing loudly at night and keeping the neighbors awake. It is further charged that Rutledge impounds and shoots dogs at the back of the lock-up, thus making another cause of complaint. Indignant residents of the Borough demand that all four-legged prisoners be kept in the pound of one of the three pound-keepers.

Villagers Call Their School Home Names.

Lillie Gibbs, a bright little miss of Scotch Plains, has been writing to the editor of the juvenile department in a big New York paper an entertaining letter about her home. "I am twelve years old,"—she says—"and attend the new public school. While it was being built some people called it a prison and others called it an asylum. I have but one pet; that is a cat; her name is Yellow Ball; we named her Yellow Ball because she is so fat and yellow. If you think my letter is good enough will you please print it?—because papa will be watching for it."

The Crescents' Fielding Won the Game.

Everybody who was there agrees that Saturday's ball game between the Crescent League's team and the United Stars and Jersey City's, was the finest ever played in this city. As THE PRESS prophesied Saturday, pitcher Hintzell was the only one of the original Star Athletics of Newark who played on the team. His catcher was Dowd, just released from the Jersey City league team; and other players of that disbanded nine were included in his support. The visiting team was in consequence of this strengthing, the best that has been here. A hit over second by Lufbery and Jones' bunt, were the only hits the Crescents made during the afternoon, and only one man got to a base and was left there.

The Stars played without an error. They got to the bases occasionally, but were either doubled-up or left there. The two runs made by the Crescents in their opening, were in this way. Martin got his first on a play that put Hatfield out at second. He stole second at the risk of his life, and started for home on Lufbery's single. The throw in from the field to the home plate was out of Dowd's reach, so Martin scored in safety and Lufbery reached third. The latter hugged the bag until Edmonson had squeezed Wiegand's fly, and then Lufbery beat the throw home. For the rest of the afternoon it was goose-eggs for both sides.

There were about [illegible] people present and all joined in admiration of the handsome shape the diamond and field is in through the efforts of John Wiersenga. Umpire Berriman was also refulgent in a blazer and cap of black and yellow from Horton's attractive stock. The score was:

NEWS OF OUR NEIGHBORS.

An Unknown Man Falls Through a Bridge—A New Station to be Built—The Organization of a Land Improvement Co.—Useless Fire Hydrants—Mrs. Littell Attacked With Lock Jaw.

(Special to THE DAILY PRESS.)

BOUND BROOK, Aug. 20:—An unknown man who was walking up the Lehigh Valley track at this place, yesterday morning, slipped between the ties of a bridge crossing and fell about 25 feet into a brook below. The water was not very deep and he was considerably bruised. He also complained of a severe pain in the back. His name was not ascertained. He was sent to Somerville.

The new railroad that is coming through this place is going to run between the Lehigh Valley Railroad and the Raritan river bridge. This morning a PRESS reporter interviewed some of the town people most interested. They said: "We are going to do all we possibly can to stop the railroad from coming through that way, as the wagons have to cross two railroads now and the danger to life is great, but if we get another one there the people will not be able to cross at all, so we are going to do all we can to stop the road from going that way."

It was rumored yesterday afternoon that the Lehigh Valley Railroad intended to erect a new depot. The rumor spread. A PRESS reporter called on Agent Moore who said the company did intend to erect a new depot, but beyond this he would give no other information.

For some time past the talk of the town has been the Bound Brook Land and Improvement Company. Monday night a meeting was called by the committee of the proposed company, requesting all the citizens to attend. About twenty-five were present. The report of the committee was read. The question was then put whether the land company should be organized. Four stockholders had already been obtained, but it was decided that a special committee be appointed to secure three more stockholders, and when these were secured the company should be organized. The company intends to be incorporated under the laws of New Jersey with a capital stock of $100,000. The price per share is $50. Should the company be organized the committee agree to take 130 shares of the stock. The object of this company will be to buy and improve land in and about the town, open new streets, etc. As soon as $25,000 worth of stock has been disposed of the company will begin operations. As all the citizens are interesting themselves in the new enterprise, the company will no doubt be organized in a few days.

Everybody is much shocked with the sad news that one of the most popular residents, Mrs. R. F. Littell, is suffering from lockjaw.

Chief Oldham of the Fire Department, says that there is no water in Middlebrook or West Bound Brook, and the fire hydrants are useless.

A Rain Drop Saved Her Life.

A young lady, a guest at Edgewood, was awakened Tuesday by a warning from Heaven that probably saved her life. A drop of rain falling on her face aroused her from sleep, and she sprang from the bed just as the ceiling above it fell with a crash. A moment later she would have been buried beneath the heavy plaster.

A Dissatisfied Cow Learns a Lesson.

A cow belonging to Wm. White, not content with grazing on the green pastures of which it was monarch, and covetous of the grass growing by the wayside along Girard avenue, just beyond the fence restricting its roaming propensities, sought to climb the barrier separating it from the road, Friday afternoon, but made a miscalculation and in a twinkling found itself balanced unpleasantly on top of the fence. For several minutes it struggled vigorously, but could not release itself from its predicament. Indeed, its posture was becoming more painful than ever when George Allen, a driver for J. S. Kline & Co., appeared like a good Samaritan and helped the cow down from the top of the fence into the now-welcome meadows which a moment before it had sought to forsake. The cow was considerably cut by the sharp edges on which it had been impaled, and is probably wiser for the experience.

George Thatcher's Wit Prevents a Panic.

While George Thatcher's minstrels were giving a performance in Lowell, Mass., last Friday, with the house packed to suffocation, the incandescent lights with which the pretty little Opera House in that city is supplied, suddenly became extinguished. The house in a second was in utter darkness. It happened as Dick Jose was taking his third encore, and just as he had reached the words in his song "With all her faults I love her still," when Thatcher, taking in the situation at a glance, shouted out: "I don't know where you could find a better place."

The audience, which was on the point of alarm, was instantly convulsed with laughter at George's impromptu wit, which happily averted what might have proved a serious panic. Jose continued to sing in the darkness, and finished his song before the house was relighted with gas, though his usually penetrating voice was lost in the tumultuous laughter at George's wisely timed and witty bon mot.

The People's Understanding of the Case.

[From The Press of Aug. 16.]

THE PRESS has reason to believe that the regular monthly payment of $1,000 by the Water Works company to the city, was deferred in July with the full knowledge and tacit consent of Chairman Newhall of the Water Board, and upon the advice of John Kean, Jr., the principal security on the Company's bond.

Any association of the members of the Big 6 with the granting of the water franchise, or the carrying out of its contract, is but another sample of how low blackguards will stoop in their viciousness. The franchise was rushed through the Council of 1889 to prevent the Council of 1890 having a word to say in the matter. Messrs. Roberts, Smith, Hetfield and Spangenberg were not members of that Council, and Moffett and Gallup were only two in a body that hardly permitted them to even open their heads.

The glory of the whole scheme is therefore entirely Mr. Newhall's and Corporation Counsel Marsh's. The barking of all the dogs in town will not distract the people's understanding from the fact that Newhall and Marsh created the contract, and Councilmen Newhall, Rushmore and Dunham—the partisan Water Board—will be held responsible by the people for any faults or delays that may arise.

The only appearance of the Big 6 in the matter, the people remember, was their endeavor to save the city the $5,500 paid "Supervising" Engineer Hering—who has not been in Plainfield in almost two months. Mayor Male pledged his word he would not sign the contract appointing Hering, but he was "brought around." The people then had no redress except by means of a resolution to cancel the contract. Such a resolution was offered by Councilman Hetfield, and fought over at a meeting of the Council held on St. Patrick's day. It failed—Councilmen Dunham, Jenkins, Johnson, Newhall, Roberts and Rushmore voting to keep on paying Hering thousands of dollars for nothing.

That the Big 6 had any other voice or vote in the Water Works pie, is—as Councilman Spangenberg desires to be recording as saying—"a lie!"

TOO EAGER FOR THE CASH.

Preferred Legal Tender to Plainfield Checks, And Got in Trouble.

The business men of West Front street, in a state of mind because of rumors that a forger was in their midst, gathered in clusters on the sidewalks, Friday night, left their stores unguarded, and wondered if they were being robbed, without their knowledge, by rascally bits of fraudulent paper.

The cause of the commotion was an enterprising commercial traveler who had managed to sell several bills of goods in Plainfield, during the afternoon, and who had secured immediate payment by either cash or check, for every sale. One of his customers was Joseph S. Cutter, grocer, of 28 West Front street, who gave the drummer a check for $26.40. The salesman asked that an insertion be made making it payable to E. A. Fowler & Co., the firm he represented, "or bearer." Mr. Cutter objected to the proposed alteration, and said he preferred to make his checks out for the parties whose names appeared as creditors on the bills the checks were to pay. The drummer demurred, but finally took the check as originally written. He had no sooner left the store, however, than he entered another, indorsed the check in the name of the firm, and sought to have it cashed. He urged that the signature on the check wouldn't be known outside of Plainfield, and he'd have trouble in getting it cashed in other towns where he was going. As it was after banking hours, he continued, he had no recourse but the tradesmen. He visited several stores, but was refused the favor of cashing until he called on W. W. Coriell, butcher, of 41 West Front street. Mr. Coriell was not so suspicious of the stranger, and readily cashed "his neighbor's" check. The drummer was profuse with his thanks, and bowed his way out.

Soon afterwards the suave commercial traveler returned, this time with a check bearing the signature of Sylvester Sharkey, grocer, of 68 West Third street.

"I want you to cash this too, my friend," he said. "I don't like to have the trouble of trying to get Plainfield checks cashed in other towns."

Mr. Coriell didn't like to see a man want too much of a good thing from one person, so he grumbled a little and said that he wasn't going to cash any more checks that day.

The drummer, however, was as persistent as Mr. Coriell was obdurate, and finally he told Mr. Coriell that if he'd only cash the check he'd pay him a percentage for the trouble. The offer made Mr. Coriell suspicious and angry. He sent for Mr. Cutter and asked if the signature on the check already cashed was genuine. Mr. Cutter said it was, but when it transpired that the drummer was in all probability not a member of the firm whose name he had written on the back of the check as an indorsement, Mr. Coriell demanded his money back. The drummer declined to return it and said that the check and signatures were all right and that Mr. Coriell would have no trouble in banking the paper. Mr. Coriell sent for a policeman, in a hurry, and Sergeant Lynch promptly responded. With the presence of a big policeman as an incentive the drummer returned to Mr. Coriell the cash for the check and received the check back again. Mr. Coriell threatened to have him arrested for forgery, and he talked loudly of locking up Mr. Coriell for "false imprisonment," though he hadn't yet been under arrest. Finally all parties simmered down, but as soon as the news of the affair spread groups of gossipers gathered on the street, and talked it all over for half an hour. The drummer left town in the evening, with the checks that he didn't want to carry away still uncashed, and muttering uncomplimentary things of Plainfield business men in general, and of one Plainfield business man in particular.

HAPPENINGS AT WASHINGTONVILLE.

What is Going on Among Our Rural Residents.

Mr. and Mrs. Robert Heath of Newark, were the guests of Mr. and Mrs. Robert Clark, Sunday.

Jonathan Drake of Delavan, Ill., is visiting Ephriam Acker. He reports a poor outlook for corn in Illinois, as there has been no rain sufficient to wet the ground since June. The oat crop will not be above 55 per cent. of an average crop; the grain louse having done great damage. Mr. Drake is a member of one of the old families which lived in this vicinity when the Allen, Drake and Acker families owned most of the Valley from what is now Warrenville to Feltville. Most of these families moved to Illinois many years ago, settling on a famous mound which is now built up into the town of Delavan, and grew up with the then young State, helping to make and sharing in her prosperity, like true Jerseymen loving a town wherever they go.

A horse belonging to B. Luerssen got loose in the stable at about three o'clock on Saturday morning, and tried to climb over the stall to his mate. He got his hind feet caught in the manger and struggled violently to extricate himself. The noise awoke Mr. Luerssen, who found it necessary to procure the assistance of neighbors and to tear down part of the stall before the horse could be released. Jim Guhn, who is the "Hostler Joe" of the villa, says everything was all right when he left his charges for the night.

John Wendell of Smalleytown, after leaving two cans of milk at Wm. Demler's milk depot, Monday morning, started to drive home in the early morning twilight, when his horse became frightened at some object in the road, and ran away. Mr. Wendell pluckily held fast to the reins and kept his seat in the wagon, and by presence of mind averted what might have been a serious accident. When he finally got the horse under control he found that a pair of broken shafts was the extent of the damage. Procuring a pair from a neighbor, he proceeded homeward.

Miss Dora Cooper of Mt. Bethel, is visiting her relatives, the Bartells.

Miss Annie Derlett of New York, is the guest of Mrs. Bloom at her handsome Summer residence, Clara Villa.

The Rev. Dr. Mohldenke is having a beautiful crypt built on his farm which he intends as a family vault, and to which he will remove the remains of his eldest son, who died recently. He was a young man of rare talent, and his bright future was just opening before him when the dead messenger summoned him after a few days' illness. He was loved and respected by all who had the pleasure of his acquaintance, for his sterling worth and Christian character. The building will be of rough mountain stone laid in cement, and will hold nine bodies. Richard, the second eldest, who is a graduate of the Columbia College School of Mines, and who stood at the head of his class, is the architect and builder. He was until lately Professor of Engineering in the Michigan University.

The Browns.

Brown has a house full of girls and boys,
Rosy and healthy and full of noise,
They are sprightly at work and bright at their books,
And are noted for smartness and wit and good looks.
Brown is healthy, his wife is fair,
And their faces are free from wrinkles of care;
They spend no money for powders and pills,
And never a dollar for doctor's bills.

The reason is that they begin in the right place. Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery, by keeping the springs of life pure, the blood free from impurities, wards off all those diseases which spring from bad blood. The use of the "Discovery" prevents liver and kidney troubles, dyspepsia, consumption or lung scrofula, stomach and bowel troubles, and forestalls the beginning of disease. That is why the Browns are so healthy. It is also guaranteed to cure these ailments if taken in time and given a fair trial, or money paid for it will be refunded.

She Understood It All.

(Written for THE PRESS.)

He took her to the base ball game,
And the batting order read;
And she liked the play and players—
Or that is what she said.

He told her what a foul was,
And when a ball was dead,
And why the frisky catcher wore
A bustle on his head.

He told her which the Crescents were,
And which were Newark bred;
And mentioned in the festive ninth,
That we were two ahead.

And when the game was at an end;
The cheering all was done,
And he had yelled himself quite hoarse,
For the Stars had not a run;

She laid her little hand in his
And spiked the howling gun,
And asked him in her pretty way:
"Say, Jack, which side has won?"

SALE OF "THE CENTRAL TIMES."

Frank W. Runyon to Publish a Red-Hot Republican Paper.

Frank W. Runyon has purchased The Central New Jersey Times property, and will assume control of the newspaper as proprietor and editor early in September.

The Central New Jersey Times is in its fifty-third year of publication. It was first issued as The Plainfield Union, in 1837. The Union was published by the Cushings, the present publishers of The Churchman of New York, and the venerable Milton Cushing was its editor. In 1868 E. Dean Dow, now of Knoxville, Tenn., bought The Union and changed the title to The Times. After two or three years Mr. Dow sold the newspaper to H. L. Niles and J. Calvin Runyon. A great deal of energy was displayed by the proprietors, at this period, in the management of the concern, and The Central New Jersey Times became what its name indicated—a paper giving the news of the entire broad section of country suggested by the title. A large circulation was acquired, and The Times became one of the best known papers in New Jersey. In later years, with the advent of daily papers, the scope of The Times was gradually changed, but the journal has maintained to the present day a high reputation and standing in the field which it seeks to cover. In 1874 Wm. J. Leonard bought the share in the property owned by Mr. Niles, and about five years ago the paper passed into the hands of a stock company whose members were L. V. F. Randolph, ex-Mayor of Plainfield, W. J. Leonard and J. Calvin Runyon. For sixteen years The Times has been under the editorship of Mr. Leonard, a careful, considerate, painstaking, conservative journalist. Mr. Leonard will retire from the editorial chair with the issue of September 3, when Mr. Runyon, the new proprietor, will succeed him. Mr. Leonard will return, it is expected, to the Episcopal ministry.

Frank W. Runyon, the new editor of The Times, is too well known in Plainfield, the city of his home, to need elaborate introduction. He is a graduate of Cornell University, Class of '83, and while in college developed remarkable journalistic capabilities by his work on the then famous Cornell Era. His associate editors on The Era were A. C. Cowell, for several years managing editor of The Washington Critic, where he still remains; John D. Adams, who was the dominant genius of Time when that journal was at its zenith, and who is now the chief editorial writer of The Syracuse Journal; C. C. Chase, formerly editor-in-chief of The Syracuse Standard; A. F. Matthews, one of the most brilliant men on the staff of The Philadelphia Press; and T. S. Williams, who has been city editor of The New York Commercial Advertiser, Albany and Washington correspondent, and private secretary to Governor Hill of New York State. Every one of this Era galaxy is a genius, Mr. Runyon himself being by no means the least. Since leaving college Mr. Runyon has done remarkably excellent newspaper work for The Sun in New York and The Press in Philadelphia, besides achieving theatrical successes with the Madison Square Theatre and Major J. B. Pond. Among the lecturing tours which he has managed with flattering results were those of Henry Ward Beecher.

Mr. Runyon purposes infusing much of the spirit of modern journalism into The Times, and plans to give the public the briskest and stanchest kind of a live Republican newspaper. In time important changes may be effected, notably the substitution of a convenient eight-page form for the "blanket-sheet" style, and the issuing of two editions a week—one Wednesday and one Saturday.

The news editor of the new Times will be Robert F. R. Huntsman, a young Plainfield newspaper man who has established a high reputation in New Jersey journalistic circles.

They Will Marry in September.

(From the Asbury Park Journal.)

The engagement of Mr. W. Frank Smith, of Plainfield, N. J., to Miss Frankie Brooch, of New York City, is announced. Their marriage will take place early in September.

More Gas Than All Else.

(From the Newark Evening News.)

An investigating committee reports that the cost of lighting Plainfield and North Plainfield each year is $50,000. Of this sum $28,000 is for gas, $12,000 for electric lamps, $6,000 for kerosene, and $4,000 for gasolene. One-fourth of the expense is for public lighting.

A Successful Editor Buys Another Paper.

Ex-Senator John Carpenter of Hunterdon county has long been dickering for the purchase of The Daily Times of New Brunswick. He has at length effected a purchase, and has filed a chattel mortgage in the County Clerk's office for $10,000. Editor Carpenter has made a great success of The Democrat of Clinton, and the new life to be infused into The Times is expected to produce gratifying results. The Times is the only Democratic paper in a Democratic stronghold.

Longed For the Western "Pe-raries."

During the Summer vacation the average school-boy throws grammar to the winds, and the Plainfield boy seems to be no exception to this rule of human nature. One youthful representative of the rising generation stood before a bill-board yesterday reveling in the glories of a flaming circus and Wild West poster. When he had feasted his imagination several minutes he fished a piece of soiled crayon from the depths of a pocket, voiced the longings of his heart by writing below a particularly lively picture the ungrammatical but expressive sentence, "This is me on a horse," sighed heavily and turned regretfully away.

Imitation goods are gotten up for the ignorant and gullible. The persons able to read and write are not so easily fooled. They will insist that Hires' Root Beer is handed them, and nothing else "just as good." The best imitation is no good, and you know it.

UNFERMENTED GRAPE JUICE.

Used in the principal churches for communion. Excellent for females, weakly persons and the aged.

ADOPTED IN HOSPITALS AS THE BEST FOR INVALIDS.

Speer's Port Grape Wine,
FOUR YEARS OLD.

THIS Celebrated Wine is the pure juice of the dead ripe Oporto Grape, raised in Speer's vineyards, and left hang until they shrink and become partly raisined before gathering. Its invaluable

Tonic and Strengthening Properties are unsurpassed by any other Wine. Being produced under Mr. Speer's own personal supervision, its purity and genuineness are guaranteed by the principal Hospitals and Boards of Health who have examined it. The youngest child and the weakest invalids use it to advantage. It is particularly beneficial to the aged and debilitated, and suited to the various ailments that effect the weaker sex.

It is in every respect a WINE TO BE RELIED ON.

Speer's Unfermented Grape Juice

Is the juice of the Oporto Grape, preserved in its natural, fresh, sweet state as it runs from the press by fumigation and electricity, thereby destroying the exciter of fermentation. It is perfectly pure, free from spirits, and will keep in any climate.

Speer's (Socialite) Claret

Is held in high estimation for its richness as a Dry Table Wine, especially suited for dinner use.

Speer's P. J. Sherry

CITY DEPARTMENT.

OFFICIAL PAPER OF THE STATE, THE COUNTY AND THE CITY, AND HAS THE LARGEST CIRCULATION OF ANY PAPER PUBLISHED IN THE COUNTY OF UNION

A. DEMAREST, - - City Editor

—What has become of the "[illegible] Club?"

—Oh, for a Fireman's Parade this Fall.

—Edward Lowe's [illegible] lodged in a [illegible] the other day at "Allen's Lookout," on the mountain.

—Peter Weaver has been appointed a substitute letter carrier, and entered on the discharge of his duties Monday.

—A great deal of repairing is being done on the public streets, which are expected to be in perfect condition during Fall and Winter.

—Three stage loads of young ladies belonging to one of the sodalities connected with St. Mary's church, spent yesterday at [illegible] Beach.

—The new scenery in Music Hall includes a new drop curtain. Stage Manager [illegible] will do his part during the coming season, to please the public.

—Four handsome new signs of black and gold glare down from the walls of the North avenue station of the Central Railroad, informing strangers that this is Plainfield.

—The Directors of the Plainfield Building and Loan Association will hold their regular monthly meeting at Jackson & Codington's office next Monday evening [illegible].

—"Glenside," or as it was formerly called, Fairville, has become a popular summer resort. Under the present management by Charles J. Drake, it is becoming more popular every day.

—The Hotel Netherwood's young people will have a strawride to either Rahway or Bound Brook next week. They will take the orchestra with them and a big supper will be ordered in advance.

—The toughest gang of people and the [illegible] show that ever visited Plainfield, was that of Washburn & Arlington's [illegible]. Chief of Police Grant telegraphed to Amboy to the police there to watch out for them.

—Programmes are out announcing a shooting tournament on the grounds of the Middlesex Gun Club, September 30, under the management of Chas. Smith, alias "Dutchy." Both live birds and inanimate targets will be used.

—The Postoffice Department has granted Postmaster Pope an additional letter carrier, whose term of service will commence October 1. A new route in the centre of the city, will be laid out and present routes will be changed and shortened.

—Jacob [illegible], proprietor of the Farmers' Hotel, left on Tuesday with the Veteran Firemen's Association of New York on their trip to Watertown, N. Y., where they will attend the grand parade of the Watertown Fire Department.

—James Casken, of the Borough, who was fined last week for fast driving, is [illegible] by Peter Snader with a suit for damages. The horse which Casken drove belonged to Snader, who complains that Casken injured the horse and damaged the wagon and harness.

—The Democratic Committee of the Fourth New Jersey Congressional District have called a Convention to meet at Belvidere, N. J., on Wednesday, September 17, 1890, at 11 o'clock A. M., to nominate the candidate for Representative to be supported in the ensuing election.

—A correspondent writes:—"A dead cat has lain for two days on Somerset street, near the engine house, while a member of the North Plainfield Board of Health lives opposite on Collector Spencer's [illegible] and breathes the air that arises whenever a wagon runs over the animal's remains."

—Bridget Newman, who was arrested Thursday night for smashing things by the wholesale in the boulevard, changed her mind Saturday about bringing "a dozen or two dozen witnesses" to prove her innocence of the charge of drunkenness and disorderly conduct, pleaded guilty, and paid a fine of [illegible].

—The London Assurance and the Hamburg-Bremen companies, of which Messrs Lyman & Antony are the agents, have paid the Crescent League $1,[illegible], the full amount of their insurance. The companies also give the League all the furniture and everything else saved in the fire except the damaged billiard tables.

—Two Plainfield painters are in the habit of riding on freight trains, Sunday afternoons, as a short cut to the ball grounds. Special Officer Hope has his eagle eye on them, and says that if they persist in the practice they may find themselves, like other railroad trespassers, [illegible] of [illegible] Lynch, pacing the walls of a four-by-nine cell.

—The sidewalk in front of J. P. Roman's on Somerset street is being graded and paved with the sidewalk "connecting" at each end, and stone flagging is to be laid. It seems to be Mr. Roman's intention merely to lay a strip of flagging in the centre of the sidewalk, but the people who use the thoroughfare hope that he will perfect the walk by paving it from store front to curb, thus making it uniform with the handsome walk in front of Alex. Thorn's block, and assisting the [illegible] of the entire city and borough.

—The official census of New Jersey shows a population of 1,436,[illegible], an increase of 305,[illegible] in ten years, or [illegible] per cent. The population of the counties is as follows: Hudson, 275,[illegible]; Essex, [illegible]; Passaic, 104,[illegible]; Camden, [illegible]; Mercer, [illegible]; Union, 72,347; Monmouth, [illegible]; Middlesex, [illegible]; Burlington, [illegible]; Morris, 54,[illegible]; Bergen, 47,[illegible]; Cumberland, [illegible]; Warren, 36,[illegible]; Hunterdon, 35,[illegible]; Atlantic, 28,[illegible]; Gloucester, 28,[illegible]; Somerset, 28,[illegible]; Salem, 25,[illegible]; Sussex, 22,[illegible]; Ocean, 15,[illegible]; Cape May, 11,[illegible].

Building Loan Delegates.

The Directors of the Plainfield Building and Loan Association, at their regular meeting Monday night, in response to a notification from the Hon. James Bishop, Chief of the Bureau of Statistics of Labor and Industries, appointed Wm. K. Codington, Rodney Harper, and D. F. [illegible], delegates to represent the Association in a Convention of New Jersey Building and Loan Associations to be held at the State House, Trenton, Sept. 3.

Enormous Coal Bins for South Plainfield.

A coal storage plant will soon be erected by the Lehigh Valley Coal Company at South Plainfield. It will have a capacity of 220,000 tons, coal being stored by machinery in 14 conical piles. Six piles will contain 20,000 tons each, four [illegible] tons, two 11,000 tons, and two 10,000 tons each. This will be a [illegible] storage system having a capacity of 1,[illegible] tons in sixty piles, an amount which is nearly double the amount of coal at tidewater today.

[illegible].

Thos. LaRue, whose home was formerly on West Fourth street, died Tuesday in the asylum at Morris Plains, to which place he was taken about two years ago. The unfortunate man's original hallucination was that he was immensely wealthy, and he made himself so obnoxious about town that his friends were compelled to have him placed in confinement. His latest freak of the imagination was that he owned many hundreds of horses, and the tremendous strain of taking care of the equines worried him to death.

$500 Offered for an incurable case of catarrh by the proprietors of Dr. Sage's Remedy. 50 cents, by druggists.

Thos. S. Armstrong, chief clerk of Reynolds' pharmacy, has left for the coast of Maine where he will spend a three-weeks' vacation in camp.

The Rev. Dr. J. L. Hurlbut of Plainfield, was Thursday re-elected Secretary and Treasurer of the Normal Hall Alumni Association of Chautauqua.

Mrs. W. A. Freeman, organist of Grace church, and the godmother of its surpliced choir, has gone with her two sons to Brooklyn, Conn., for a short stay.

Mary E. Loomis and husband, of North Plainfield, have sold to Clarence J. Rice, of North Plainfield, lot Northeast side of Bay street, this city, 40x100 feet, for $600.

According to the New York papers Miss Florence Hennegar of Carleton avenue, is receiving considerable attention at Lake Hopatcong, as "the fearless bicyclist and horseback rider."

The Rev. C. M. Rupe of the Franklin, Ohio, Baptist church, who preached in the Memorial chapel at Washingtonville, Sunday night, Aug. 10, is a brother-in-law of the Rev. J. C. Fernald of this city.

William M. Coward, of the Scott Press works, returned to this city on Sunday after a visit to the home of his parents in England, for several weeks. Mr. Coward was accompanied by his father, who will remain in America for two months.

Invitations are out for the marriage of Miss Mary Ingersoll Sanger to George Warren Little, on Wednesday evening, August 27, at 19 Adams street, Mount Vernon, N. Y. Miss Sanger is a daughter of E. P. Sanger formerly of Plainfield.

Mr and Mrs. S. C. Peck returned Saturday after an absence of about three weeks. During Mr. Peck's absence the store has been in charge of Miss Lizzie Sandford, a faithful employe of many years, who is very popular with the patrons of the shop.

Residents of Washington Park are already returning from their vacations at the sea side, the lake shore and the mountains. Among the recent home-comers are Frank Curtis and family, A. E. Faber and family, A. E. Faber, Jr., and family, and E. J. Waring.

"The Royal Punch and Judy and Specialty Show," representing the aggregated vaudeville talent of the Duer street young idea, and including "the only W. H. Rice; all others are humbugs," has been entertaining the region 'round about Emily and Duer streets.

The death is announced of David K. Milliken, an old and respected resident of Somerville. Mr. Milliken was a brother of "Uncle" John Milliken of this city and Elias Milliken of Dunellen. Mr. Milliken's wife died a few months ago. He has been sick for a long time.

A letter received in Plainfield from the Rev. P. E. Smyth locates the pastor of St. Mary's church at Cognac, France, where he is the guest of a former Plainfielder, Consul Preston. Father Smyth is in the best of health. He will leave Europe for home about August 19.

Mr. and Mrs. Greensmith of Evona, have gone for a two weeks' visit to Massachusetts. They will centre at Fairhaven where they will be in the midst of their hosts of friends. Miss Mills who has been spending a few weeks with her cousin, Mrs. Greensmith, accompanies them.

Miss Mamie Miller, daughter of Mrs. John L. Livock of New York city, and granddaughter of Mrs. George Goodwin of Plainfield, sailed Friday night for New London. From there she will take the cars for New Port, Vermont, where she will spend two weeks of her vacation with friends.

The Rev. Dr. J. L. Hurlbut presided at the Methodist Episcopal Congress at Chautauqua, Aug 13. The Methodist Congress was one of twelve denominational conventions, equal to "Denominational Day," held for the discussion of church affairs with special reference to Chautauqua work.

Col. Henry S. Webb, Chief Engineer of the Virginia Coal and Iron company, is the guest of Col. C. K. Moore, of Fanwood. They are the twin Colonels who a few years ago put 70 miles of railroad through Southern Virginia where the natives openly threatened to murder any Northern capitalist who entered their country.

Among the prominent men now at Bar Harbor is Chauncey B. Ripley, Westfield's famous citizen, of the law department of the University of New York. This is his first visit to Bar Harbor, but he expressed himself very enthusiastically about the charms of the place. It is hoped by each habitue of the place that his first visit will not be his last.

The Pressers' Circular, a widely-read trade paper published at Philadelphia, comments as follows on a recent change in a prominent Plainfield partnership: "C. Potter, Jr., & Co., the well-known press builders, have admitted David E. Titsworth to membership in the firm. This is a merited recognition of the personal worth, intelligence and ability of the new junior member."

The Donkey Party at Hotel Netherwood, held recently, was a source of much pleasure to the old as well as the young folk. Mrs. H. W. Williams and Mrs. J. B. Finn purchased and distributed the favors. Among the fortunate ones were Leroy Brewster, who won two prizes, Georgie Grossman, May Lattin, Gladys Balch, Walter Thorn, Nellie Drake, Edna Wimple, Winston Williams, and Blanch Flouer.

Ex-Councilman Goddard, formerly of this city, and now of Boston, stopped over in Plainfield for a few hours Friday night on his way to Cape May, where he will attend the National Convention of Central Station Electricians, until Tuesday. Mr. Goddard is a member of the Committee on "Insurance rules, which Committee contemplates the adoption of National rules to govern the relations of fire insurance companies with the electric light and power systems throughout the country.

The wedding of Miss Florence Pollstream and Dr Charles E. Tylers, will take place at the bride's home in Brooklyn, Monday, September 8.

A surprise party was tendered to Arthur Carpenter of Westervelt avenue, Tuesday night. Thirty young people attended, meeting first at the home of Miss Emma Minich, of Manning avenue.

Among the latest arrivals recorded by The Thousand Island News are Mr. and Mrs Chas. E. Rossp and son, and Mr. and Mrs. James W. Jackson, of Plainfield, at The Frontenac, Round Island.

Mrs. Anna Cairncross, who for many years kept an intelligence office on Park avenue between Fourth street and the railroad, died at Muhlenberg Hospital, Sunday, 10 P. M., of consumption. Dr Endicott held an autopsy Monday.

There are spots on the sun, and even THE PRESS sometimes, like the great Homer, nods. Through misinformation it was led, Tuesday, to announce the engagement of Fred. A. Burr of Kensington avenue to Miss Lily G. Burr, daughter of T. S. Burr of LaGrande avenue. The fortunate man in the case is not Fred A. Burr, but Eliot Burr.

The marriage took place Monday afternoon at 2:30 o'clock, at the home of the groom on Harmony street, of Miss Lizzie Watt, of Somerville, and George Worden Squires. The Rev. Cornelius Schenck officiated. A number of relatives and friends were present, and refreshments were served. The young couple have gone to Lake Hopatcong for a honeymoon.

Ivar. Swedberg, a former employe of the Pond Machine Tool Company, and a resident of this city where his father died a few months ago, writes from Billesholm, Sweden, news that will give much pleasure to his friends here. He is now the Superintending Engineer of one of the largest coal mines in the World, with 500 men under him. Young Swedberg justly deserves his good fortune, and the company he is connected with are to be congratulated upon securing him.

Imprisoned His Head in a Box.

Mansfield G. Duckworth fell down the cellar stairs at Doane & VanArsdale's shoe store on Thursday and jammed his head into a wooden box he was carrying. His shoulders were wedged so tightly in the box that assistance had to be procured to remove the unusual and unwelcome headgear. Mr. Duckworth was considerably bruised and scratched by the accident, and suffers considerably from the jar of the fall.

Ex-Councilman Bowers Assures Good Messenger Service and Additional Telegraph Facilities, for Plainfield.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE PRESS:—I call attention of the public to the advertisement of the N.J. Postal Telegraph Co., now building towards Plainfield. The company is a branch of the Postal Telegraph Co., and of the Mackey Cable Co., and comes to stay. Its service will be first-class in every particular. By the prompt delivery of messages by uniformed messenger boys on bicycles; by keeping its offices open day and night; and by courteous and liberal treatment of the public, we feel that the N. J. P. T. Co., will supply a long felt want to the city of Plainfield and will receive a liberal patronage from the citizens. The company is composed of representative and progressive men from the cities of Newark, Orange, Montclair, Plainfield, Rahway, and other points in the State. I have the honor of being one of its directors and chairman of its Executive Committee, and shall interest myself in the Plainfield office to see that good service be given.

B. O. BOWERS.

A "Dude Engine" to Run Through South Plainfield.

The Lehigh Valley Railroad Company is running a "dude engine" on the Geneva and Sayre branch. She is an output of the Sayre shops and was built under the direction of Master Mechanic Weaver. Her name is Col. J. H. Horton, and No. 336.

While this engine contains all the necessary equipments of modern railroading, she is ornamented to a degree seldom attained by any other engines of the present day. The engineer's comfortable cab is constructed in Queen Anne style with stained glass windows. In the cab is a large clock and a steel engraving of Col. Horton, while the metal-work is nickel-plated. On the outside of the cab under the window is the name Col. J. H. Horton and a picture in a nickel-plate frame fifteen inches in diameter. The Lehigh Valley is the only company hereabouts that continues the old custom of putting engines in "real dress" with lots of brass work, and while it may be very pleasing to the company the fireman who does the cleaning up and scouring the jacket with patented preparations would much rather have a machine of sombre appearance.

Watermelon Seeds Help to Lift a Mortgage.

A novel scheme for creating interest and entertainment, and at the same time assist in a charitable object, was developed a few days ago at Hotel Netherwood, by Mrs. H. W. Williams. Each payment of 50 cents entitled the one to a guess as to how many seeds were contained in a watermelon. The money thus secured was to be used towards helping a worthy poor woman to lift a debt off her home. The one guessing nearest the correct number was to receive a large doll, handsomely dressed by Mrs. Williams and provided besides with a trunk full of clothes. At first there was not much interest in the matter outside of the scheme for charity's sake. Everybody thought they knew about how many seeds there were in a watermelon.

But as the list of guessers grew and their guesses ranged from 2,000 down, much rivalry arose and a discussion of the question became the one topic of conversation. At luncheon and dinner the ladies jumped all the courses down to fruit, and ordered watermelon by quarters and halves for the purpose of counting the seeds. It is even said that the waiters have been bribed to tell the correct number.

The majority of the guesses were from 700 up. But towards the last the figure dropped and as low as 300 was a frequent quotation. The melon was cut Thursday night, and the cleverest man of all was shown to be Wm. J. Boone of Washington Park. His guess was 1,010 and the number of seeds in the melon was 1,007.

Besides about sixty dollars that were paid in by the guessers, there were a number of wagers of ten and twenty dollars each that may be added to the sum sent to the worthy object.

—The largest shipment of news paper ever received in this city, arrived at the freight house Tuesday. It weighed almost three tons. THE PRESS will be printed on it.

John have you seen that woman lately? John in astonishment? What woman? That woman picking grapes for Speer's Wine. Just see her in another column and read about it, the wines are found by chemists to be absolutely pure and equal to the best in the World. The Board of Health in large cities and leading Hospitals have adopted their use where wines are needed.

TRIBULATIONS OF A BANKRUPT.

Creditors Question a "Failure," and Arrest the [illegible] of Various Wrong-doings.

Financial difficulties have enshrouded S. Frucht, of Sycamore street, for several days. A short time ago the young merchant "failed," and some of his creditors were so ungenerous as to question his motives and to make unpleasant accusations. Mr. Frucht with broad and honest smiles denied such soft impeachment, and insisted that business had been "verra poor," and that he could get no money to pay his bills. Constable G. B. Rockafellow levied on the goods in Frucht's store, and today was set for their sale. Suddenly however, some of the goods mysteriously disappeared, and Frucht was accused of having spirited them away. Sufficient evidence was obtained, it is said, to establish a case against the enterprising bankrupt. He was to be arrested on two different warrants, when the goods again came to light. The woman at whose house the missing property was found insisted that she was not an accomplice of Frucht and was not storing the goods for him, but had bought and paid for them. She readily surrendered them, however, and seemed to consider that it would be easy for her to get back whatever money she might have expended. As the goods were recovered the arrest of Frucht was deferred.

As a sort of counter-charge Frucht complains that the Constable and three appraisers broke into his cellar yesterday, and that he detected one of the four trying to steal a package of envelopes. He himself, however, admits that after the constable had levied on the goods in the cellar and had placed them under lock and key he tampered with the fastenings and thus made it necessary for the appraisers to break through the door.

If the settlement of Frucht's business is not satisfactory he will probably be arrested within a short time on the two warrants on which he was to have been arrested yesterday before the missing goods were found.

BOULEVARD PHILISTINES.

They Hammer John Motley for Curtailing Hospitality.

John Motley of Elizabeth fell into the hands of the Philistines of the boulevard Tuesday night. Being of a convivial turn of mind, he visited the drink dispensary of Patrick Day on West Third street, and was about to order a glass of liquid refreshment when he became cognizant of the fact that a crowd of thirsty-throats were assembled in the bar-room and were casting glances towards him that were equivalent to a demand to be treated. The illustrious namesake of the famous American historian paid for a round of drinks, and then paid for another. He objected, however, to squandering all his wealth on the rapidly increasing crowd, and in consequence of his refusal to treat further a fight resulted. Motley was pommeled severely, and when he presented himself before Justice Nash next morning he had bruises and cuts on his face and the back of his head. He complained against Patrick Day, John Day his son, and other persons unknown, for beating, kicking and otherwise assaulting him. Warrants for the arrest of the alleged assailants were issued. It is probable that several other charges recently made against the Days will now be prosecuted.

Drink, Kind Master, and Patient Friend.

Alex. Thorn has provided two very welcome accompaniments for the driven well and pump in front of his store on Somerset street. The one is a cup by means of which the thirsty traveler may refresh himself, and the other is a watering trough, brimming over with nature's nectar, for the faithful horse.

Quoted His Text From Pilate.

The Rev. Mr. Earle, of Westfield, conducted the services in the Church of the Holy Cross, North Plainfield, on Sunday morning, the rector, the Rev. T. Logan Murphy, being absent from home. A good sized congregation listened with much interest to Mr. Earle's able and instructive sermon which was based on the words of Pilate, "Behold the man," as contained in the XIXth chapter of John.

An Amazon Rampant on the Boulevard.

The delectable region of the boulevard was aglow with excitement Thursday, and two or three hundred people gathered on West Third street to witness the antics of Bridget Newman. Bridget had been imbibing freely of the flowing bowl, and was having a glorious time making things lively and interesting for the assembled populace when Policeman Kiely hove in view. The windows in Sullivan's saloon had been smashed, and various portable objects which the portly Bridget could reach had been shattered. When told that she was under arrest she threw herself on the pavement and refused to budge. Four men dragged her, fighting, kicking, screaming and cursing, to the station-house. On Friday she appeared before City Judge Codington, a pitiable object. Her face was bruised, discolored and swollen, and her eyes were bleared. She was told that she was charged with intoxication, fighting, swearing and using indecent language. She compressed her lips firmly, pleaded not guilty, and stated that she could bring a dozen or two dozen witnesses to prove her innocence.

Hackman's Self-Inflicted Woes.

Patrick Keely, hackman, contributed ten dollars to the city treasury Friday against his will. Several days ago he was adjudged guilty of using profane and indecent language to Policeman McCue because McCue had arrested hackman John Keely, his son; and that morning Judge Codington fined him five dollars for the offense. Patrick was also placed on trial on the charge of fast driving. Several witnesses testified that Patrick had driven his horse down Broadway on a run, compelling others to drive upon the curbing to get out of his way. He made no defense, and was told to surrender five dollars more.

Patrick said if there were any more cases against him he'd give right up and go to Elizabeth and the county jail, but took encouragement from the court's assurance that no other complaints had been made and agreed to pay the $10 and save himself from twenty days' imprisonment.

Patrick's son John was tried on the charge of fighting with hackman Max Newman on the public streets. Newman had already pleaded guilty and paid a fine for his share of the fun, but John insisted on his own behalf that he was entirely innocent. Hackmen Max Newman, James Farley and John Kelly all agreed that Keely had called Newman bad names because Newman had touched him accidentally with his whip, and that Keely had dared Newman to cross the street and hit him and had picked up stones to throw at Newman, whereupon Newman gave chase. The row was at its height when Constable Rockafellow appeared and arrested Newman, while Policeman McCue arrested Keely.

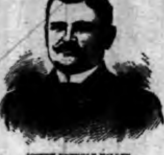
Keely and Michael Kennedy, another hackman, testified contrariwise. They said that Farley fell against Keely and tried to knock him over, that Newman then struck Keely over the head with his whip, that Keely grappled with Newman, that Newman kicked Keely on the shins the specific number of five or eight times, that Keely broke away and was chased by Newman in and out among the hacks, and that Keely was then stoned down the street by Newman.

The problems in the case were so intricate that the court exercised the prerogative of weighing the case in his mind for twenty-four hours before announcing his decision.

A THEATRICAL PLUNGER.

A Well-Known Hotel-Keeper Going to Manage Three Combinations.

The World, August 10, published the story given below in connection with a photographic reproduction that wholly failed to faithfully represent the genial countenance of the open-handed and open-hearted citizen of Plainfield whose hearty, affable face it aimed to portray. It is no more than justice demands and his personal worth deserves, that THE PRESS should give a better picture of the man and add to the World's story much of the commendation due him that has been omitted. Here is the better picture, though no picture can do him justice:



JOSEPH [illegible] MILLER.

The story the World told was as follows:

Among the hotel-keepers of New Jersey there is not one better known or more esteemed than Joseph B. Miller, or Joe, as he is familiarly called by his friends, senior partner of Miller Bros., proprietors of Laing's Hotel, of Plainfield, a public-spirited man, always willing and helpful in any good work for the promotion of public enterprise. Although comparatively a young man he has had considerable experience as a hotel-keeper, having been associated with his father in the City Hotel from 1869 until 1875, which place they gave up to take charge of the Sheridan House at Elizabeth. In 1880, Joe and his brother George bought out the famous old hostelry, Laing's Hotel, or, as it was known in the days of the stage coach, "Laing's Inn." It is one of the oldest hotels in this section of the State.

Mr. Miller has always been more or less interested in theatricals, but when his friends learned that he was to be the President and Treasurer of the Lew Dockstader Minstrel Company for 1891 there was excitement in huge chunks, for the thought that Joe was to be with them no more caused a gloom to settle on those who were accustomed to enjoy his hospitality that would take more than Dockstader's funniest songs to dispel.

Mr. Miller says the well-known theatrical manager, Harry J. Clapham, will manage the company. Minstrelsy has changed a great deal, and is likely to change a great deal more. The negro of today is not the negro of twenty or thirty years ago, nor is the minstrel of today the same. In the Dockstader's Minstrels of next year will be forty-five of the best artists to be procured from both sides of the Atlantic, and the company will embrace novelties never before shown in this country. The costuming of the first part will be a revelation. Spectacular effect will be one of the prominent features of the new troupe.

Mr. Miller will go to Europe in the Fall to engage some of the artists who have become famous there. Besides investing in the Dockstader Company, Mr. Miller has organized a burlesque opera company which will travel under his name and be managed by him. He has also, in conjunction with Mr. Dockstader, leased one of the chief Chicago theatres for 1893 and will run it during the World's Fair season. It is a long time since any outsider plunged so extensively into theatricals.

Mr. Miller retains his interest in the hotel, but in his absence his brother George will assume entire charge.

Although all of the above is true and of general interest, there is omitted a merited mention of the most important factor in the coming success of the new enterprises the young hustler has embarked in. That factor is his magnetic personality. None know him but to be charmed with his good fellowship and affability. The press will neglect other attractions to make room for big notices of the genial Joe's ventures, and the people with whom he comes in contact in the North, East, South or West, will put themselves out ever after to give his companies a personal endorsement, boom the advance sales, set the stage with more care and attractiveness, or in a hundred other ways assure greater success.

Harry Clapham, the manager, is another specimen of the right man in the right place. He it was who made Haverly's Minstrels. "40 count 'em 40," is a trade mark of his invention, under which he steered a company all over the World and made thousands of dollars. These two at the helm with Dockstader on deck, will reach any port they set sail for, with a profitable cargo. Everybody in the business, nowadays, promises a novelty in their line, but Lew Dockstader's Minstrels will offer two novelties in the olio. If you don't believe it, count 'em when you see the show. Dockstader himself is the greatest drawing minstrel in the country today, and there will be a talented singing party in the opening. When it is all put on $36,000 will have been spent in costumes, and scenic effects. Not a detail of perfection will be missing.

The Company will open in the East, July 1891. It is already booked for 34 weeks in all the first-class theatres of the best cities.

Bank Place to be Improved.

The Latimer real estate on East Front street, consisting of dwelling house and barn, corner of Bank place, and a vacant lot on the Easterly side, has been purchased by W. G. Butler, who will improve Bank place and its surroundings and still hold the property in the market.

Washingtonville Whisps.

Mrs. John Sawyer with her family of Brooklyn, is again spending the Summer with their friends, the Misses Spencer at their handsome villa.

Miss Carrie Totten of Newark, is visiting her friend, Mrs. Andrew Willson.

A fine, large, brown mare belonging to S. H. Beeching, is suffering from spinal meningitis. The veterinary has little hopes of her recovery.

The Sunday schools of Passaic Valley along the line of the D. L. and W. railroad, had their annual excursion yesterday to Coney Island. About fifteen cars carried the excursionists. It was under the management of the veteran conductor, Thos. Rundio.

The Over-the-Brook Board of Freeholders.

The monthly meeting of the Somerset County Freeholders was held at the Somerville Court House Aug. 13, all the members being present.

The resignation of Hugh Gaston as County Collector was tendered and accepted. The members voted to extend to the retiring Collector their thanks for the able manner in which he had discharged his duties, for his uniform courtesy and friendship, and his fidelity to the interests of the county.

The members furnished the following estimates of expenses for the coming year for each of their respective townships:

North Plainfield township and borough	[illegible]
Bedminster	[illegible]
Branchburg	[illegible]
Bernards	[illegible]
Bridgewater	[illegible]
Franklin	[illegible]
Hillsborough	[illegible]
Montgomery	[illegible]
Warren	[illegible]
Total	[illegible]

It was ordered that the sum of $[illegible] be raised by taxation to meet expenditures for the current year.

E. B. Allen was chosen County Collector by a vote of 6, to 4 for Hugh Gaston. The Collector will furnish bonds for $[illegible]. He will assume the duties of the office to-morrow.

The Board adjourned to meet at Stirling next Saturday at 11 A. M.

ENTANGLED IN CUPID'S WEB.

A Plainfield Young Man Willingly Ensnared by a Bogus Country Girl.

A charming little romance, involving the happiness of two fond, fluttering, youthful hearts, is being developed, these merry Summer days, between a young man well known in Plainfield society, and a fair young maid who has become to the young man's existence the best, most beautiful, and truest thing in life.

The young man of this story of reality is something of a poet in his way, and rambles about, when opportunity affords, among the wilds of nature, communing with the woods, the hills, the brooks, the birds and flowers. He is something of an historian as well, and when the Battle of Springfield was celebrated, several weeks ago, in the quiet, quaint little village among the hills in the upper part of Union county, he was one of the interested witnesses of the celebration. He became so pleased with his new surroundings that he remained at the old historic inn several days, spending the hours in drives and rambles. One morning his walk took him along a country lane which terminated abruptly at an old-fashioned farmhouse, nestling cosily among trees and shrubbery. He entered the dooryard, tapped at the door, and asked the kind-faced, motherly woman who responded, for a drink of water. Instead of bringing the glass herself, she sent her daughter, and the daughter was such a vision of loveliness that the young man from Plainfield was conscious of nothing but thrills of covetousness during all the long walk back to the inn.

The poet-historian-rambler could not resist the temptation to stroll next day again towards the nestling farm house, and he could not fail to notice a glad gleam of welcome in the young girl's eyes as he once more paused to ask her for a glass of water. In a few days these visits became a matter of course, and the young man from Plainfield began to think that he should have to make the Springfield inn a place of permanent abode. The two young people, hopelessly in love, spent many ecstatic hours together. The girl's mother was a considerate chaperone, and kept herself in comparative seclusion. The new goddess showed her adorer the bubbling spring whence came the sparkling waters whose quaffing had made their first acquaintance, and he sat down on the mossy bank beside the dripping stones on the hillside and wrote a poem about it, and the girl said 'twas the loveliest thing she had ever read—so much nicer and sweeter than Goethe and Browning.

Goethe and Browning! The young man started. So much education, so much refinement, and in a country girl? He queried, and she blushed and stammered and confessed. They weren't country people at all. Their home was in New York, but she and mamma had persuaded papa to let them rent a genuine country house and spend the Summer in a real rural way. And it had been so lonesome—till he had come to give her a happiness she had never known before. Papa had been in Europe a month on business, but would soon be home. By the way, she naively added, the young man would have to see papa, at which unwelcome information the young man groaned.

Papa has since been "seen," however, and everything is satisfactory, and that's why a certain young man from Plainfield makes so many mysterious trips, by cars or carriage, in the direction of Elizabeth, each week. The wedding will occur probably in the Spring.

A Plan to Make Their Royal Order Grow.

The Royal Arcanum Councils of Plainfield, Fanwood, Westfield and Flemington, have been formed into one of twelve State reunion districts, under a new plan approved by the Grand Regent of New Jersey, and twice a month, during the Fall and Winter seasons, the four Councils will meet together and have the merriest kind of a social gathering.

Changes in City Realty.

The deeds of transfer of Plainfield real estate recorded in the County Clerk's office, Friday, were:

Henry S. Moore of this city, to James Burkett of Rahway, two tracts of land on North side of Milton avenue, Rahway, 46x150 feet and 2,034 square feet, $3,500.

M. F. Marcley and wife of this city, to Aaron Keyser of this city, 26 835-1,000 acres of land on Broadway, Putnam avenue, Webster place and Hillside avenue, $30,000.

Sudden Death of Marshall Brown.

Marshall Brown, an aged and highly respected colored man, died suddenly, of heart trouble, at his home on Manning avenue, on Saturday at about 5 o'clock. Mr. Brown, who was acting as cook at Force's Hotel, on North avenue, was about starting from his home to attend to his daily duties, when he was suddenly taken ill. A physician was sent for, but before his arrival, some hours afterward, the sufferer was dead. Mr. Brown for a number of months kept a restaurant under the postoffice.

Not Yet Used to Country Conveniences.

The family of Oscar Summers who recently moved to Plainfield from Brooklyn, were almost burned out of their apartments in the upper story of a house at the corner of Central avenue and Third street, and their little girl had a narrow escape from being scalded to death, at noon Wednesday.

An oil stove was in use in the kitchen, and it was a new experience for the city folks. They had it stuck up on a chair with a big wash boiler full of clothes on one end and a pan full of dishes on the other. Mr. Summers' little daughter, about nine years of age, lifted the pan of dishes off. Then the weight of the wash boiler upset the stove and spilled burning oil all over.

Eden Boice, who lives below, heard the noise and guessed the cause. He rushed upstairs and found the surface of the room afire. The spreading flames of the oil could never have been extinguished with water, but Mr. Boice dumped the wet clothes in the boiler onto the fire and smothered it. Then he threw the pan of dishes into the incipient conflagration. Charles Glasmiller, of Hook & Ladder Co., No. 1, also lent his assistance. The house is owned by Mrs. Sithes of Washington territory. The damage was about $25.

Don't give up, there is a cure for catarrh and cold in the head. Thousands testify that Ely's Cream Balm has entirely cured them. It is a safe and pleasant remedy. It is applied into the nostrils. It is not a liquid or snuff. It cures by cleansing and healing. Price 50c.

Sought for the last hundred years: a remedy for catarrh, hay fever and cold in the head, found at last in Ely's Cream Balm. Safe and pleasant to use and easily applied into the nostrils. It gives relief at once and a thorough treatment positively cures. Price 50 cents.

GORDON'S ACCUSER'S CAREER CHECKED.

Grocer Arthur Thompson Accused of Setting Fire to His Store.

At 3:15 Thursday morning the Newark Fire Department was called out by an alarm from Box No. 31, and an unusually prompt response was made Chief Kierstead and engine companies No. 3 and No. 10. A stream of water was quickly got upon the fire, which was in the grocery store of Arthur Thompson, colored, at No. 155 Thomas street. The flames were extinguished before any material damage had been done, and then Chief Kierstead found that the faucet of a barrel of kerosene had been turned so that the oil was running over the floor, and that the bung of a barrel of coal oil had been removed and the barrel turned in such a way that its contents were also spilled over the floor.

The Chief immediately caused the arrest of Thompson, as it was apparent that he had attempted to burn up his stock to obtain an insurance of $600. Indeed, the Chief found, upon investigation, that he did not have $50 worth of goods in his store. He was taken to Police Headquarters and locked up, and later on Chief Kurstead made a formal complaint against him, and he was committed for trial. He is the same man who some days ago was married to Martha Rich, of Westfield, a young colored woman now awaiting trial for attempted infanticide, and on Tuesday morning last as published in THE PRESS, he reported to Sergeant Detective Stainsby that a colored man named Gordon, living in this city, had visited him the afternoon previous and before leaving had stolen $150 from a trunk in his sleeping room in rear of his store. Detective Jaegers was detailed to look after the matter, and on visiting Plainfield he soon learned that Gordon was not away on Monday last or any other recent day. Then Sergeant Detective Stainsby was convinced that Thompson had told him a falsehood, and when the man came to him on Tuesday night and said that the amount stolen from him was $300, instead of $150, he began questioning him closely and received from him so many contradictory statements that he was satisfied the man had some motive in trying to mislead the people and his creditors.

The police are now satisfied that he is a bad man, and that if he had succeeded in burning his place and obtaining the insurance upon his stock, he would have left the city for good, and his bride and twins to shift for themselves. The damage to the building is estimated at $150, and the owner, who lives over Thompson's store, was not insured.

NOT POLITICS, BUT PLAINFIELD.

A Critic's Opinion of the "Big 6," the "Little 4" and the "Indifferent 1."

TO THE EDITOR OF THE PRESS:—If the voters of Plainfield, when next they vote for their representatives in the city council will attend to the interests of the city, we shall have a very "Big 11," instead of only a "Big 6," an Indifferent 1, and a positively Small 4.

The policy of the Big 6, "Not politics, but the interests of Plainfield and its suburbs," should be the motto of every man who casts a ballot. We owe much to the 6 gentlemen, who give their time, in looking after our interests. I need hardly enumerate what they have done, but one thing is certain, they have the right man, in the right place, in our Street Commissioner E. A. Meeker, who in my judgment is certainly the best, and only competent one Plainfield has ever had. Voters remember "Not Politics, but Plainfield."

CRITIC.

A Big Deal in Real Estate.

The papers were passed Thursday closing the deal by which Mr. Keyser, of Utah, becomes possessed of the tract of land of 27 acres on Broadway, Putnam avenue and Berckman street. THE PRESS told all about it weeks ago, before anyone else knew of it. The agent's commission on the sale is said to be $331.

Death of Aaron B. Allen.

Aaron B. Allen, an old resident and highly respected citizen of North Plainfield, died at his home on Race street, Friday afternoon. Mr. Allen was a native of Scotch Plains, and was seventy-seven years of age. He left two daughters, both married. One lives at Ithaca, N. Y., and the other is Mrs. Warren C. Squires of Harmony street, North Plainfield. He leaves also three sons. Amos, the eldest, resides at Westfield, Edward in North Plainfield, and Dervinia at Springfield.

HOW CAN THE LONG
BE THE SHORT ?

A line may be a very long one and yet be the shortest between given points. For instance, the St. Paul, Minneapolis & Manitoba Railway has over 3,000 miles of road; magnificently equipped and managed, it is one of the greatest railway systems of this country; for the same reasons it is the traveler's favorite to all points in Minnesota, North and South Dakota and Montana. It is the only line to Great Falls, the future manufacturing center of the Northwest; to the fertile free lands of the Milk River Valley; and offers a choice of three routes to the Coast. Still it is the shortest line between St. Paul, Minneapolis, Fargo, Winnipeg, Crookston, Moorhead, Casselton, Glyndon, Grafton, Fergus Falls, Wahpeton, Devils Lake, and Butte City. It is the best route to Alaska, China and Japan; and the journey to the Pacific coast, Vancouver, Tacoma, Seattle, Portland and San Francisco will be remembered as the delight of a life-time once made through the wonderful scenery of the Manitoba-Pacific Route. To fish and hunt; to view the magnificence of nature; to revive the spirit; restore the body; to realize the dream of the home-seeker, the gold-seeker, the toiler, or the capitalist, visit the country reached by the St. Paul, Minneapolis, & Manitoba Railway. Write to F. I. WHITNEY, G. P. & T. A., St. Paul, Minn., for maps, books and guides. UNCLE FRANZ.

[illegible] Story of the Great Ohio Floods.

"BUT you can help us so much, and we need just such help as yours!"

Annette St. Clare, vivacious, public, profuse in her expressions of sympathy or dislike, was the ideal French maiden transplanted in American soil, while Rosa [illegible] was an equally clear type of the Teutonic face. The large-framed, slow of speech, hesitating in manners, to a casual observer there was nothing prepossessing about the girl, and yet, within the two short weeks of their acquaintance, a firm friendship had grown up between these two, cemented by suffering and [illegible] on the one side, and sympathy and [illegible] on the other.

It was the season of the Ohio floods, and the St. Clares, from their abundance, had been lavish in expenditure and [illegible] in offers of relief to the sufferers who stood in need. Rosa's sad face and Annette's bright one had proved mutually attractive, and when the [illegible] learned that the other was an orphan and homeless, made so by the raging waters, her impulsive heart opened to the friendless girl, and she insisted upon taking her home. Rosa was proud, and the thought of dependence on strangers was very trying.

"But you can help us so much," said Annette, "and we need just such help as yours. What are your plans for the future?"

Alas! Rosa had no plans. A few days before, happy with her father and mother in the little home on the river's bank, she had tended her chickens, knit her father's socks, listened to her mother's recital of scenes in far-away Germany, and built a glorious air-castle, in which she sailed and sailed away across the ocean to visit the fatherland. Then came the storm. Four days and nights it rained incessantly. Each day the river rose higher and higher, and each day the prospect of fair weather seemed less promising. The chicken-coops floated down on the tide, trees and floating timbers obstructed navigation and made communication with neighbors hazardous, and still it rained, and rained, and rained.

Rosa's father became very impatient. He would needs go out in his boat, and learn the worst. Perhaps his neighbors needed assistance, perhaps—but who can account for a foolish man's whims? Rosa only knew that her father went out to his death; that there, within sight of the window where she had spent so many happy hours, her father went down, struck by a heavy timber, and his boat, keel upwards, floated on the stream.

The poor wife, rushing madly to his rescue, found the water rising rapidly around the house, and half frantic at the thought of her husband's death, with still sufficient forethought for her own and her daughter's safety, she made her way to the wood-house, and for an hour or two, with almost superhuman strength, carried in article after article that she felt they would need in case the water rose high as to cut them off from all communication with land. Her daughter, [illegible] to implicit obedience, and excited to unusual strength by the events of the morning, took without complaint what her mother brought, and placed it beyond the reach of the [illegible] waters. It was only when the prostrate form of the [illegible] woman lay across the threshold, half buried in water, that [illegible] realized the danger to which the mother had exposed herself.

[illegible] THE SICK WOMAN.

By a mighty force of will, she [illegible] and with her daughter's help, [illegible] the narrow stair-case and fell [illegible] on the bed.

The [illegible] of the storm closed around them. The sick woman rallied, but [illegible] fever ensued, and all night long [illegible] with pain and maddened by [illegible], she called in piteous tones to her dead husband. Then, drawing Rosa to her side, she bade her listen, while she gave her instructions for their safety, and counsels for the future, should they be separated.

"Take that little purse," she said; "your Uncle Franz gave it to me on Christmas day, when I was about as old as you. For this money that I have in my [illegible] was the purse, and [illegible] it [illegible] your dress. You may see the time when you will sorely need it."

All night long Rosa administered to her mother's needs, and toward morning the weary woman slept. Rosa, relieved of her [illegible] and [illegible] by fatigue, [illegible] and dreamed that she was [illegible] the ocean on her way to Uncle Franz. She felt the [illegible] of the waves [illegible] the pitch and tumble of the vessel as it rose and fell. She awoke, the house was moving, she was [illegible] it. She stepped out the stairs, and found the water nearly to the top. The [illegible] had stopped, the outer darkness was impenetrable, but [illegible] still [illegible], and for what seemed years [illegible]. She was roused finally by the sound of voices, and lifting her head, which she had buried in her pillow, she saw the morning light streaming in, and realized that a boat was coming to her assistance. Strong arms lifted the sick woman, and Rosa was soon beside her, adrift on a wild waste of waters. But other help was close at hand. A Government boat [illegible] the [illegible] and kind hands ministered to their wants. In a few hours the spires of Cincinnati loomed in sight, and once more Rosa walked on the solid earth.

[illegible] and warehouses had been hastily converted into hospitals, and in one of these the poor girl saw her mother pass out of this world, leaving her friendless and homeless in the great city. Taught to be helpful, and unwilling to become a burden, she offered her aid as a nurse and servant, and it was here that Annette St. Clare had found her, and had begged her to go home with her. Rosa had been captivated by Annette's graceful manners and helpful spirit, as she had worked with and for her about the building, and the appeal was more than her natural pride could resist, though she meant to keep her [illegible], she said to herself, and do a servant's work.

But Annette thought otherwise. The St. Clares opened their hospitable doors to her as an equal, and Rosa became a member of the family.

ROSA LAID HER PURSE IN THE BASKET.

At first she resisted all invitations to mingle with them in their social pleasures, but there came a time when she found it impossible to do so. Abbey's opera troupe was in the city, and it was announced that they would sing on Sunday afternoon for the benefit of the flood sufferers.

"You must surely go, Rosa; it is for charity, you know, and everybody will be there," Annette had said, and a strange longing had come into Rosa's soul. She wanted to see a crowd of people, she half hoped to see a familiar face and hear from what was once her home.

Never in all her young life had Rosa imagined such beauty, such magnificence, such wonders as she saw around her that day. It was like a dream, and the music was but a small part of the enchantment. In fact, it is doubtful if she gave full attention to the stage until her wandering thoughts were recalled by the sweet and simple ballad, such as only Nilsson could sing: "Please give me a penny, sir." A hush had fallen on the multitude, followed, as the singer stepped down from the platform amongst the audience to ask for a proof of their appreciation, by such an outpouring of generosity as was never seen in the rich city before. Rosa laid her own little purse and its contents in the rapidly filling basket as a hand just behind her held out a pile of shining gold. Forgetful of decorum, in her astonishment at the sight of so much money, she turned around and looked fairly in the face of a blue-eyed, bearded, elderly gentleman, who met her gaze with one equally astonished.

"Child! who are you, if not Madaline Schwartz's daughter? Who gave you that purse?"

"Oh, sir, what have I done?" she said. "That is all I had in the wide world; and my mother told me to hoard it for a time of need."

"Your mother? Where is she? I have sought her for the past week in vain. Did she ever speak of her brother Franz?"

"Indeed, indeed she did," said Rosa, "and have you come for me at last?"

This little by-play passed unnoticed by those around, for as the money fell in Nilsson's basket, the wildest enthusiasm prevailed, and the applause was deafening. Men stood on the chairs, and waved their hands, forgetting every thing in their excitement but the present. And, in the midst of it all, as I have said, Rosa found a friend, with both the desire and the ability to make her life pleasant and profitable.

"And did Uncle Franz take Rosa to Germany?" you ask, "and give her the advantages of a foreign education?" No, indeed. Uncle Franz's gold bore the stamp of the American eagle. He had suffered from the oppression of the Old World, and had come to America for freedom. He placed his niece where she could have a thorough American training in one of our best schools, and spared neither money nor sympathy.

The trip to Germany came later, however. In fact, it was on their return voyage that I made the acquaintance of Rosa and Annette and Uncle Franz. The girls had focused their eyes on the beauties of Europe, studied the evils with trained senses, and were coming home to work, as so many women are doing to-day, for the uplifting and purifying of society. God bless and prosper them in their undertaking.—Josephine P. Holland, in Woman's Journal.

THE GIRL WHO BETS.

Her Methods, Her Superstitions and Her Luck at the Race-Track.

Not Generally as Successful in Winning Money as in Winning Men—A Girl Who Wanted Her Money Returned—A Very Big Winner.

[Copyright, 1890.]
[Special Correspondence.]

"WON'T you please give me my money back again?"

"My dear madam, I really can not. You stood just as much chance of winning that money as I did, and if you had won I should have had to pay you seventy dollars."

These remarks attracted considerable attention in the betting ring at the Sheepshead Bay racecourse recently. A young woman of medium height, pretty and well dressed, was in lots of trouble. She had evidently, from appearances, paid her first visit to the racecourse. Perhaps it was her second. At any rate she had been induced to bet and had lost. Now, with tears in her eyes, she was pleading with the bookmaker, with whom she had made the bet, to return her that money, but he of course declined to do so. She told him that the money was not her own and that she had been induced to put it on Bella B. at six to one because Bella B. was sure to win. She pleaded very hard with the bookmaker, and he finally gave her the ten dollars back again, at the same time giving her some wholesome advice about never coming to the race track again, or if she did never to risk her money because she was sure to lose.

"These women are poor losers," said the bookmaker afterwards. "They can not bear to see their wealth with the carelessness of a man, and when they lose it grieves them. Some, however, bet very well and when they lose never say a word, and a good many of them win quite a considerable sum of money. How they do it is more than I can tell. I suppose it is just sheer luck."

At least fifty per cent. of the patrons of the race track are women. A good many of these are prominent leaders of society. They go down there just to see the races and perhaps to make quiet bets among themselves, or get their escorts to put a little money on their favorite horses just for fun. Others make a habit of frequenting the race tracks and are as well known there as the owners of prominent stables, jockeys or track officials. They are habitual bettors and many of them have won large sums of money. Some of them lose, though, regularly, and where they get the money to lose is a puzzle that no one attempts to solve. These regular bettors are easily picked out in the grand stand. They are usually coarse looking women, dressed in very gaudy costumes and as a rule have numbers of diamonds.

GETTING A TIP.

They talk horse from the time they get on the boat or train to go to the races until they get home again. Some of them will put their money up and win or lose as calmly as most veteran turfmen. Others are in a state of nervous excitement even if they only have a few dollars at stake until the race is decided in their favor or against them, as the case may be.

The horses were about to start in a race at Brighton Beach not long ago. The field was a good one and the betting had been very lively. The members of the fair sex had put their money on their various choices. A few of them were still arguing about the merits of the various horses that were in the park. One pretty girl—she would not have been more than twenty years of age—was anxiously eyeing each horse. She was a fair, pretty girl, dressed with exquisite taste, and evidently above the women who were near her. In her hand she held the well-known piece of pasteboard. Her hand clutched it nervously and she looked as though the winning or the losing of the bet meant a great deal to her. I watched her in order to see if she won. Once the horses broke away and two were left at the post. She gave a quick nervous start and seemed much relieved when the starter still held his flag up. Again they made a break, and this time they were sent off. The girl gave a quick start. Her face flushed nervously. She jumped up and looked at the flying steeds and then sat down again. Then she bowed her head, closed her eyes, and I could see her lips moving.

She must have been praying—praying that the horse she had backed might win. The horses thundered past the winning post and the winner's name was hoisted. The girl had lost. She looked somewhat relieved, probably because the nervous strain was over, but she was worried. She had probably lost all she had. Perhaps she had used money to bet with that was not her own. Perhaps she had committed some crime to obtain the money to bet with and had then lost her money and ruined her reputation. In a frightened way she tore her ticket up, threw away her programme and then left the grand stand and track and although I have looked for her at all the other meetings I have not seen her. She probably had a lesson that she will never forget.

I noticed one woman who was evidently very methodical in her system of betting. She always sat on the grand stand near the reporters. She did not associate much with the other women or patrons of the track, and where she got her information from no one seemed to know. She always bet with remarkably good judgment and made lots of money. She was short, stout and a brunette; dressed quietly, and always carried a little hand-bag with her. She studied her programme very carefully, and when the jockeys' names were hoisted she copied them down in her programme. Then she would select her horse and, after making a careful choice, would give the money she wished to bet to one of the messenger boys. She bet large sums of money, too. Fifty, seventy-five and a hundred dollars very often on a race. No one could tell by watching her that she had risked any money on the race. She watched the horses as they raced around and after the race, if she had won, she quietly gave her ticket to the boy to be cashed for her. If she lost, she put the worthless ticket away in her bag.

After the races she invariably went down to Manhattan Beach and had dinner. One night I saw her at the hotel there. She had eaten an elaborate dinner, consisting of some of the choicest dishes on the bill of fare and had a bottle of wine. While she was drinking her coffee, she opened the little bag she carried and began to count out her money. The bag was crowded full of bills, and she sorted them out carefully, rolled them up into bundles and put them away again. Then she unbuttoned her dress and took out another roll of bills which were of larger sums—fifty and a hundred dollars each. When she had satisfied herself of the amount she had won she paid her check for the dinner, and, on leaving, tipped the waiter with a five-dollar bill. The waiter had been very attentive to her during her dinner, and as she was leaving he asked her if she had much luck that day. She smiled and said she had done very well. Whether this was an exceptional day or only an average day I do not know.

THE FINISH.

The ladies are very superstitious and very unimportant things frequently decide them in the choice of a horse in a race.

"I dreamed last night that Eon won, and I invariably back the horse I dream of," said one girl recently.

"How do your dreams turn out?" inquired another.

"I win five times out of six on them," was the reply, and the party then decided to back Eon.

They will even back a horse because they like the looks or color of it or because they happen to have heard something about the jockey. Very often the rider's colors have a great deal to do with their choice, particularly if they themselves happen to be wearing any thing of a similar color. Upon whether an owner's colors are beautiful or not depends a great deal in the female following that his stable has. If he has adopted a combination that makes the women exclaim: "Oh, what pretty colors!" you will be sure that his horse will be backed by some of the fair ones even if it be notorious that they can't run a little bit.

Then there are those young women who want long odds. They would not back a favorite under any circumstances. When they are urged to do so, this is the way they reply:

"Oh, pshaw, what is the good? Supposing he does win, you won't get any thing." And then they put their money on a 100 to 1 chance, devote the time before the race to planning how they are going to spend the money, and finally declare that the race was crooked when their horse comes in last. A cross-eyed woman gives those patrons of the racecourse the shakes, and they will plunge into the mud to avoid passing her. If they can do it, they take their hats off, turn them around three times and put them on again. This is supposed to break the hoodoo.

AFTER A LUCKY DAY AT MANHATTAN.

There is not one of them who would risk offending the goddess of fortune by changing a stocking after it is put on wrong side out. That would be fatal. There are several who carry a rabbit's foot about with them and treasure it above their diamonds. They purchase their mascots from the colored people. They have their hoodoos and their Jonahs.

One of the funny sights on the grand stand which are to be seen when the horses are coming down the straight, is a bevy of excited girls who are novices at the race track. They will actually hold out their hands in front of them and chirrup to an imaginary horse or slap themselves as though they were whipping one.

—A farmer, not less than sixty-five, entered the office of one of our cotton mills the other day and asked the genial agent for a job at book-keeping, says the Lewiston Journal. He said he'd farmed it from a boy up and that he had decided to try something easier the rest of his days. He said, too, that he had not been educated in keeping books, but he was confident he could do it. The agent who tells of the incident says he heard the old gentleman's story and kindly told him that he saw no vacancy then, but that he would remember him.

THE HOUSEHOLD.

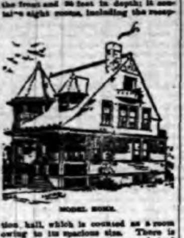
A MODEL HOME.

It Is Artistic and Handsome and Can Be Built at the Moderate Cost of $3,500.

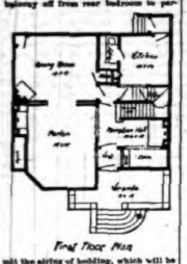
A beautiful model modern home which can be built for about $3,000 on cedar posts or about $3,500 on stone foundation is herewith presented.

This house is arranged to suit the most artistic taste, and every foot is used to the best advantage.

The size of the house is 33 feet across the front and 38 feet in depth; it contains eight rooms, including the reception hall, which is counted as a room owing to its spacious size. There is room in the attic for two good-sized rooms if the owner desires to finish them at any future time. All the rooms are of an honest size, as shown on plan. The kitchen is arranged so as to be closed off from the other part of the house by two doors, which do not admit of the disagreeable odor and noise, making balance of house very unpleasant. A clothes chute runs from bath-room and from kitchen to basement. The house will be piped for a furnace. The ceiling of first floor will be 10 feet and of the second 9 feet 6 inches clear. There will be two closets in dining-room, the smaller one for silverware and the larger one for china. There will be a balcony off from rear bedroom to permit the airing of bedding, which will be found a very good feature and will be appreciated by all good house-keepers. There will also be a balcony off parlor and a balcony off front chamber, which will have a door from chamber to balcony that will give good ventilation in very hot weather. The basement to be arranged for a laundry and cellar, which is reached by stairs from kitchen.

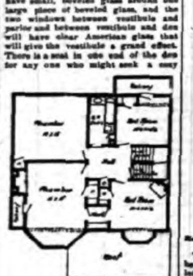


MODEL HOME.



First Floor Plan

The vestibule, reception hall, parlor and dining-room are to be finished in natural oak, filled and varnished, the balance of the house to be painted in parti colors. There is to be one high window in parlor with stained glass, and one high window in dining-room to have stained glass, both to have artistic designs costing two dollars per square foot. The vestibule doors will have small, beveled glass around one large piece of beveled glass, and the two windows between vestibule and parlor and between vestibule and den will have clear American glass that will give the vestibule a grand effect. There is a seat in one end of the den for any one who might seek a cozy nook, with a beautiful view of the fire-place and windows to the right and front. The fire-place in parlor is to be of a large size, with seats at ends. The fire-place in chambers will be of a small size, and all the fire-places will have tile hearths. The vestibule floor will be of blue tile, and the kitchen and the pantry floors will be maple, two and one-half-inch face stuff. There will be a sink in kitchen with two maple drip-boards, and the sink to be lined with white porcelain.



Second Floor Plan

CARE OF CHILDREN.

Some Things That All Mothers Should Know.

That over-feeding is the chief cause of cholera infantum and other forms of bowel complaint in young children.

That in summer it is often water, not milk, for which the child is crying, and that the stomach may already be dangerously burdened.

That while the natural appetite of the young is a pretty safe guide, so long as the diet is simple, rich pies and cakes and other highly-seasoned food tend to the habit of over-eating, and lay the foundation for future dyspepsia.

That the chief damage by smoking—and cigarettes are at least as bad as cigars—is done within the growing age, while the child is still under the influence of the mother, and that the harm is most serious upon that center of life, the heart.

That the chest is packed full with the lungs and heart, and room is gained for the inflation of the lungs only by a wonderful mechanism which lifts the ribs as the breath is inhaled, and that it greatly imperils health and life to bind down the chest, especially in growing girls, whether with corsets or tight dresses.

That the abdominal cavity is similarly packed with its organs; that the liver alone extends two-thirds across it, and that tight-lacing deeply furrows the liver, sometimes cutting it in two, a thin membrane alone connecting the parts; that the full stomach is thus often pushed up against a weakened heart, and the pelvic organs are so crowded as to produce serious and permanent ill effects.

That the lack of vitality in many children, by which they are rendered peculiarly susceptible to infectious diseases, is due to a deficiency of pure air in their sleeping-rooms.

That a child's brain is not in a condition for study before its seventh year, and that when a child is precocious there is special reason for holding it back, if it is to be saved from brain disease, future dullness, or possible imbecility.

That no growing child should fail to have at least nine or ten hours' sleep in a well ventilated room, and that no sleep is perfect with a light in the room.

That children under seventeen should not be allowed the excitements of evening parties.

That children, from the earliest possible age, should be trained to habits of self-control in all directions.

That every mother ought to make it a prime object to secure and maintain the fullest confidence of her children, and her normal influence over them.—Youth's Companion.

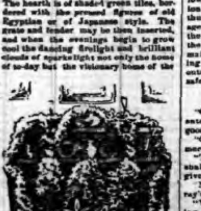
FIRE-PLACE IN SUMMER.

How It May Be Adorned During the Summer Months.

The grate in the modern house may be made to fill economically the void left by the disappearance of the old-fashioned fire-place. Have a hammered brass facing, two inches in width, placed about the chimney opening before the insertion of the grate. If it is not easily afforded this bit of extravagance may be omitted and tiles inserted, or a plain brick facing, enameled a brilliant carmine, may be used. Between this border and the mantel, with its series of shelves (a pretty piece of furniture in itself), is a space of five inches, painted in clouded green, with touches of red. The hearth is of shaded green tiles, bordered with the pressed figures of old Egyptian or of Japanese style. The grate and fender may be then inserted, and when the evenings begin to grow cool the dancing firelight and brilliant clouds of sparkelight not only the home of to-day but the visionary home of the "Long Ago." Coal in grates is much more economical than wood in the old-fashioned fire-place, is much more cleanly, requires much less labor in replenishing and consumes much less fuel.



SUNK IN ADORNMENT OF FIREPLACE.

When "the perfect days of June" have come, then the grate and mantel may be made nooks of beauty and of art by the deft dressing of apt fingers in the use of floral treasures. Gather the generous bloom of the buff and blue iris, and the glossy leaves of the Japan quince, Japonica, or lilac shrub, and fill a stone vase or pitcher with a generous, wide-spreading bouquet. Remove the grate and fill the fire-place with growing ferns and other forest wildings in boxes or pots of rich wood's mold. Place picturesque vases at each side of the mantel support, and fill them with long trailing vines cut from the sweet-scented honeysuckles, wild clematis, or other easily-procurable specimens, and train the vines up and around the shelves above. A large bunch of pale-blue iris and delicately trailing smilax, with vases of the buff iris on either side, may stand on the shelves above and mingle with the glossy leaves of the Japonica beneath.

This is a combination for the earlier summer days, but as summer deepens, the changes are rung with peonies and peach-bloom, apple blossom or roses, and dog-wood bloom, syringas, locust and bridal wreath, coral-honeysuckles, calalous, and lilies, each in its season, golden-rod and autumn leaves, brakes and ferns later on, and we come to regard our fire-place and mantel in the light of an artistic exponent of personal ability of the artist in creating a thing of beauty.—American Agriculturist.

A ROOM FOR SICKNESS.

Not Every One Can Afford to Have a Room Set Apart for Sickness, But Those Who Can Should Do So.

There are few things, says Good Housekeeping, more conducive to the comfort of a family than a room suitably arranged for sickness. Without it, there is much unnecessary inconvenience, not only to the one who is ill, but to every member of the family. Especially is such a room desirable in contagious diseases. Many have lost loved ones just because the plan and furnishing were such that it was impossible to separate the sick from the well.

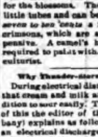
And yet it would seem from the general management at such times, that many parents think that if one child be taken with scarlet fever, for instance, every child in the family must of necessity have it. There is no greater mistake. Scarlet fever is seldom, if ever communicated before the eruption is developed. This may be doubted by many; but when we know that children frequently escape when exposed in the fever stage, it is certainly the part of wisdom to take advantage of this knowledge. Many parents become frightened if there happens to be a case of scarlet fever in the school. The truth is, there is comparatively little danger of taking this disease in the beginning. The danger arises from carelessness in allowing the child to return to school and wear the clothing that has been worn during convalescence, or left where the emanations from the eruption could lodge in the texture.

This suggests the exercise of the greatest possible care. A case of scarlet fever in a room where there are curtains, carpet, papered walls, with other ordinary furnishings, will make it unsafe for occupancy indefinitely, unless the germs of the disease be destroyed; and in a room of this kind, one never feels sure that the fumigation has been sufficiently thorough. On the other hand, with a room properly located and arranged, no danger in the future need be apprehended. Under these circumstances, the most dreaded of all of the diseases of children would, in the majority of cases, be limited to one case in the family, and the danger to that one greatly lessened.

The necessity for such a room in every home is almost imperative. We would be surprised if we could estimate how often and how much of the time such a room would be used. When all the members of the household are well, such a room would be quiet and restful, where any one might go for a nap, from father and mother down to baby. This last is of no small consideration when we take into account the suppression necessary to be exercised when some one either accidentally or intentionally falls asleep on the sitting-room couch. The convenience of even a small house would be greatly increased, if one room in it were planned with a view to comfort in this direction.

A Decorated Jar.

A dainty and pretty ornament may be made from an ordinary glass fruit jar by following the directions given below: First, select your jar and wash it thoroughly, so that it is entirely free from dust. Then mark a line midway between top and bottom. With oil colors paint all below the line a soft delicate blue. (Robin's egg blue would be pretty.) With gold, paint the upper part of jar, the top included. Then from the upper left-hand side make a trailing design of pink and white blossoms, running down over the gold and on into the blue space. Tie a blue ribbon around the neck, making a dainty bow just above where the stems of the vine begin. The branches are of brown; the blossoms pink and white; no leaves are necessary. Vandyke brown and burnt sienna are used to paint the twigs, while crimson lake and white are needed for the blossoms. These colors come in little tubes and can be bought for from seven to ten cents a tube, except the crimsons, which are a little more expensive. A camel's hair brush will be required to paint with.—American Agriculturist.



HANDSOME JAR.

Why Thunder-storms Affect Milk.

During electrical disturbances it seems that cream and milk are put into a condition to sour easily. The probable cause of this the editor of the Cultivator (Albany) explains as follows: The effect of an electrical discharge is to decompose a portion of the atmosphere, by which ozone is produced. This substance has peculiar properties from its intense activity as an oxyde of oxygen, and its action believed to be, and may be, the cause of the souring of milk, beer and fresh wine during what are known as thunder-storms. The ozone is diffused through the air, and is believed to be the cause of the strong acid odor which prevails after the storm is passed. No doubt if the milk is submerged in water, and access of air is prevented, no result of the kind need be apprehended; and as the more milk is exposed to the air the more it will be affected by the ozone, the milk in open shallow pans will be acidified more readily than that in deep pails, although these may be open. In our long experience, however, the writer adds, we have never had any milk affected in this way, either in shallow pans or deep pails, and are of opinion that the heat of the air preceding thunder-storms is more directly the agent in the souring of the milk than the ozone that may exist in the air after the storm is passed. Carefulness to maintain a proper temperature, by closing dairy houses and cellars against the outer atmosphere, will be a means of safety.

The Difference Pointed Out.

"Good sir," said the humorist as he entered the clothing store, "you sell goods for cash only, do you not?"

"One price, C. O. D.," answered the merchant, who was a man of few words.

"Then," replied the humorist, "I shall go over to Hooray's, for he will give me time."

"Nay," replied the merchant; "Hooray's is a cash establishment, also."

"Yes," answered the humorist, smiling, for all had gone well, and now was the time for his joke; "I know it is; but he gives away a stem-winding watch with every suit. Do you not see that I can get time there?"

"You err," said the merchant; "you mistake the watch. Tick you get, but derned little time;" and the humorist departed ill-pleased, while the merchant gazed into space as before.—Puck.

A Bright Policeman.

Court—What is the charge against the prisoner?

Policeman—Carrying concealed weapons.

Court—What have you to say to that, prisoner?

Prisoner—Simply that I told him that my pockets had been rifled, and the fool arrested me.—Arcola Record.

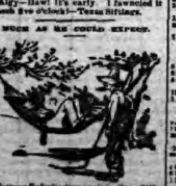
Algy (unlocking his door as the milkman comes along)—Shay, tell me, John, wha' time ish it, thish mornin'?

Milkman (of a humorous turn)—4:00.

Algy—Haw! It's early. I fawncied it wash five o'clock!—Texas Siftings.

MUCH AS HE COULD EXPECT.



Farmer Rake (indignantly)—Say, Bill, can't you do any thin' all day but swing in that hammock?

Young Rake (home from college)—Oh, dear, yes! I can get in it, and I can get out of it!—Puck.

SACRAMENTAL WINE.

A Drink That Proved Too Much for a Burglar's Hard Head.

The strength of the liquid which some churches are using as "the fruit of the vine" for the most touching memorial of the Christian faith appears from the following account given in the World of an occurrence in the old St. Paul's Church in New York City:

Near the back door two big bundles were found, containing over $1,000 worth of silk and satin altar draperies and vestments, and upon peering in the officers were surprised to see a man about sixty years old comfortably sleeping on a sofa. The door was opened. The policemen filed in, but the man on the sofa hardly moved as the officers surrounded him. It was then discovered that the man was "gloriously drunk," and shortly afterwards his condition was explained by the discovery of an empty jar which had contained a large quantity of sacramental wine. The contents of this jar probably saved the church from a heavy loss, for had the thief not been overcome by his deep draughts of the rare wine he would undoubtedly have got safely away with the booty.

As it was, he was removed to the station-house screaming and fighting like a madman. He was too drunk to tell his name and at once fell into a heavy sleep in his cell. Around the ante-room, where all the vestments are stored, valuable draperies, loose and in bundles, were strewn about in the utmost confusion.

We confess to a very strong objection to offering to delicate women and children, to growing boys, and to men struggling up from the pit of intemperance, a drink which is too much for the hard head of a burglar.—Better Day.

WHEN the late Horace Greeley, who was a staunch adherent to Temperance principles, was once pressed by an Irish waiter to take some brandy and water, he met the opportunity by saying: "Well, Pat, I'll take half that to oblige you. Give me the water and take the brandy somewhere else."—Sunlight.

THE keeper of the morgue in New York City states that four-fifths of the five thousand bodies that reach the city dead-house every year are sent there by drunkenness.—Journal and Messenger.

A RURAL ROMANCE.

(SOMEWHAT IN THE LINE OF LORD TENNYSON'S PASTORAL POEMS, ONLY DIFFERENT.)

Two honest husbandmen dwelt side by side
In farms adjoining. Grubbs and Stubbs their names,
Rough, homely names to strangers, but all they had,
And oft these names had served them in good stead
When they had need of names to sign to notes.
Grubbs had a son Ezekiel tall and straight
As any rustic who wore pants in boots,
And rose at four to milk his seven kine
And seek for eggs in the hennery.
Stubbs had no sons; a daughter only came
To bless her father's home, to shed sunlight
About its rooms and also to do odd chores
'Twixt meal times. She was fair to look upon
As snowdrops blossoming in early spring.
Her name was Mary Ann, a gentle name,
And gently borne by her. Ezekiel saw
And loved her, which to see and love were one.
The farms adjoined and were but kept apart
By one plain picket fence of easy compass,
Through which the faithful dog of Farmer Stubbs
Did oft meander in the eventide
To chase the dogs of worthy Farmer Grubbs.
Thus was a feud begun between the twain;
But Mary Ann and young Ezekiel too
Were not a part of the parental strife.
Equal their fathers' lots; content were they
To know that when some day the old men hopped
The golden twig, the farms should be united,
A goodly estate for a goodly pair.

But one day came a shadow o'er their paths.
A schemer from the town intruded on
The peaceful confines of the Grubbs estate,
Looked here, dug there and sniffed and smelled about,
Saying wiseacrely, with shake of head;
"There's oil upon this land, of that I'm sure.
Oil that is pent up in a mighty store.
Dig, farmer, and I'll warrant thee thou'lt find Riches, the like which thou wot'st not of."
So he departed. Then good Farmer Grubbs
Did hold his head aloft and elevate
His nose when neighbors passed, as who should say:
"I shall be rich. There's oil on this, my land,
And wealth immense shall speedily be mine."
So when Ezekiel came and softly said:
"Father, I fain would wed with Mary Ann,"
He waxed full wroth, exclaiming in his wrath:
"How now? thou who, when we are boring for oil,
Shalt be a man of riches; wilt thou wed
This beggar's brat, this pauper farmer's child?
Go to! It shall not be."
And so the son
Went sorrowingly to tell his Mary Ann
And break the match, explaining as he might
That he so rich must look above poor her.

Then there was digging on the Grubbs estate,
Digging in day-time, boring in the night
For oil, rich oil, that was to make them rich.
For days and weeks and months they dug and bored.
What came of't? Nothing, nothing, ever nothing.
Then came the city schemer, and he looked
About the place exclaiming: "Marvelous!
Behold the vein of oil that once lay here
Has vanished and has made its oily way
Beneath yon fence to Farmer Stubbs' estate.
His is the oil well; yours the memory of't."
So saying he vanished, and Ezekiel wept.

That night he hied him unto Mary Ann,
And told her that his love had never ceased,
Besought her take him back and let be all,
No sordid, designing obstacle
Disturb the dream, the golden dream of love.
She said him nay and mocked him.
So he went
Kicking himself adown the dusty lane.
Then Farmer Stubbs set cheerily to work,
And in a few weeks' time struck oil right rich.
A fortune rolled in and his wealth became
So vast that all around marveled thereat.
So Stubbs waxed wealthy, and so Mary Ann,
Her father's heiress, grew accustomed to
Ezekiel's loss and married very soon
A foreign nobleman with heavy bills
Which Mary Ann's papa paid willingly.

So read and learn that we can never tell
Who that is down to-day may not be up
To-morrow, and who down that now is up.

AN ACCEPTABLE OFFER.

Story of an Old-Fashioned Donation Party.

"AS THIS all we've got for dinner?" said Leslie Bernard, rather dolefully.

"Isn't it enough?" retorted Clara, her sister.

The dining-room in Glenwood Parsonage was unmistakably shabby. It was bad enough when the friendly gloom of a rainy day concealed its shortcomings in some degree. But on a clear, uncompromising August noon like this, the cruel sunshine revealed each crack in the ceiling, and every worn spot in the carpet like a magnifying-glass.

And really there was some occasion for the doleful look with which Leslie regarded the table. There was the extreme shank bone of a ham boiled into rags, a few slices of cold beef, some baked potatoes, and a custard that certainly had not been rendered indigestible by too much richness of material. There were the remains of yesterday's stew, half a cold apple pie, and a plate of home-made pickles; and around this meal gathered four little Bernards, with ravenous eyes, while Harry, the eldest brother, who had been doing some amateur white-washing, was making a hasty toilet in the sink-room; and the two grown sisters superintended the banquet.

Mr. Bernard was engaged in writing his next Sunday's sermon, and his wife was at a neighbor's house, helping to nurse a cross old woman, who had worn out everybody's patience but her own.

"Enough, I suppose," said Leslie, "but not very appetizing. Now, is it?"

"Poor folks have no business to expect appetizing food," said Clara, shortly. "In fact I don't think they have any business to live at all. Davy, take your fingers out of the sugar-bowl. Ida, sit up straight."

"Why, Clara, what's the matter?" said Leslie, gently, moving the bowl of sugar out of young David's reach, and helping to perpendicularize the small Ida in her chair.

"Oh! I don't know," replied Clara; "I'm cross."

"No need to tell us that," observed Harry, seating himself. "It is one of the very few facts patent to all observers. Where is father?"

"It's that donation party," said Clara, with an impatient, backward toss of her auburn hair.

"Eh!" said Harry.

"I hate donation parties!" cried out Clara, recklessly carving the end of ham into sinuous shavings. "I think they're an insult to people. So, there!"

Harry whistled; Leslie smiled; the children all stared.

"If they want to do papa a favor," went on Clara, breathlessly, loading up the children's plates with all sorts of incongruous materials, "why don't they pay him his salary, instead of letting it run behind? Why don't they repair this dismal hole of a parsonage, and stop the church chimney from smoking, and do what they ought to do? Who wants Mrs. Hampton to bring us a chair tidy, and Squire Ramsey to sort out all his damaged beans for our benefit, and Annie Smith to work horrible pen-wipers for us? We're not objects of charity yet, are we?"

"Hush, Clara," soothed Leslie.

"It's the custom, sis," said Harry. "I can't say that I quite uphold it myself; but hush, here comes father."

Mr. Bernard was a mild old gentleman, with a bald head and spectacles, who sat down to his meal in an absent sort of way, as if his mind were somewhere in Syro-Phenicia. The children might easily have continued their discussion and he would have been none the wiser.

Clara Bernard was twenty years old. She was not a beauty, nor was she remarkably talented; but she had a round, fresh face, with hazel eyes and warm red-brown hair; and there was a deal of common-sense in her make-up.

Leslie was the family beauty—a pink and white Dresden china little creature—and Clara had to fully settled that Leslie was to make a brilliant match, while she, Clara, was to settle down into the monotony of old maidism. But there were some things that she would have liked different, and the coming donation party weighed very heavily upon her soul. It was supposed to be a surprise to the minister and his wife. Clara, Leslie and Harry had, however, been let into the secret as a sort of necessary preliminary.

"I wish," said Leslie thoughtfully, "that Mrs. Hays would think to give us a new sitting-room carpet. Ours is worn through to the very boards of the floor; and she has just recarpeted her own house with real Brussels."

"She will give you a bunch of paper-roses, you will see," scornfully retorted Clara.

"The Hamptons are rich," said Harry. "Little mother would appreciate a sewing-machine from Mrs. Hampton, now wouldn't she?"

Clara shrugged her shoulders.

"I can tell exactly what Mrs. Hampton means to give us," said she. "One of those book-marks that her granddaughter worked, or a splatter-worked tidy. Oh, Harry, if you only knew how I hated all this!"

Toward dusk the presents began to come in. Mrs. White sent a jug of coal-oil, Deacon Jones brought a bag of walnuts ("just as if the woods weren't full of them," said Clara, contemptuously). Minnie Brown brought a chair-tidy, Miss Kiser contributed a staring chromo, the Widow Jackson a bag of rancid hen's feathers, Charlie Young a setting of duck's eggs. It was planned to fill the back kitchen with gifts of this nature, and to display them all at once to the minister and his wife, as a "surprise."

"Sister," piped little Ida, "here's a chair from Mrs. Forrest!"

Leslie groaned.

"Its the old chair that stood all last summer on her porch," said she. "Painted over and glued up. But it won't last a month."

"Mrs. Forrest all over," said Clara. "At this rate we shall be rich."

It was nearly dark when Norman Arlington came in. Clara was emptying a paper of yeast cakes which old Mrs. Harrington had sent. Old Mrs. Harrington had been very sick that summer, and Mr. Bernard and his wife had kept many a faithful vigil at her side. Naturally, she wished to show her appreciation of all this. Yeast cakes were a penny a piece at the village store, and she had sent half a dozen of home manufacture. Norman Arlington was a tall, straight, young man, with black eyes, and a quiet, earnest way with him. He came in with a bag over his shoulder. Clara eyed him antagonistically.

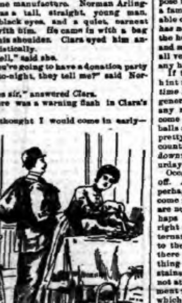
"Well," said she.

"You're going to have a donation party here to-night, they tell me?" said Norman.

"Yes sir," answered Clara.

There was a warning flash in Clara's eyes.

"I thought I would come in early—before the commotion began," said he.



"YOU'RE GOING TO HAVE A DONATION PARTY HERE."

She laughed scornfully.

"The commotion is here now," said Clara.

"Clara!"

"Yes, Mr. Arlington."

"Would you be offended if I were to offer you—"

"Yes, I would," broke out Clara, reddening to the very roots of her hair. "I don't want it! It's an insult! Carry it back home, whatever it is, and please—please don't think that because I have the misfortune to be a minister's daughter, that—"

Norman's black eyes glittered, half with fun, half with vexation.

"Clara," said he, "you are a little vixen! Won't you hear me out?"

"Is it buckwheat flour?" said Clara, indignantly eying the bag. "or is it black-eyed beans? Because we've got a plenty of both, thank you all the same."

"The bag is not intended for you," said Norman. "It is on its way to Dr. Holmes, full of castor beans. I couldn't put my offering into a bag nor pack it in a box. It's too big."

"Nobody wants your offering," retorted Clara.

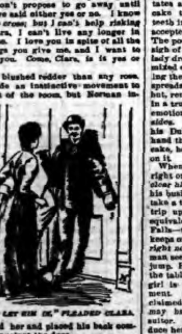
Norman put the bag on a chair and took both Clara's little hands in his.

"Are you quite sure of that?" said he. "Dear little Clara, don't look so cross at me. I came here to offer you myself, and I don't propose to go away until you have said either yes or no. I know you are cross; but I can't help risking it. Clara, I can't live any longer in suspense. I love you in spite of all the scoldings you give me, and I want to marry you. Come, Clara, is it yes or no?"

Clara blushed redder than any rose. She made an instinctive movement to slip out of the room, but Norman intercepted her and placed his back composedly against the door.



"I MUST LET HIM IN," PLEADED CLARA.

"No," said he, "there's no escape for you until I get my answer."

At that moment there came a prodigious knocking at the door.

"It's Squire Dixon," gasped Clara, "with a gallon can of kerosene oil!"

"I don't care if it is a cargo of dynamite!" said Norman. "Is it yes?"

"I must let him in," pleaded Clara.

"Is it no?"

"And there is Dr. Gibson's gig, with a bundle of broom-corn and a basket of Hubbard squashes! Do let me go, Norman!"

"Not one step, until my fate is decided!"

Clara darted a shy glance at him from under her long lashes. Apparently she was meditating a rebellion; but a second knocking of persistent knuckles at the door decided the question.

"They will knock in the panels!" said she. "Yes, Norman—yes! Only let me open the door."

But even then Norman would not suffer her to open the door until he had taken a very deliberate and satisfactory kiss. "You are a little darling," said he. "And I knew I should conquer you in time."

The Squire and the doctor came in, but Norman had taken himself and his bag of castor beans off through the open window.

"Any thing wrong with the fasten'n's o' this 'ere door?" said the Squire, gruffly.

"I—I couldn't get the barrel of apples out of the way," said Clara, coloring very red.

The donation party came triumphantly off that night. Apples and salt pork, patch-work quilts and many tidies were received. The minister made a speech of thanks. Mrs. Bernard wondered how much would be left of her best china dishes and worn carpets before the company was gone. But through it all Clara seemed to walk on rose-colored clouds. Nothing put her out. All the irritation was gone from her heart; and Leslie, watching her with a smile, said to herself: "Dear Clara, so it has come at last. The enchanted prince has ridden up to the castle gates and set her free. I am so glad!"

CUPID'S CHARMS.

How Courtship Is Carried On in Holland.

[Translated from the German for this paper by Alex. E. Sweet.]

MAN proposes, but frequently he requires a great deal of encouragement to persuade him to do so. This is particularly the case in Holland. As soon as the young Dutchman attains his age, and even sooner, his fond mother begins to look around for a suitable daughter-in-law, in which meretricious purpose she usually receives considerable encouragement from the young man—himself. He is, however, expected by the parents of the prospective bride to come to the point without unnecessary delay. Let us suppose that a young man has been visiting a family where there was a marriageable daughter, and after several weeks has neglected to declare his intentions, the head of the family takes him aside and says: "My dear young friend, this is all very well; but what do you mean, any how?"

If the young man does not take this hint nobody comes to the door the next time he pulls the bell. However, as a general thing there is no occasion for any reminder. The young people become engaged, after which they go to balls and parties, or to picnics together, pretty much the same as they do in this country. There is some remarkable downward tendency of lampwicks Saturday nights, etc.

Occasionally, engagements are broken off. After a couple have been engaged perhaps for years, either party may come right out and say: "I think we are not fitted for each other, and perhaps it would be better if we part right now." The other party has no alternative but to acquiesce, and thanks to the phlegmatic nature of the race, there are no scenes, no duels, or any thing of the kind. The young lady abstains from balls or parties, she does not attend any places of public amusement for six weeks, at the expiration of which self-imposed penance she resumes her former relations to society. Nobody finds any thing remarkable in the severance of the engagement, and the young men who formerly admired the young lady do not keep aloof from paying her their addresses.

In some parts of Holland there exists a very pretty custom in regard to making proposal of marriage that might be advantageously adopted in other countries. If a young man is in love, but is too modest to declare his love, he does not permit such concealment "like a worm to feed upon his damask cheek," but he buys a cake, and, after carefully wrapping it up in a piece of tissue paper, he repairs to the house of the object of his affections. Finding all the family present, he places the cake on the table in front of the young lady. Although she has been expecting this very event, she, nevertheless, betrays considerable surprise. Her mother apparently takes no notice of what is going on, while the father takes the young man to the window and converses with him about the weather, etc. This is done in order to give the young lady a chance to make up her mind. The young man looks around over his shoulder, suffering much mental anguish, and trying to find out what the fair one is going to do with that cake.

If she loves him, but likes to tease him, as is generally the case, she makes out as if she was undecided. She examines the cake carefully. It smells of spices, and the young fellow, although a little awkward, is not such a bad looking fellow after all.

Shall she take him, or not? She hesitates an instant, and then raising the cake to her mouth buries her pearly teeth in it. This signifies that she has accepted him as her future husband. The poor devil in the corner heaves a sigh of relief. The mother of the young lady drops her knitting and gazes with mixed emotions at her daughter devouring the cake. The prospective husband spreads out his arms as if for an embrace, but, remembering that it is unbecoming in a true Dutchman to betray excessive emotions, allows them to drop to his sides. Then he modestly approaches his Dulcinea, and gently taking the hand that has toyed so long with the cake, he imprints a kiss—the first one—on it.

When, however, the suitor is not the right one, no matter how much he may clear his throat, and tell how prosperous his business is, and how he proposes to take a trip up the Rhine pretty soon—a trip up the Rhine being the Dutch equivalent to a bridal tour to Niagara Falls—the girl remains immovable. She keeps on sewing, looking neither to the right nor to the left. Finally the young man sees which way the cat is going to jump. He gets up and slowly approaches the table. It is plain to see that the girl is trying to suppress her excitement. Perhaps another has already claimed her heart, or, possibly, she may have a prejudice against her suitor. Nothing in the world could induce her to look up from her work. He reaches out his hand, picks up the cake, and while the girl's mother murmurs: "Poor fellow," he makes his exit, saying: "Vaarvoel byzamen!" or "farewell everybody!"

No mention is ever made of the affair. The public knows nothing about it, and not even the most intimate friends of the young lady ever hear of it. The wind is thus "tempered to the shorn lamb."

The Number of Our Ancestors.

To one who has not thought upon the subject, it is quite inconceivable how rapidly a person's lineal ancestors multiply every generation he carries back the calculation. If one is asked how many great-great-grandfathers he had, he will, in all likelihood answer: "two," while in reality he had eight, if there have been no intermarriages of relations among his ancestors. In fact, the number of male ancestors doubles every generation. Thus, every one has had two grandfathers, four great-grandfathers, eight great-great-grandfathers, sixteen great-great-great-grandfathers, and fifteen generations back, he had no less than sixteen thousand three hundred and eighty-four lineal male ancestors.—N. Y. Ledger.

THE STARS.

What are their years? The night's unfathomed deep
Rings back no answer, gives no glimmering key;
And still unknown, and beautiful, they keep
The silent courses of Eternity.

What are their memories of Creation's days,
When startled Chaos, from its kingdom hurled,
First knew its Master, and with glad amaze
They sang the birth-song of our trembling world?

What have they looked on since, with patient eyes,
While million years uncounted rolled away?
Who claims antiquity for man that dies,
Before such records of the Past as they?

Can they to man his mystery explain,
The why, the whence, of his uncertain state?
Unlock the riddle that he reads in vain,
And clear the tangled problem of his fate?

Can they a fashion to the future give,
And tell the whither of man's anxious quest?
Make life a less than weariness to live,
Or stay the hazard of his wild unrest?

Oh, Stars! what midnight message do ye bear,
To minds grown weary with the years' increase?
The wistful eyes that watch you shining there
Look out of troubled hearts that know not peace.

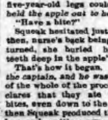
AN OCEAN COURTSHIP.

All Started by Bubble's Rosy-Cheeked Apple.

The Parts in the Drama Were Played by the Captain, the Girl with the Psyche Knot and the Chap with the Sealskin Cap.



THERE was an apple at the root of this story, as there has been at the bottom of so many stories since first Satan tempted Mother Eve. A great, rosy-cheeked one it was, too, according to the New York Evening Sun. Bubble's silver-haired old grandmother had pressed it into his hand the instant before the tender had given its final whistle and steamed away down the Mersey to where the great black steamship lay that was to carry Bubble and his pretty young mother to far-off Canada.

That apple was the first thing that little Squeak's eyes rested upon when she came on board with her nurse, her father and an unlimited supply of ginger snaps done up in a brown paper bag.

First of all she looked at the apple and then she looked at Bubble. She really couldn't tell which she liked better. Perhaps, all things considered, Bubble, with his natty little sailor suit and those frowsy yellow curls, would prove a more lasting delight, but for the present that apple—

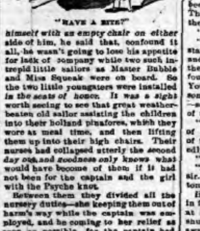
She looked at the apple longingly and Bubble looked at her. Then toddling across the deck as fast as his chubby five-year-old legs could carry him, he held the apple out to her.

"Have a bite?"

Squeak hesitated just one instant and then, nurse's back being providentially turned, she buried her little white teeth deep in the apple's side.

That's how it began. At least so says the captain, and he was an eye-witness of the whole of the proceedings. He declares that they ate it by alternate bites, even down to the very core. And then Squeak produced the brown paper bag, and, getting away to a snug little corner, while the whistles were blowing and the farewells were said on every side, and the women were weeping and the men looked glum, these two little tots held an impromptu picnic and enjoyed themselves as hugely as though the English language contained no such word as "Good-bye."

Bubble's mamma was to have had the seat of honor at the saloon table on the captain's right, and by a singular coincidence Squeak's papa had been assigned to the seat directly opposite. But both failed to put in an appearance at dinner, and in fact proved such wretched sailors that neither of them showed up until the ship was within a short distance of Quebec. On the second day, when the captain found himself with an empty chair on either side of him, he said that, confound it all, he wasn't going to lose his appetite for lack of company while two such intrepid little sailors as Master Bubble and Miss Squeak were on board. So the two little youngsters were installed in the seats of honor. It was a sight worth seeing to see that great weather-beaten old sailor assisting the children into their holland pinafores, which they wore at meal time, and then lifting them up into their high chairs. Their nurses had collapsed utterly the second day out, and goodness only knows what would have become of them if it had not been for the captain and the girl with the Psyche knot.



"HAVE A BITE?"

Between them they divided all the nursery duties—she keeping them out of harm's way while the captain was employed, and he coming to her relief as soon as possible, for the captain had once been in love himself, and consequently knew all about it. So sometimes, just as the chap in the sealskin cap was beginning to fume a bit and declare that he was suffering from a superfluity of Bubble and Squeak, the captain would come waddling up to them with his queer sailor walk and would tell the two elders to off with them and he'd look after the two chicks.

You never saw such a pair of sailors in your life. Sometimes the captain would take them up on the bridge with him and let them look through the big telescope. It was at these times that Bubble reached the acme of his bliss. Squeak, although she enjoyed it very much, of course, was scarcely so enthusiastic. She had a habit of shutting both eyes tight when she looked into the telescope that must naturally have debarred her from fully appreciating the view.

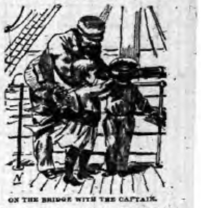
During the first three days the weather was remarkably fine and the children fairly lived on deck. Then the weather grew rougher, and it was no longer safe for Bubble and Squeak to roam at large.

It was at this critical point that the chap in the sealskin cap came to the rescue. There were two rings in the floor of the quarter deck, and he procured two long, stanch leather straps from one of the sailors. The straps were placed about the children's waists and fastened securely to the rings. They were long enough to admit of their crawling about, so after the prospect of being mewed up in the saloon the youngsters viewed this chance of emancipation as a positive godsend. It was here that they held impromptu receptions and demolished the chicken wings and other delicacies which the steward brought them from time to time. It was here also that on the fifth day out Miss Squeak was seized with that alarming attack of the "egg-cups." That's what Bubble called it, at any rate, though perhaps a physician might give it a slightly different name. For a few moments everybody was suggesting some infallible remedy, but it was the captain who finally effected the cure. "Get me a glass of water, somebody," he cried in his gruff, hearty way. "Bless my heart, don't any of you good people know how to cure the hiccoughs? Take nine sips of water now, Squeak dear. Hold on now. Let me count 'em. There you are. Didn't I tell you, now?"

And the captain waddled back to his post looking as proud as Punch.

A few days later the captain's medical services were once more brought into play. This time both Bubble and Squeak were patients. Some one had made a great dish of taffy and both the youngsters had partaken of it freely. Next morning they paid the penalty, for both had a whacking toothache. As the morning passed the pain grew worse, and lunch time found them both sob*bing.*

The captain didn't say very much, but told them to come along with him into his cabin. He took them by the hand, one on either side, and they started off.



ON THE BRIDGE WITH THE CAPTAIN.

The passengers watched them expectantly, and as the cabin door closed behind the trio they strained their ears for what was to follow. There was a moment or two of silence, while the passengers held their breath. Then at the very same instant two piercing shrieks were heard. The captain, not to show any partiality, had pulled both the teeth at once. They came out presently, each child parading a tooth in triumph, and they related their experiences to an admiring throng. Then Bubble took Squeak's tooth and Squeak took Bubble's, and they vowed to keep them forever as souvenirs.

As the time for parting drew nearer and nearer the captain grew more and more glum. He could not bear the thought of losing them, although he declared emphatically that his dancing at their wedding was merely a question of time. Quebec was reached late in the evening, so most of the passengers elected to spend the night on board. But Squeak's papa was in a hurry to reach terra firma again, so the young lady took her departure by torch-light. Afterward, just to keep their spirits up, Bubble and the captain took a stroll up and down the bridge. Then in the early morning it came Bubble's turn to say good-bye. His parting with that telescope was pitiful. He loved it just a little more than the captain and a little less than Squeak. The girl cried over him a little bit as she had cried over Squeak on the night before. The chap gave him a little gentle slap on his back and then exclaimed: "Good-bye, old fellow." The captain just blew his nose.

At the gangway Bubble stopped dead, and in spite of his nurse's protestations refused to budge another inch. It was a critical moment. The nurse was buxom and poor Bubble very weak. There was a sudden whisk of little legs through the air, a shriek of fury and then the child was borne triumphantly down the gangway under nurse's brawny arm.

Then the girl struck up "For He's a Jolly Good Fellow," and all the rest of them joined in.—N. Y. Evening Sun.

THE WRONG CUSTOMER.

His Card Told Why He Had No Use for a Smoke Consumer.

"Are you the proprietor?" inquired the caller, politely.

"Yes, sir. What can I do for you?"

"If you have a moment to spare," said the stranger, opening his valise, "I would like to show you something I am introducing for the first time in this city. In common with every other business man, I presume, you are a sufferer from the smoke nuisance. By the use of a simple little device of my own invention, as you see in this model, we are able to make any stove, furnace or engine consume its own smoke and—"

"But I—"

"And though it seems too simple a thing to work successfully, I assure you it does the work completely. I can give you testimonials from more than fifty individuals and firms that have been using it for the last two months. They all pronounce it the best thing they have ever—"

"But I have no—"

"Just a moment, please, I can understand readily enough that you have seen and doubtless tried yourself many of these so-called smoke-annihilators and found them to be miserable failures. You have been waiting, of course, for something that would do what is claims—something that would rid the people of this smoke curse, and—"

"I haven't been waiting for any thing of the kind!" exclaimed the proprietor of the establishment, rising up excitedly.

"You haven't?"

"No, sir! You have made a mistake, sir. You have tackled the wrong customer. Can you read?"

He laid his business card on the table in front of him. The caller took a look at it, put his model back in his valise, shut the latter with a snap, and went away without a word. The card was inscribed:

POLITICAL PLATFORMS.

This is the season for political conventions and the erection of platforms.

DEMOCRATIC.

The Democratic State Convention in session at San Jose, California, last week, put forth the following ringing declarations:

"We denounce and condemn the Republican majority in the National House of Representatives for the passage of the infamous Lodge Election bill by which that majority seeks, masquerading under the guise of a free ballot and a fair count, to perpetuate itself in power by insidiously destroying the liberties of American citizens, usurping the legislative functions of State governments and bringing the Federal election machinery into inharmonious conflict and collision with the statutory efforts of the people of the various Commonwealths of the Union to institute genuine, practical and permanent political reform.

We denounce the McKinley tariff bill as opposed to the best interests of the producing and consuming classes of the country.

We favor the free coinage of silver and demand that it be made a legal tender for all purposes, public and private."

PROHIBITION.

The Prohibitionists of Pennsylvania, in Convention assembled at Harrisburg, every County being represented, made public their party doctrine as follows:

"The liquor traffic, as the prolific source of crime and lawlessness, should be prohibited by laws faithfully enforced, and we are unalterably opposed to any law that in any way legalizes, authorizes or tolerates the traffic in liquors as a beverage.

The Sabbath must be preserved and properly observed.

All citizens, without distinction of sex, race or nationality, should have the power of the ballot upon such educational basis as the Legislature may deem wise for their protection and the advancement of the best interests of the State.

Combinations or trusts which seek to advance the price of the commodities of life, or in any way to interfere with the unrestricted manufacturing interests of our country by forced "close-downs," "lock-outs," etc., should be prohibited.

While we reiterate our allegiance to the policy of protection to American industries and labor, we favor the principle of reciprocity as a means of rescuing the agricultural interest from its present depressed and unremunerative condition.

We favor full and fair protection and compensation to labor, and arbitration as the best method for adjusting disputes between employer and employee."

FARMERS' ALLIANCE.

The Farmers of Virginia, convened at Lynchburg, unanimously resolved:

Whereas, Alliances are shaking hands across the Potomac, across the Mississippi, across the rugged peaks of the Rockies, and far grander still across the bloody chasm, across Mason's and Dixon's line; and

Whereas, Consummate politicians in our National Congress have advocated measures and expressed sentiments to arouse the old sectional feeling engendered by the war; therefore, be it

Resolved, That we, the State Farmers' Alliance of Virginia, tighten the Alliance grip with our Alliance brothers of the North, determined to hold together with locked shields in spite of all efforts to arouse prejudice between us until the financial emancipation of the laborer and producer is accomplished."

THE QUESTION.

The tariff question is being more intelligently considered and discussed by the farmers, workingmen and business classes of this country than at any former period.

The people are educating themselves well up on the subject of needed revenue, legitimate taxation and real protection, and all the mercenary politicians and monopolists in the land cannot retard the ultimate triumph of truth over error.

The course of education is upward.

The Democratic Senators at Washington, aided by a few Republicans, are making a thorough record of opposition to the McKinley bounty paying scheme. Step by step they expose to public knowledge its sordid exactions and injurious tendencies, and the wickedness of its origin and partisan advocacy.

The people are hearing and heeding.

A vast majority of them are not dumb driven slaves.

The farmers, tradesmen and wage-earners, of all grades are clearly discovering that the much-vaunted political protection, the Reed-McKinley kind, does not protect them a whit, but, on the contrary, robs them with greedy hands what they should justly retain and enjoy.

Public opinion is a mighty blast when fully aroused.

Some hide-bound politicians may treat it with contempt, and idly think that the crack of a party lash will hold it obsequiously [illegible].

It won't.

Independent thought is also bravely asserting itself.

The Elizabeth Journal, in its zeal for its party, (which represents the G. O. P.,) is doing its utmost to misrepresent the present Democratic Congressman from the Third District, Hon. J. A. Geissenhainer, in his official career. In a recent article, headed—"Wanted, an Influential Congressman," the writer says: "If for no other reason, such a man should be elected because of the shipping interests of this city." (meaning Elizabeth.) So, then the Journal wishes a Representative only for the interests of Elizabeth, and not for the remainder of the District. The present Representative, in his official capacity, has done all in his power for the shipping interest aspect, but there are other matters requiring the attention of the Congressman among his constituents, to which he has devoted his personal attention since he assumed his official duties. The Journal need have no fear about there being an influential Congressman elected in the Third District, and—his name will be J. A. Geissenhainer.

DEMOCRACY.

Ex-Governor Robert E. Pattison is again the Democratic candidate for Chief Magistrate of Pennsylvania.

He is a man of unblemished personal repute, positive integrity of purpose, and enlightened statesman ability. Like ex-President Grover Cleveland, he belongs to that type of official patriots who ever make public office a sacred trust.

In a short but pointed letter of acceptance ex-Governor Pattison, among other sound remarks, expressed the following:

"Self government—home rule—is now on trial in this Commonwealth.

On one side stand the people, with their Constitution and general interests.

On the other stands selfish and arrogant leadership, self-constituted and defiant, and resolved to use the offices and treasure of the people as personal spoils.

Between these must the voter choose.

Confident that the Democratic party, its principles and candidates, represent the right and just side of the controversy, I have no doubt of the popular verdict.

We offer deeds, not vacant words, as the guarantee of our fidelity."

There is a weight of political truth contained in these few sentences—

Self Government.
Home Rule.
The Constitution.
General Public Interests.
Anti-Spoliation.
Practical Action.
No Deceptive Promises.

Are eminently fitted to emblazon the advancing banner of Democracy.

AN AVAILABLE CANDIDATE.

As the time approaches for the nomination of County officers much interest is being manifested by the Democracy of Union County, as to who shall be their standard bearer for the office of State Senator in the coming election this Fall. That the election is a most important one is plain to the leaders, and should be borne in mind by the masses. On the election of Union County's candidate may depend the political complexion of the next State Legislature, and it will, therefore, become the duty of the approaching Democratic Convention to nominate a man who can win, and one who has all the requisites to fill the office. Such a man we believe is Assemblyman Fred. C. Marsh, of Elizabeth.

His record and work during his past legislative career is such as to commend him as an honest legislator, and one who faithfully looked after the interests of his constituents and the community at large. It will not do at this time for the Democrats to make any mistake, on account of party dissensions or differences, in their nomination for State Senator. We believe Mr. Marsh is the available candidate in the approaching election.

A REMINDER.

Senator Daniel, of Virginia, in a speech on the tariff the other day, paid his respects to the Republican side of the Senate as follows:

"Your own Republican Secretary of State has written in letters of light the condemnation of the pending tariff bill.

Your own Secretary of Agriculture has told you that the cause of agricultural depression was the loss of foreign markets.

Markets lost by you Republicans doing what your forefathers complained of a hundred years ago against the British crown—that he was "cutting off their trade with all parts of the World.""

ONE STABBED, ANOTHER MISSING.

William Miller's Fortune, and Louis Miller's Mystery.

The "William Miller" who was stabbed in a bar-room brawl in Newark, Saturday morning, and who told the nurse at St. Barnabas Hospital that he was from Plainfield, has probably given an entirely fictitious address. A part of it, "130 Plainfield street," is certainly an invention, so far as Plainfield is concerned. "Miller" says he is a single man, and that his age is 27 years. He is of light complexion, has sandy hair, and was cleanly-shaven.

It was feared Monday that the injured man was Louis Miller, a German-American, who lives on the Rahway road. Louis started for Chicago several days ago with considerable money in his pocket, and was to write home immediately on his arrival in the great Western city. No word from him has been received and his wife and family are greatly worried. Louis is twenty-four years of age, has his initials "L. M." tattooed in his arm, and has a prominent scar on his forehead.

A circumstance that strengthened the belief that Louis was the Miller who was stabbed was the fact that George Cook, who was concerned in the row, was formerly a bar-tender in Plainfield and was an old acquaintance of Louis. It was feared that Cook had induced Miller to abandon his Western trip and spend his money with him.

Politics Begin to Brew.

(From today's New York World.)

In the Second Assembly District of New Jersey the Democrats are rather at sea, as to whom to select on account of Assemblyman Marsh, the present representative, being in the field for the Senatorial nomination. Should Mr. Marsh by any means fail to be nominated, a contingency not likely to happen, he would undoubtedly be the choice of his party for another term in the Legislature. As Mr. Marsh seems slated to go up higher, his constituents will have to turn their thoughts to somebody else to fill his place.

Freeholder George W. Doty, of Union, who is mentioned in connection with the Shrievalty, might, in the event of that office going to Plainfield, be induced to accept the Assembly nomination in the Second District. Freeholder Doty is well liked and would make a strong and acceptable candidate. His name at present is the only one thought hinted at, although ex-Freeholder Oliver, if he could be persuaded to become an aspirant, would, if nominated, sweep the district like a cyclone. The Second ordinarily is good for 800 Democratic majority if the right man is selected, but it is the belief that the Democrats will make a blunder and choose a weak man to succeed Marsh, that encourages the Republicans to think that a strong nominee on their side, [illegible], will have more than a fighting chance to carry the district. The Third District is hopelessly Republican, and ex-Assemblyman William Chamberlain, of Rahway, would likely be the party candidate, unless Judge Ulrich, of Plainfield, should want another term, in which event, as the Judge is strong with the railroad influence, the Rahwayite in all probability would have to take a back seat. The indications, however, are that Judge Ulrich will not be a candidate.

SNAKES IN PLAINFIELD'S GRASS.

JUSTICE BEASLEY ISSUES A WRIT CITING THE CITY TO SHOW THE CONSTITUTIONALITY OF ITS ACTION.

If the Granting of a Franchise to the Water Works Company of Plainfield, by the Council of 1889 Under the Leadership of Mr. Newhall and the Advice of Corporation Counsel Marsh, is Declared Illegal, the City Will Lose Thousands of Dollars, and for a year or More May be Postponed the Building of the Works so Much Needed as a Convenience and as an Attraction.

In Elizabeth Thursday, Justice Beasley heard the complaint of one Israel Lewis questioning the legality of the franchise granted and contract entered into, by the Common Council of this city with the Water Works company of Plainfield. This is the first step along the line of those who are determined to kill the present possibilities of water in this city, no matter at what cost to the city or damage to its continued prosperity.

For some days those incendiaries through their mouth-piece the news, have claimed that the law under which the franchise was granted the Water Works Company of Plainfield, was unconstitutional and the contract entered into was unlawful and void. A stool pigeon seems to have been found in Israel Lewis, and the "trouble" has begun. If the news succeeds, the city will lose thousands of dollars; and by the still further postponement of the completion of water works, Plainfield's growth will be arrested and its prosperity receive a rebuff from which it may never recover.

Look at this picture of the City's position if the Court allows its enemies' claim that the franchise and contract are illegal. First, bear in mind, work will probably stop today and nothing more will be done by Contractor Moore until the City proves to the satisfaction of the Court, that they have given him a lawful contract. It may take months to reach a decision in the Supreme Court, and meanwhile, as the first result of the news' and its coterie's action, the time of the completion of Plainfield's water works is extended into 1891 or 1892.

Secondly, should the claim of the city's enemies be allowed by the Court, and the ruling handed down that the action of Mr. Newhall, Corporation Counsel Marsh, Mayor Male and the Republican Council of 1889, was illegal—then what? The City must pay out of its treasury, back to Chas. K. Moore the $6,000 he has paid it upon demand of an unlawful contract! The city must continue to pay out of its treasury to Rudolph Hering the $5,000 salary voted him in spite of the protest of Councilmen Moffett, Hetfield, Spangenberg, Gallup and Smith, of the Big, Big, 6! and the city will be liable to pay by bonding the people, to the Water Works Company of Plainfield, and to pay to Contractor Moore fifty thousand, or a hundred thousand, or as many thousand dollars as the courts will allow as damages caused by their accepting from the city in good faith an illegal contract by which they were misled into spending $25,000 in preliminary and rudimentary work. Added to this amount will be as many thousand dollars as the court will allow as supplementary damages.

The writ issued yesterday by Judge Beasley, is as follows: It was served on Acting-Mayor Moffett, and City Clerk Coward, this morning.

NEW JERSEY, ss.—The State of New Jersey to J. Herbert Johnston, William Foster, Jr., Cornelius N. Hoagland, James Moore, Samuel Knox, John R. Moore and George Kyte, calling themselves "The Water Works Company of Plainfield," and "The Inhabitants of the City of Plainfield."

[L. S.]

Greeting: We being willing for certain reasons to be certified of a certain proceeding or resolution of the Common Council of "The Inhabitants of the City of Plainfield" had or passed at a meeting of said Common Council held on the twenty-seventh day of December last, purporting to give the consent of "The Inhabitants of the City of Plainfield" or of the corporate authorities thereof to the formation, or organization by the said J. Herbert Johnston, William Foster, Jr., Cornelius N. Hoagland, Jas. Moore, Samuel Knox, John R. Moore and George Kyte of an alleged corporation styled "The Water Works Company of Plainfield," or of the proposed action of the said alleged corporation; and of a certain resolution passed by the said Common Council at the said meeting, purporting to accept an offer and contract of J. Herbert Johnston and others, and authorizing and instructing the Mayor and City Clerk of the said "The Inhabitants of the City of Plainfield" to execute a contract with the said alleged corporation styled "The Water Works Company of Plainfield", and of the said contract purporting to have been executed in pursuance of the said resolution; together with all matters and proceedings of the said Common Council touching and concerning the said resolutions, offer and contract as fully as they remain before the said Common Council or the said "The Inhabitants of the City of Plainfield," or in the custody of any official of the said city, by whatever name the said resolutions, offer and contract may be called therein; we command you that the said resolutions, offer and contract, together with all other matters and proceedings of the said Common Council and of the said "The Inhabitants of the City of Plainfield" touching and concerning the same, you certify and send, together with this writ, to our Supreme Court at Trenton on the first Tuesday in November next, that thereon may be done what of right and according to the laws and constitution of this State ought to be done.

Witness Mercer Beasley, Esq., Chief Justice of our said Supreme Court at Trenton this twenty-first day of August, A. D., eighteen hundred and ninety.

BENJ. F. LEE, Clerk.
Collins & Corbin, Attorneys.

The action of the Council last year in the matter, was as follows: Meetings were being held during every week in December by the Republican Council in order to shove the franchise through before the Council of 1890 came into existence. This effort was successful, and as THE PRESS has said before, all the credit and glory of the Water Works deal belongs to the Republican Council of 1889, and the Republican Water Board of 1890. At a meeting held on the evening of December 27, 1889, Mr. Newhall offered the following resolution, which was adopted by the votes of Councilmen Dumont, Dunham, Erickson, Gallup, Jenkins, Marsh, Myers, Newhall and Squires.

Resolved, That the consent in writing of the corporate authorities of the city of Plainfield be and the same is hereby given to J. Herbert Johnston, Cornelius N. Hoagland, William Foster, Jr., James Moore, Samuel Knox, John R. Moore and George Kyte, to associate themselves as a body politic and corporate under the name of "The Water Works Company of Plainfield," for the purpose of constructing, maintaining and operating water works for the purpose of supplying the city of Plainfield and its inhabitants with water, in pursuance of the provisions of an act entitled "An act for the construction, maintenance and operation of water works for the purpose of supplying cities, towns and villages of this State with water," approved April 21, 1876, and the acts amendatory thereof and supplemental thereto.

Resolved, That the Mayor and City Clerk be authorized and instructed to sign the assent of the corporate authorities of the city to the certificate of incorporation of said company.

At a meeting of the same Council, held on the evening of January 3, 1890, Mr. Erickson presented the Bond of the Water Works Company of Plainfield; the Contract duly executed; and a certified copy of the Certificate of Incorporation. The Bond was for $50,000, and signed by James Moore, Chief Engineer of the Central Railroad Company; Charles K. Moore, his son, one of the contractors to whom the water works franchise has been given; and ex-Congressman John Kean, Jr.

This Bond after examination by every member of the Council present; and endorsed as correct in form by Corporation Counsel Marsh; was referred back to the Council and approved by a unanimous vote. Those present being Councilmen Dumont, Dunham, Erickson, Jenkins, Myers and Squires.

The contract was then signed by Mayor Male on the part of the city, and attested by City Clerk Leonard.

A copy of the complaint of Israel Lewis not being obtainable, the particular point made that was sound enough to impel Mercer Beasley, Chief Justice of the Supreme Court, to issue the writ, is not known. Israel Lewis is a resident of another county and votes there. He lives in Jersey City. Just why he should complain because Plainfield wants water works, and why he should take steps to stop the building of them and to annul the contract, is not apparent unless he is being used as a tool by enemies of the city. It will all come out some day, and the real principals in the affair will be known. The lawyers in the case, Collins & Corbin, are known throughout the State as unequalled in their knowledge of corporate law. They make a specialty of such cases.

As acting-Corporation Counsel John H. Jackson told a PRESS reporter on Friday, when a list is made of those who are back of this, the people will be much surprised to find it contains the names of many men of former high standing in the city. He said further that as Corporation Counsel Marsh would be back within two weeks, and the writ was not returnable until November, the matter was not one that called for any action or attention on his part.

Contractor Moore was not at his Plainfield office Friday, but was seen by a PRESS reporter in New York. When told of Justice Beasley's writ, he replied that he had accepted the contract in good faith from the city. If it was illegal, that was of course a matter that concerned the city. The only way in which he was at present personally concerned, he said, was because of the delay in the work that would occur. "It will give me an extension of time, but I don't want that," he continued emphatically. "I wanted to keep my faith with the people, and deliver water to them in their houses within a few months."

Acting-Mayor Moffett was also found by a PRESS reporter, in a state of entire unconcern. He said: "The Council of 1889, of which I was compelled to be but a silent member because of its overpowering Republican majority, are responsible alone for the contract with the Water Works Company of Plainfield. I was not even present when the franchise was granted. The matter is now in the hands of a Republican Water Board consisting of Messrs Newhall, Rushmore and Dunham, who have taken it entirely out of the jurisdiction of the present Council. The combine, as they call us, are not interested or concerned in the affair at all, except that we have insisted upon the monthly payment of $1,000 by the Contractor which helps the City pay Engineer Hering the extravagant salary the combine fought so hard against."

The New York Tribune Friday has the following more or less inaccurate reference to the case:

Application is to be made to the Supreme Court to test the legal standing of the Plainfield Waterworks Company. A writ of certiorari has been asked for by Israel Lewis, a taxpayer of Plainfield, and it is reported that the Supreme Court Judge, William J. Magie, has certified the writ to the Supreme Court clerk at Trenton, Benjamin A. Lee. The reasons set forth in the document are that the charter under which the company was organized is null and void, because the law under which it was granted is unconstitutional. The question will be argued at the November term of the Supreme Court. Ex-Congressman Kean, who is one of the bondsmen for the water company, said yesterday that he had grave doubts as to the legality of the law under which the company was formed and he would like to see the issue tested. He had heard that an application for a certiorari was to be made, but was not aware that the writ had been granted.

This article should not close without the presentation of one little circumstance that has a certain bearing on the case. It seems as if a non-resident was not chosen to make the complaint, until after effort was made to find a citizen for the purpose. One gentleman of this city was offered $50 some days ago, to make the complaint. He refused. THE PRESS hopes to be given permission some day to publish his name, that the whole people may praise him. Lewis, the complainant, is said to be a Jersey City lawyer who owns some of the property formerly belonging to Evan Jones. Israel Lewis of North Plainfield, says he is not the man.

One Who Wants Men Like the Big 4.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE PRESS:—The muddle into which the coterie of Republican "Politicians" of 1889 have involved our good city with their Water Works contract, should show the intelligent voter how such men—who have personal ambition, and would like to catechise every man as to his religious belief, and his views on temperance—are to represent a growing city, and one with such a fair future as Plainfield. Let us all work hard and honestly to place men in charge of our city's interest made of the same stuff as the stanch Big 4, who serve "no ambition," who represent "no circle," but serve and represent Plainfield first, last and all the time. If this is done it is safe to say such contracts are not likely to be made, as honor always out weighs it in the long run.

Took His Bath on Park Avenue.

The policeman on duty during Friday night's drenching storm noticed a dark object floating down the flooded gutters of Park avenue. At first they thought it a discarded umbrella, but presently legs and arms were seen to flounder and thrash about, and by hauling the bundle from its soaking deluge, just as it was being forced into the sewer-basin, they found it to be a man, who spluttered forth that it was a shame to rob a man of his bath. The fellow was intoxicated, otherwise he would have been drowned. His name was given as Simon Coon, and Mayor Moffett fined him two dollars, all the money he had.

Tremendous Feat of the Lightning's Pulse.

A strange effect in electricity was noticed in the neighborhood of Fanwood during Friday's heavy thunderstorm. A freight train was running along at good speed when the engineer and fireman heard above the roar of the storm and the rumbling of the train a strange [illegible] crackling sound. Looking out of the cab windows, the two men were astonished to see vivid electric discharges flash from the telegraph wires on one side of the track, through the locomotive, to the wires on the opposite side. The display back and forth continued some time, and was repeated at intervals along the road to Westfield. Neither the engineer nor the fireman experienced any physical sensation because of the electric discharges, but they were considerably awed at a sight which seemed so weird and supernatural.

CRESCENTS vs. METROPOLITANS.

With All Our Praise We Beat Them Still—Plainfield's Team Make Many Errors, But Gregg Saves Them From Defeat.

When the Metropolitans of New York won the World's championship in a deciding game against the Chicagos, Lynch pitched for the Mets and won by a score of 2 to 0. When the Crescent League team went to the bat in Saturday's game, that same old Lynch faced them; and he was supported by such men as catcher Collins, late of the Philadelphias, Shorty Howe of the New Yorks on third, Lever, who is a candidate for the League, and other good ones as the score below shows.

The game opened most inauspiciously for Plainfield. Howe, the first to the bat, reached first on a fumble of Lee's, and Lever followed with a lucky lift over the right field fence that brought in both runners. Beadle then reached first on an error of Martin's, and the 600 shivering people present, looked at one another in dismay. It was a cold day that seemed to be growing colder for the Crescents every minute. Neither Lee nor Martin could throw across the diamond against a slanting wind, and Wiegand could not get a ball unless it was thrown right into his chest. The Plainfield people therefore in the very beginning, felt as blue over the prospects as they looked blue over the weather. Two runs already for the visitors in the opening inning, with Beadle on first and no one out. Lynch then came to the bat and Gregg struck him out as a starter, but meanwhile Beadle stole second. Then Collins hit to Martin, who played the ball so quick to Wiegand and he across the diamond to Lee, that Collins and Beadle were both out, and the inning closed.

Then the Crescents took their first turn at the bat; and also scored two runs off of Martin's and Wiegand's safe hits and Laffery's base on an error of Howe's. After their lucky opening the Mets would not have scored a run but for a bunch of errors by Jones, Martin, Laffery and Lee in the seventh. Gregg held the visitors down to four scattered hits—one each in the first, third, fourth and seventh innings. Two of these four hits were made by Lever, who, when the Actives defeated the Crescents in April, played on the visiting team and made three runs, two hits, and stole three bases.

In the fourth inning the Crescents scored two more runs on hits by Martin and Laffery; and in the seventh three runs on a hit by McIndoe and errors of Howe and Beadle. The feature of this inning was Wiegand's steal home. He was between third and the plate when Lee struck out. Collins threw the ball so unexpectedly to Howe that Wiegand could not get back and started for home. Howe dropped the ball in his hurry and Wiegand made a desperate slide. His plate caught and he turned a complete somersault, landing on his head on the home plate. The applause was tremendous.

In the Crescents' last inning McIndoe showed what he could do by a drive to right field on which he reached third on a beautiful slide. It was a close decision, but umpire Berriman rightly deemed it safe. Plainfield never had so satisfactory an umpire. Lynch took the opportunity after Saturday's game to commend him, and every visiting team since he was engaged, have expressed themselves entirely satisfied. The score:

TURN ON THE LIGHT!

Contractor Moore Still Risking His Money on a Contract That the "news" Says is a Fraud.

The one matter of interest to the people of Plainfield just now, is the exposure in THE PRESS of the effort of the city's enemies to stop the building of water works in Plainfield, and to compel the payment of thousands of dollars of damages to the contractor, by securing a ruling in the Supreme Court to the effect that the City has issued an illegal contract that the Water Works company has accepted in good faith.

Who are back of it all?

Let the light be turned on!

A correspondent writes: "The people are with THE PRESS forever, now! Your exposure of the danger that threatens us may help to avert the disaster, with your continued assistance. May THE PRESS live forever! The news says the Republican Council of 1889 and Corporation Counsel Marsh issued a fraudulent contract. But who are behind the news in this damnable attack upon the City's present well-being and future prosperity?"

The above is published with a blush of modesty, although the communication also contains even stronger words of praise for THE PRESS. We have only done our duty.

An answer to the last question quoted above, is awaited by the whole community, as is also the return of Corporation Counsel Marsh.

Meanwhile Contractor Moore says he will keep his faith with the city, at all risks. Though the news insists and the Court may rule that the Corporation Counsel and the Republican Council of 1889 issued to him a fraudulent contract, he won't stop the building of the works until it is so decided. That's the kind of a man he is.

Still in the Trustees' Hands.

The Plainfield Crescent League members are yet leading the lives of tramps, abroad in the wide, wide World with no nearer home in prospect than they had the day after the fire. At a recent meeting, when "something" was hoped for from the Board of Trustees, but one or two of the latter were present and they had nothing definite to offer.

Coming From Europe to Speak in the Club.

The regular Sunday meeting of the Reform Club was held in Reform Hall Sunday night, with President Harper in the chair. A. Vanderbeck led the choir, with George H. Rogers as accompanist. The devotional services were conducted by F. Nein, who afterwards delivered a very practical address also, the line of gospel temperance. He was followed by George M. Angleman, who briefly but effectively portrayed the evils wrought by legalized rum-selling in Plainfield. The remarks of both were well received.

The President announced that Samuel A. Haines of Netherwood, now homeward bound from Europe, would be an early speaker in Reform Hall. He also gave notice of the Reform Club's excursion to Mauch Chunk and the Switchback, September 16.

AN ORGAN AT LAST.

The Republicans of Plainfield Will Speak Through the "Times" Hereafter.

This seems to be an era of change in newspaper matters. But a few days ago it was noticed that Senator Carpenter had bought the New Brunswick Times, and now it is reported that Mr. Frank W. Runyon has bought the Central New Jersey Times of Plainfield, and will issue it as a semi-weekly. The report goes on to say that the new editor "will convert it into a live Republican paper." The Times has always been Republican, and it has, moreover, been one of the cleanest and purest papers in the State and one whose moral tone has been far above the average. If there have been points upon which it differed from other Republican papers in the state, it must be admitted that Editor Leonard took his position always upon what he believed to be the moral principle involved. He never opposed Republican principles as he understood them, but only such policy as he believed to be inconsistent with those principles. In his retirement from active journalism the state will lose one of its most conscientious editors. It is, however, sincerely hoped that the change will not only preserve the high tone of the Times but be entirely beneficial to the Republican party in Plainfield. The Republicans are in great majority there, and they can well sustain a couple of first class Republican newspapers.—Elizabeth Journal.

It is strange that so sometimes far-sighted a paper as our Elizabeth contemporary, should be so blind upon an occasion like this. The Republicans, who are a great majority here, do not want a "couple" of first-class papers but say they will be satisfied with just one that is respected, to voice their sentiments and their party's principles. As said above, the Times has on "points" differed from other Republican papers in the State—notably "differed" in refusing to wear a Sewell collar—and in consequence, a large clique of Republicans in this city had withdrawn their support, and the powers that be had taken away from the Times the publication of the laws and blocked other like sources of income.

Since then the party has had no "organ," although when it first started, the readiness of the news to call every Democrat a drunkard and a horse thief, commended it to some Republicans. It was not long, however, before the party themselves realized that a paper of its character would not be permitted entrance to decent people's houses, and even if uttering the party's sentiments would have no weight, consideration nor respect. Then an effort, that has just been successful, was made to gain control of the Times and make it the mouthpiece of the Republicans of Plainfield.

The Injury of All is the Concern of One Who Speaks His Mind.

The following letter—a copy of one mailed to President Maxwell Saturday—speaks for itself and speaks for the people. It is a little severe from the view THE PRESS takes, which is that Superintendent Olhausen is sometime going to do something towards removing the nuisance spoken of. In fact he wrote to THE PRESS to that effect, although it must be confessed that it was many months ago:

August 21, 1890.

Mr. J. R. Maxwell, President C. R R of N. J., 119 Liberty street, New York:—DEAR SIR:—In a perfectly friendly spirit, I desire to express with earnestness the conviction that it is not to the interest of the C R. R. of N. J., to maintain a nuisance any longer in the city of Plainfield. As a property-holder there, I voice the practically unanimous sentiment of residents of our city South of the railroad, in saying to you plainly that we look upon your freight sheds in their present location as nothing less than a nuisance, exceedingly injurious to our interests as property-holders in obstructing developments, and causing a daily waste of time in coming to and going from the station to our homes.

The tendency is to cause an uncomfortable and dangerous overcrowding night and morning on North avenue and on Park avenue, by forcing us to go around under the railroad. We can see perfectly well that there are better locations for your freight depot on property owned by your company, and discover no reason why you shall not comply with the practically unanimous desire of our people by removing those old sheds and providing us with a neat passenger station or open pavilion at least, on the South side of the track, at the same time converting the space between it and Fourth street into a handsome park with a broad, neat driveway. The very large number of commuters and others who hold trip tickets, who live on the South side of your tracks would then go directly to and from the cars without waste of time, daily annoyance, or danger.

It is believed that this change by your company would quickly result in very handsome developments between your road and Seventh street which section is now out of the way and dilapidated in condition as a result of your freight depot obstructions.

I would remind you that the Lehigh Valley Railroad Co. are not far away, and that your slowness in making this long desired change is alienating from you the good will which it is worth while for you to have, looking ahead.

If any of your employes at Plainfield have been deceiving you in this matter, for personal reasons, the sooner you discard their advice the better. The tendency of your present arrangements is and has been to develop North Plainfield at our expense.

"A word to the wise is sufficient" and "delays are dangerous" very often.

Most respectfully,
E. P. WILLIAMS.

P. S. I am not peculiarly interested in the vicinity of your depot, and am simply one of the hundreds disgusted by your freight obstructions on the South side—sheds, standing freight trains, etc., etc.

The Enemy in Our Midst.

(From the Elizabeth Journal.)

The Plainfield city council met last night and fixed the appropriations for the fiscal year. The tax rate will be 2.24 instead of 2.15 as last year. This is an increase of .09 per cent, tax rate, notwithstanding the large increase in valuations, and shows a considerable increase in current expenditures.

The above is copied from the Plainfield news and gladly published in Elizabeth because it is to the discredit of a rival city. Some such evidence is given every day of the truth of Mayor Male's remark that "the news has done more to the damage of Plainfield than twenty floods."

The tax rate for current expenditures in this city is even lower than last year. This is shown by the fact that although the County rate is increased .14 per cent, the total rate is increased only .09 per cent.

Fine Shooting at the Gun Club Grounds.

There was a good attendance of shooters and spectators on the grounds of the Middlesex Gun Club, at Dunellen Friday, and some close and exciting shooting at live birds. Among the noted crack shots present was Frank Kleinz, Robert Irwin, Robert Welch, from Philadelphia, John Lawrence, of Rahway, Van Riper, of New York, Post, of New Jersey, and Charles Smith, Dan Terry, Dr. Zeigler, Dug. Darby, of Plainfield.

Sixteen contestants faced the traps and the "outsiders" had but few shots at stray birds. The last event was a miss-and-out between Kleinz, Irwin, Van Riper and Chas. Smith. Van Riper went out on his third bird, Irwin on his fifth, and Smith on his eighteenth, giving the victory to Kleinz.

Sore of Her Last Booth's Tenancy.

Henry Thomas, colored, doesn't like the way Mrs. Jacob Hoppel, white, has been behaving in his house on Manning avenue, so he made complaint against her as an unruly, disorderly tenant, last week, and secured a writ for her ejectment Saturday. He gave her until Monday to move out, but Saturday afternoon she celebrated her defeat by becoming thoroughly intoxicated. She whooped things up in such a noisy and objectionable way that her arrest became a matter of public necessity, and after a severe tussle Borough Marshal Rutledge succeeded in locking her up. She kept up a terrific howling all Saturday night, and annoyed the neighbors a block around. Sunday she quieted down and begged and promised all sorts of things to be released. Justice Hardy sent her to Somerville for thirty days.

John have you seen that woman lately? John in astonishment? What woman?

That woman picking grapes for Speer's Wine. Just see her in another column and read about it, the wines are found by chemists to be absolutely pure and equal to the best in the World. The Board of Health in large cities and leading Hospitals have adopted their use where wines are needed.

THE NEW CAR COMPLETED.

It Will Make Its Inaugural Trip With President Howard and the Club, Next Monday.

The new car that has been so much talked of and long expected, in which the members of the Howard Club will hereafter travel back and forth between Plainfield and New York, was turned out as complete from the shops in Wilmington, Friday, and passed through this city to the Communipaw yard where it was inspected and approved by the Superintendent before being placed upon the road.

Monday evening the car made its first trip. President Howard and his luxurious party left New York at 5:30. Some of the lady members of their families accompanied the car on its inaugural trip. There has been so much of fancy and so little of fact written about this palatial club-room on wheels, that the people at large really know little about it. Here is the first complete and true description ever published:

The car was built by the Harlan & Hollingsworth company, builders and fitters of some of the finest yachts in the country. It is the largest car in this section of the World, and weighs about eighty thousand pounds. The length is 72 feet, width 9½ feet, and diameter of the wheels—of which there are twelve—3 feet. The windows set close together with mirrors between, are each a sheet of plate glass 2x3 feet and run up so that the bottom of the sash is way above the line of vision.

Inside is everything that can be desired, from plush covered sofas to polished metal umbrella stands. The interior is divided through the centre so that in one end the smokers may enjoy themselves without discourtesy to lady guests. The partition, however, is of glass so that the entire car is visible inside from end to end. The woodwork of the interior is mahogany, with a ceiling of oak paneling. The only decoration is a light tracery of colorless Autumn leaves on the ceiling. The seats are movable and the most comfortable that can be imagined. They are what are called "Bank of England chairs," of mahogany and pressed leather fitted to the sitter's back. In the centre of the car and at each side of the door leading to the platform of the smoking end, are soft sofas. Seats are provided for at least seventy occupants. The floor is covered with expensive carpets.

About the card tables are such fixtures as may be of convenience in the way of ash cups, match safes, card lockers, etc. An extensive lavatory and saloon is provided, as well as a roomy coat closet. Every modern improvement *for thorough*ly lighting, heating and ventilating the car has been put in with the same thoughtlessness of expense that is evidenced everywhere. The exterior of the car is of two shades of olive green, relieved by a light penciling of gold. The hand rails are of coppered-brass. The cost of the car was between $15,000 and $18,000.

A Word With Rahway and Somerville.

The Crescents have defeated the Acmes twice this season—once by a score of 3 to 0—yet the Acmes defeated the Rahways 8 to 3. The Crescents defeated the Mets, Saturday, 6 to 4; but the Rahways lost to the Mets, 4 to 7.

The Ridgewoods, it is true, defeated the Crescents 8 to 3 (but it will be different next Monday) and the Rahways, with one of their players as umpire, defeated the Ridgewoods 4 to 3. But everybody says that Rahway stole the game. Livingston of the Ridgewoods refused to pitch, and it is currently reported that all his strikes were called balls, and all the Rahway pitcher's balls were called strikes.

As to Somerville, their team was defeated on Saturday on their own grounds by the Unions of New Brunswick, whom the Crescents defeated by a score of 9 to 0. In view of all this, THE PRESS is justified in remarking that so far as playing ball is concerned, neither Rahway nor Somerville is in it with Plainfield. The last team far out classes them both.

Claim Borough Justice is Unjust.

Jacob Hoppel, of North Plainfield, whose wife was sentenced by Justice Hardy Sunday to thirty days' imprisonment in the county jail for drunkenness and disorderly conduct, claims that Mrs Hoppel has been most unjustly treated, and has secured a Somerville lawyer to institute proceeding for redress. He says that Mrs. Hoppel was grossly abused by Henry Thomas, the landlord, and that it was only when incensed by repeated *attacks that she began to talk in an objec*tionable way. Marshal Rutledge, he adds, was unnecessarily rough in handling Mrs. Hoppel when she was a prisoner, and a sprained ankle and a severely bruised knee, which Dr. A. L. Stillwell of Somerville, is treating, he attributes to the Marshal's abusive treatment. Mrs. Hoppel says that the reason she yelled so Saturday night was because she was wild with thirst owing to the Marshal's refusing to give her a glass of water. The cell in which she was confined, she adds, was unnecessarily unclean. But what the Hoppels most protest against is their treatment at Justice Hardy's hands. They say that he refused to give Mrs Hoppel a fair trial, with opportunity to procure witnesses. All of these things the Borough authorities deny

A Cemetery Without a Grave.

The funeral of the late Benjamin G. Megie, of East Front street, which occurred yesterday afternoon, was attended by a large number of the friends and relatives of the deceased. Interment was made today in Marble Cemetery, New York, where the body of John Ericsson was held previous to its departure for the great inventor's native land.

The Marble Cemetery is one of the most interesting places of burial in the metropolis. It is a quiet and restful spot in the middle of one of the noisiest and most crowded sections of the city. It was the successor of the cemetery attached to the First Presbyterian church when the church stood in Wall street, near New. When the church removed to its present site in 1837 the Marble Cemetery was incorporated by the church people and others, and the present grounds were bought, on Second street, between First and Second avenues. The cemetery does not contain a grave. The ground was filled up in the beginning by underground stone vaults. Long walks traverse it from East to West, and the intervening grassy plots are covered with trees and flowering bushes. There are a few monuments marking the sites of vaults, but the only other stones are the flat marble slabs in the grass.

Many old New Yorkers are buried in the Marble Cemetery, and one of the vaults for many years held the body of President Monroe. Among the rich and honored by whose side John Ericsson lay for more than a year, and with whom the late Benjamin Megie is now at rest, are Robert Fulton, Henry Rankin, John W. Sterling, Marshall O. Roberts, Moses Taylor, Robert Hyslop, Thomas Fraser, Wm. B. Whiting, Andrew S. Norwood, Orenimus Cheesebrough, James Kelso, Jno. R. Skiddy, Robert Bogardus, Frederick S. Winston, John Oothout, Hendrick Booraem, Nathaniel L. Griswold, Isaac Varian, Samuel Kip, Marinus Willett, Wm. H. Hoople, John Bloodgood, Robert and Jas. Lenox, John A. Griswold, Preserved Fish, Jacob Hays, and members of the Ogden, the Quackenbush, and many other old New York Knickerbocker families.

Few children can be induced to take physic without a struggle, and no wonder—most drugs are extremely nauseating. Ayer's Pills, on the contrary, being sugar-coated, are eagerly swallowed by the little ones, and are, therefore, the favorite family medicine.

TEMPTED BEYOND RESISTANCE.

How a Trusted and Respected Clerk Came to Commit His First Crime, and Where It All Has Ended.

The many friends of George W. Curtis, in this city where he lived so long and was so universally popular in society, will be grieved to learn of his fall from the heights of honor where he had always stood so sturdily. It is but another tale of temptation beyond resistance, yet there are certain circumstances surrounding this young man's crime that should temper all condemnation of him.

Curtis had been for years a clerk in the establishment of his step-brother, John P. Plummer who claims to have been robbed and ruined by W. S. Darling. It was under Darling that Curtis received his business education, and the subsequent ease with which Darling could help himself to many thousands of dollars and be permitted to enjoy it to this day unmolested, must have had a disastrous effect on the young man's moral senses.

When Mr. Plummer went out of business and was succeeded by Jas Murphy, the assignee, Curtis still kept his place and also was retained by the New England Company, into whose hands the business passed from the assignee. Curtis's duty was to send purchased goods to different firms in the city for their approval. If the goods were up to the sample they were kept and entered by Curtis as sold. If not satisfactory they were returned to the New England Company. One day a truckman returning with a load of unsatisfactory goods to Broadway and Leonard street, disappeared with his load and Curtis had to make the loss good. In order to get the money, it is alleged, he began to steal.

After that he would send goods below sample to different firms and when they were refused he would sell them to an East side auction house of shady repute and pocket the money. Then he would enter the goods on his books as sold at thirty, sixty and ninety days' credit. The first half-dozen of these bills he made good but fearing ultimate detection he decided to sell as much as possible of the company's goods at once, and leave the city. This he did, getting about $6,000 at one haul.

A Business-like Offer.

For many years the manufacturers of Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy have offered, in good faith, $500 reward for a case of Nasal Catarrh which they cannot cure. The Remedy is sold by druggists at only 50 cents. This wonderful remedy has fairly attained a world-wide reputation. If you have dull, heavy headache, obstruction of the nasal passages, discharges falling from the head into the throat, sometimes profuse, watery, and acrid, at others, thick, tenacious, mucous, purulent, bloody and putrid; if the eyes are weak, watery and inflamed; if there is ringing in the ears, deafness, hacking or coughing to clear the throat, expectoration of offensive matter, together with scabs from ulcers; the voice being changed and has a nasal twang; the breath offensive; smell and taste impaired; sensation of dizziness, with mental depression, a hacking cough and general debility, you are suffering from nasal catarrh. The more complicated your disease, the greater the number and diversity of symptoms. Thousands of cases annually, without manifesting half of the above symptoms, result in consumption, and end in the grave. No disease is so common, more deceptive or dangerous, or less understood, or more unsuccessfully treated by physicians.

CONSUMPTION,

IN its first stages, can be successfully checked by the prompt use of Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. Even in the later periods of that disease, the cough is wonderfully relieved by this medicine.

"I have used Ayer's Cherry Pectoral with the best effect in my practice. This wonderful preparation once saved my life. I had a constant cough, night sweats, was greatly reduced in flesh, and given up by my physician. One bottle and a half of the Pectoral cured me."—A. J. Eidson, M. D., Middleton, Tennessee.

"Several years ago I was severely ill. The doctors said I was in consumption, and that they could do nothing for me, but advised me, as a last resort, to try Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. After taking this medicine two or three months I was cured, and my health remains good to the present day."—James Birchard, Darien, Conn.

"Several years ago, on a passage home from California, by water, I contracted so severe a cold that for some days I was confined to my state-room, and a physician on board considered my life in danger. Happening to have a bottle of Ayer's Cherry Pectoral, I used it freely, and my lungs were soon restored to a healthy condition. Since then I have invariably recommended this preparation."—J. B. Used in the principal churches for communion. Excellent for females, weakly persons and the aged.

ADOPTED IN HOSPITALS AS THE BEST FOR INVALIDS.

Speer's Port Grape Wine,

FOUR YEARS OLD.

THIS Celebrated Wine is the pure juice of the dead ripe Oporto Grape, raised in Speer's vineyards, and left hang until they shrink and become partly raisined before gathering. Its invaluable are unsurpassed by any other Wine. Being produced under Mr. Speer's own personal supervision, its purity and genuineness are guaranteed by the principal Hospitals and Boards of Health who have examined it. The youngest child and the weakest invalids use it to advantage. It is particularly beneficial to the aged and debilitated, and suited to the various ailments that effect the weaker sex.

Tonic and Strengthening Properties

It is in every respect A WINE TO BE RELIED ON.

Speer's Unfermented Grape Juice

Is the juice of the Oporto Grape, preserved in its natural fresh, sweet state as it runs from the press by fumigation, and electricity, thereby destroying the exciter of fermentation. It is perfectly pure, free from spirits, and will keep in any climate.

Speer's (Socialite) Claret

Is held in high estimation for its richness as a Dry Table Wine, especially suited for dinner use.

Speer's P. J. Sherry

Is a Wine of superior character, and partakes of the rich qualities of the grape from which it is made.

Speer's P. J. Brandy

IS A PURE distillation of the grape, and stands unrivalled in this country for medical purposes.

It has a peculiar flavor, similar to that of the grapes from which it is distilled.

CITY DEPARTMENT.

OFFICIAL PAPER OF THE STATE, THE COUNTY AND THE CITY, AND HAS THE LARGEST CIRCULATION OF ANY PAPER PUBLISHED IN THE COUNTY OF UNION.

J. A. DEMAREST, - - - City Editor.

—Oh, move the freight house!

—Plainfield's [illegible] are coming home.

—The public schools will reopen September 8.

—An epidemic of house fires seems to have reached Plainfield. Have you noticed it?

—"Bob White" calls from nearly every field, making glad the heart of every sportsman with the prospect of full game bags in the frosty November days.

—The Nepsique News is of the opinion that "besides cuisine, [illegible] other desirable things for health and comfort are to be found at Hotel Netherwood, not forgetting the best of good comradeship."

—The Elizabeth Journal in speaking of the ball game between the Alerts of that city and the Westfield team, praises particularly the playing of McLaughlin of the latter, who is an ex-member of the Crescents.

—George F. White, insurance broker, has handed to E. J. Waring, of Myrtle avenue, a check for $436, the full amount of insurance claimed by Mr. Waring on the loss of his barn by fire last week Thursday.

—The New Brunswick Home News says that the Unions are sure now that they can beat the Crescents, because they have gained a victory over the West Ends. But the West Ends haven't defeated the Crescents, and won't, this season.

—Edward Stelle Randolph, a Plainfield wheelman, came to grief on the Front street road near Bound Brook on Saturday, by running his bicycle into a ditch filled with muddy water. Besides receiving a thorough drenching, he damaged his wheel.

—What resembled a tornado passed over the Southwestern portion of the city during the severe storm Friday night. Trees were uprooted and twisted off, and fields of standing corn leveled to the ground. The blow lasted about three minutes.

—Farmers who have suffered at the hands of poultry thieves are taking advantage of the new law making it a penal offense to steal fowls, and are having the offenders arrested. The penalty is $100 fine, or imprisonment for a term not exceeding three years.

—Under the heading, "Better Give It Up, Young Man," the Westfield Standard says that Lindsley Woolley, the young man who had a fit in a Somerset street printing office recently, has been made subject to fits by habitual cigarette smoking.

—Yust Gauthier, the carpenter who accused Adolphe Renoux, of Mt. Bethel, of beating, imprisoning and robbing him, had no witnesses to substantiate his charges, and Justice Hardy on Saturday released Renoux on his paying the costs of the suit and restoring to Gauthier his carpentry tools.

—Chief Doane and his two assistants were on duty at Music Hall, on Tuesday, from the time the first of the unusual crowd arrived until the last left. He refused to permit a camp stool to be used in any part of the house, although all sorts of prices for the privilege were offered by the unfortunate ones who could buy standing room only.

—Mrs. Maggie Cash appeared in court before Justice Nodyne on Tuesday to testify that Mrs. Catherine Day owed her $55 and interest for three years. Mrs. Day said she had refused to pay the claim because Mrs. Cash owed her for a great deal of dressmaking. Interesting contradictions of testimony were made, and the court reserved its decision.

—At six o'clock Sunday morning the coldest hour of Summer was registered. The thermometer at that time had worked down to 52 degrees. It was the turning-point in the cool wave. Warmer weather came today. The mercury began tumbling Saturday, when fall coats were in demand, and when a stiff cool breeze from the Northwest gave a forcible premonition of Autumn.

—The Plainfield Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals has authorized its counsel, W. A. Coddington, to appeal to a higher court the case against Walter Smalley, who is accused of overdriving, overworking, and cruelly beating Andrew Hoff's horse. Smalley was tried twice. The first jury disagreed, standing eleven to one for conviction. The second seemed to consider him to blame, but rendered a verdict of not guilty, because, it was said, he had been prosecuted enough.

No Question about All That.

A correspondent writes and asks: "Is not the purchase of The Times an evidence of the repudiation of the same by the Republican party? And hasn't a [illegible] fallen very low when its own party [illegible] it off?"

The Opinion of a Great Paper.

The New York World says that in Plainfield "There are two daily and two weekly papers. Of these the most influential is the Plainfield Daily Press, which is owned by W. L. and A. L. Force, and is edited by J. A. Demarest."

Three Great Games.

The Alerts of Elizabeth who play the Crescent League team here next Monday morning, defeated the Westfield team last Saturday; and the Westfield's think they can beat the Crescents.

The batting order of the Edgewoods who will play the Crescent League team again on Monday afternoon, will be the same as it was the day the Edgewoods defeated the Crescents, August 9.

As the Crescent League team defeated the [illegible] who are the only rivals of the colored Cuban Giants, the latter will send its strongest team here Saturday to win. The batting order of the visitors will be: Boyd, [illegible] field; Bell, second base; Woods, [illegible]; B. Jackson, catcher; Garrison, short stop; W. Jackson, first base; Cook, [illegible] field; Nelson, left field; [illegible], pitcher; Pepper, extra man and pitcher.

The Statement of THE PRESS and the People for the Removal of the Freight House.

(From the DAILY PRESS of Nov. 11, 1889.)

The following correspondence explains itself, and will be welcome news, so far as it goes, to the people:

Mr. J. H. Olhausen, Gen'l Supt., Central Railroad of New Jersey:

DEAR SIR:—The people of Plainfield are all very serious about having the unsightly freight house with its [illegible] yard, moved from the center of the city. It is now an eyesore and a nuisance.

[illegible]

Now that you have taken the outside tracks for the running of freight and coal trains, they may be kept clear, and, in consequence, there is but one track left from which to unload the fifty odd cars a day billed to Plainfield.

Come up and see just how inconvenient to your freight receivers, and objectionable to your resident passengers, is the old house and the yard.

Very truly yours,
THE DAILY PRESS.

C. R. R. Co. of N. J.,
OFFICE OF
GENERAL SUPERINTENDENT,
JERSEY CITY, N. J., Nov. 16, 1889.

Mr. J. A. Demarest, Plainfield, N. J.:

DEAR SIR:—I beg to acknowledge receipt of your favor of the 11th, and desire to say that the matter will receive attention at my hands. It is a question, however, whether a more central location with less inconvenience to our patrons who desire to receive and deliver freight, could be secured.

Yours truly,
J. H. OLHAUSEN,
Gen'l Supt.

[The present situation of the freight house is no more convenient to all, and not so convenient to most others, as many more available places out of sight, could be found. There is no necessity for a "central location" for the delivery of freight. It is all carted to and from the yard. So because a few trucks may have to drive a block or two further than now, is no reason that the people South of the tracks should be compelled to tramp all around town to get to the station or home again.—ED.]

Fractured An Arm and Broke Her Nose.

Mrs. Mary Vermeule, of 51 West Second street, fell down stairs at four o'clock Saturday morning, fractured an arm, and broke her nose, besides receiving other injuries that may prove serious. She is still prostrated, and physicians are in attendance.

He Cometh in November.

A letter from the Rev B. Fay Mills, the evangelist, gives the glad tidings that he hopes to begin the work of the Lord in Plainfield on Monday, November 3. May his labors be abundantly blessed, should be the daily prayer of every Christian, and the blessing will surely follow.

Ran From the Rain and Sprained His Ankle.

Will F. Arnold, of College place, sprained his ankle severely Friday night, while hurrying home from the City National Bank to avoid a shower. He will be confined to the house for several days.

Fell From The Stable Roof.

John Flynn of Scotch Plains, was working on the roof of Richard Day's stable on West Fourth street, on Friday, when he slipped and fell to the ground, fifteen feet below. He was greatly bruised by the fall, and was rendered nearly senseless, but no bones were broken. He is still under a physician's care.

PERSONALIA.

Dr. T. S. Davis and family sailed from Europe for home, on Saturday last.

Sophia, wife of Lewis A. [illegible], died on Monday at the home of Isaac T. Moore, in Warren Township.

The Rev. Dr. E. F. Ketcham, pastor of the First Presbyterian church, sailed from Europe Thursday for home.

The Rev. E. E. Smythe, who has been traveling in Europe during the summer, returned home by the Steamship Umbria, from Liverpool and Queenstown, Saturday. The vessel arrived at the Bar at 12:34 P. M.

Cards are out for the wedding of Fannie E. Titus, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Daniel Vanderveer, to Alfred J. [illegible], at Springdale, among the hills back of North Plainfield, Monday afternoon, September 1.

The Rev. L. C. Rogers, Professor of History at Alfred University, Alfred Centre, N. Y., and father of Chas. Potter Rogers of Plainfield, is visiting at the home of Chas. Potter, Jr., on West Seventh street.

The Rev. W. C. Stinson of Dunellen, who preached at the First Presbyterian church Sunday, was given the closest attention by large congregations, both morning and evening. His sermons were very interesting and practical.

Miss Julia E. Bulkley, Principal of the Plainfield Public Schools, who for more than a year has been touring in the Old World, arrived home Friday, on the steamship Normannia, from Hamburg. The vessel reached the Bar at 2:33 A. M.

Louisa Janeway, widow of Benjamin Tuers, died at her home in Scotch Plains, "Applethorpe," August 21, in the ninety-fourth year of her age. The funeral was held from All Saint's church Friday morning. Mrs. Tuers was formerly a resident of Bermuda.

Mrs. H. VanDuser of Wilkesbarre, Pa., is visiting her aunt, Mrs. Geo. L. Van Emburgh of East Second street. Mrs. VanDuser's house was totally wrecked by Tuesday's cyclone, and because of the loss of her home she seeks Plainfield as a city of refuge.

Ex-Judge Ulrich is located by the New York Times at Spring Lake, where he will remain until about the 1st of October. Mr Ulrich said Saturday"—the correspondent adds—"that he would not be in the contest for the Republican Senatorial nomination from Union county."

The Rev. J. P. Brokaw, pastor of the Reformed church at Freehold, N. J., exchanged pulpits Sunday with the Rev. Cornelius Schenck, of Trinity Reformed church, this city. He delivered a well-written message from God's holy word, to a large congregation, at both the morning and evening services.

Among the names of the new arrivals from Plainfield, at "The Brunswick," Mt. Pocono, Penn., appear Miss J. Atkins, Mrs. J. Jackson and daughter, Addie, the Misses Virginia and Emma Fish, Mrs. Andrew McKinney, Miss McKinney and Robert McKinney, Miss Madge L. Sutphen, Alfred E. Holmes, and Miss Alice Holmes.

Benjamin G. Mogie died at his home on East Front street Thursday, in the 77th year of his age. He had been a sufferer from paralysis many years, but when in his prime was one of Plainfield's most active citizens. He was a jeweler, and after engaging in business in New York removed to Plainfield and established himself on North avenue. His affliction rendered him powerless to move or to speak, though he was able to recognize his friends, and death seemed a happy release.

Gershom [illegible]'s many friends of both parties, who can't help admiring him for his earnest devotion to the Republicans through thick and thin, without reward, for years, will be glad to learn that at last his faithfulness has received recognition in the shape of an appointment in the New York custom house. His hours are from 9 to 4, and he never has to take his coat off. A PRESS reporter asked him what he was doing, and he replied, "charging orders." He was asked what he got, and he said, "ain't got nothing yet!"

LET US HAVE THE TRUTH.

One of Many Demands The Borough's Half [illegible].

TO THE EDITOR OF THE PRESS:—It should be the chief end of the local newspaper not only to print the local news, but to watch the interests of its community, to warn against dangers, to advocate whatever is beneficial. THE PRESS, therefore, acts in its line of duty in printing all that rightly concerns the people of Plainfield in reference to an enterprise of such vital importance as the Water Works.

The City Council of 1889—in good part made up of able business men having considerable interests at stake in our city—concluded a contract with responsible men for the construction of a water works on terms approved by the city's attorney, by the Mayor, and, in a general way, by the people. It has never been charged that any city official had any improper interest in the promotion of the enterprise. The construction of the works is now going on subject to the approval of the city's engineer; no complaint has been published in regard to the character of the work; and the people of Plainfield, with more or less impatience, are awaiting the abundant supply of pure water which they have a right to expect within a year. There is no doubt that such a supply will add to the comfort and safety of our people, and will add to the attractiveness of our city as a residence, in many ways.

At this stage of the work a voice is raised against its progress, an obstacle—in the shape of a threatened law suit—thrown in its path. Is it a citizen of, or even a dweller in Plainfield who thus protests? Oh, no! the complaint of Israel cometh from an alien, a man of Jersey City. Neither Israel nor his attorneys are known here, and few of our people know aught of the old charter which is to be dragged out of the past as an obstacle.

What, then, means this attack? Who are its projectors? What are their motives? These are questions which the taxpayers and citizens of Plainfield will ask, and it is the office and duty of THE PRESS to investigate the source and object of the attack, and truthfully to publish every detail relating thereto. Your efforts in this line will gratify the people, will enhance the value of your paper and so yield a sufficient reward.

Let us have the truth.

JEWS AND CHRISTIANS AT ODDS.

A Row in the Borough Over the Sale of Sacred Meat.

An odd controversy involving religious and civil rights is in progress in North Plainfield. It arose over the fact that the Hebrew population eat no meat except that killed and sold to them by their rabbi. The Jewish pastor patronizes the slaughter-house of Nicholas Gisser at Netherwood, and accompanies Mr. Gisser about town, dealing out daily meat to the Hebrew patrons. A short time ago Marshal Thomas Rutledge of North Plainfield came across Gisser's wagon while it was on its rounds of distribution. The rabbi was for a moment absent, but Gisser was there, and after Rutledge had expressed admiration of the meat he asked Gisser to sell him some. This Gisser refused to do, on the ground that the meat had been killed by the rabbi for his flock, and was sacred, and the rabbi would not permit Christians to have it. Rutledge insisted and took a piece of meat. Gisser protested but nevertheless pocketed a dollar bill in exchange for the merchandise. Rutledge then arrested Gisser on the charge of peddling without a license. Gisser offered to take Rutledge in the wagon to the Borough Clerk to pay the license fee, and stated that he was too weak from asthmatic trouble to walk. Rutledge refused to ride, and forced Gisser along the street to the Clerk's office. Clerk Brokaw was absent, so Rutledge started with Gisser towards the lock-up. Subsequently the affair was smoothed over, but the rabbi demanded that Rutledge surrender the piece of sacred meat his Christian hands had profaned. Gisser has made a complaint against Rutledge, and demands his arrest. *A hearing in the case may be reached to*day. The Jews will rally around Gisser.

Twelve Hundred People Enjoy Thatcher's Minstrels.

The largest audience Music Hall ever held was present Tuesday night and made the chandelier and windows rattle with the welcome they gave Thatcher and Marble, and the appreciation they bestowed upon the whole show. Thatcher's minstrel company is the best in all its parts upon the road today.

The opening included the usual vocal and conversational parts, with the addition of a very pleasing number not down on the programme. Edward Marble was presented by his friends in the Crescent League with a handsome, gold-mounted, alligator-skin traveling and toilet bag. It contained every requisite from razor to whisk broom, and all its bottles and boxes were of the finest cut glass and gold. Remembering the old superstition that a rabbit's foot brings good luck to the possessor, Marble's friends put a whole rabbit in their gift to him. John M. Crane made the presentation, which the recipient accepted in as happy a speech as his surprise would permit. Thatcher received a basket of roses almost as high as himself.

Of the solos in the opening, Jose's was the best and he was accorded a double encore. The other singing people equal any in the business today. The accompaniments were well worked up, and the organ part is a great addition. The act and eccentric dancing that John Coleman gave as an encore, is one of the freshest and best in its line that has been done in years.

Thatcher himself was well received by his fellow citizens down stairs, but he has never pleased the gallery since he used to play the school boy and get right down and make a fool of himself. He is too cultured for the masses now—at least in one-night towns. He is better appreciated in big cities. Cinquevalli is great. You have seen lots of jugglers but there is only one Cinquevalli. His act was by far the best in the olio.

Interests in Plainfield Preferred.

R. W. Rice, the North Plainfield grocer, has gone to Wilkesbarre, Pa., to dispose of some handsome property he owns at that place. He wishes to invest the capital in Plainfield instead. Since leaving Wilkesbarre he has been transferring his interests from that city to Plainfield as rapidly as possible.

His Brother's Death No Warning.

Louis Burgeois, whose brother was killed by the cars, some time ago, through his own heedlessness in stealing rides, was arrested by Special Officer Stephen B. Hope on Friday for trespassing on moving freight trains. Next morning young Bourgeois was sentenced by Justice Nash to thirty days' imprisonment in the county jail.

"Going Slow" With Mr. Waring.

The Plainfield Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals still has under consideration the case of G. T. Waring, whom the Society thinks is guilty of cruelty in checking his horses too high. At a discussion Monday night it was the sense of the Society that Mr. Waring was violating the laws, but it was thought best to "go slow" in proceedings against him, and no definite plan of action was chosen, though the members seemed to have a vague idea that in time they would take the case into the Courts.

CHAUTAUQUA CRITICISM.

A Stir Over Bishop Vincent's Absence—Plainfielders and Recognition Day—Dr. Hurlbut a Shining Light.

A great stir has been caused at Chautauqua by the publication in The Assembly Herald of an editorial criticising severely the action of the Bishops of the Methodist Episcopal church in sending Bishop Vincent away from Chautauqua. The eighth recognition service of the Reading Circle was observed yesterday, and it was the first from which the Bishop has been absent. Says the editorial:

"Much complaint over the Bishop's absence is heard. 'Why,' ask the disappointed, 'did the Bishops arrange their plan of work so as to compel him to be away from Chautauqua at this time? Are they not in sympathy with the movement? Do they not believe in the education of the people?' These are bold questions, it is true; nevertheless they are frequent ones. Many hundreds of people, many of these loyal Methodists, are raising them. We believe that a majority of the Bishops of the Methodist Church are in sympathy with the Chautauqua plan of popular education; but to send Bishop Vincent to the Pacific Coast for the month of August seems a peculiar way in which to express this sympathy. The work there could have been done as well by some other Bishop not now holding conferences, and Bishop Vincent might have attended to his episcopal duties just as effectively in the Fall and with as great loyalty to his Church. Such an arrangement would have allowed him to be at his post here this month, when he would have reached 10,000 people for every 100 he will touch in his visit to the West. There ought not to be a shadow of reason for such criticism as these questions imply on the administration of a great Christian Church, especially in its relations to a movement which is so thoroughly in harmony with the Bible and all Christian effort as is Chautauqua. Think of the Romish Church, the Protestant Episcopal, the Baptist or any other great ecclesiastical organization, treating a popular movement for the public good after this fashion. The action of the Bishops is thought to be the more significant since Dr. T. L. Flood, the editor of The Chautauquan, recently withdrew from the Erie Conference to carry on his work, the Bishops having refused to appoint him to the editorship."

Recognition Day was celebrated with chimes, processions, decorations, singing and speechmaking. About 450 graduate readers of the C. L. S. C., class of 1890, received certificates. After the pageant of the morning everybody trooped over to the Amphitheatre, where the Rev. Dr. J. L. Hurlbut of Plainfield, presided over the public recognition. There were on the platform Dr. J. L. Hurlbut, Mrs. John H. Vincent and others from Plainfield. Mrs. Alice Freeman Palmer, ex-President of Wellesley College, who delivered the address, was greeted with the waving of handkerchiefs, Dr. Hurlbut's Chautauqua salute, by an audience of 6,000 people.

In the afternoon Dr. Hurlbut made a speech of salutation to the new class and presented the diplomas. At night there was a C. L. S. C., and platform meeting in the Amphitheatre, at which another address was delivered by Dr. Hurlbut. Ernest Knauff of Plainfield was elected a Trustee of the Protestant Episcopal church of Chautauqua.

FIRE IN THE BOROUGH.

E. J. Waring's Barn and Stables Burned at Midnight.

Another fire attributed to incendiaries occurred in the Borough August 20, when the barn and stables of Edward J. Waring of Myrtle avenue were burned to the ground.

Flames were discovered issuing from the building at midnight. Nelson Bats, Mr. Waring's coachman, was asleep in the servant's quarters, and was awakened by the shouts of neighbors. The barn was situated back from the house, near the junction of Willow and Giraud avenues, and was hidden by the dense foliage of shade trees. By the time Bats reached the place the stables were ablaze, but he managed in the teeth of the fire, to save the cattle from destruction. Everything else was consumed, including sleighs, harnesses and fittings, hay and grain.

The Borough fire alarm was sounded, and as soon as horses could be procured the engine was conveyed to the scene of the fire, but the hose carriage was delayed for lack of men to haul it, and was then taken some distance out of the way. When all was in readiness water was pumped from Green brook at Giraud avenue. By this time, however, the barn, stables and contents were a mass of flames.

The loss over the insurance is estimated at about $500. The total loss is probably $4,000.

There had been no fire, lanterns or lights of any description about the burned building, and the consequent belief is that the place was set afire.

No White Folks Beat.

The ball game Thursday between the Athletics and the colored Stars of this city, ended according to the score given below. The colored boys showed the need of practice, and want to play again to prove it. The whites have not yet consented to try another match. It was the best ten cent show of the season.

An Abused Wife Seeks Redress.

Mary O'Donnell, of West Front street, Evona, appeared before City Judge Coddington Wednesday, to testify concerning the misconduct of her husband, Patrick, and a boarder, John Hewson. The two men had been drinking, she said, and when she reprimanded them had used bad language to her. They gave her such violent verbal abuse that she had them arrested. Hewson pleaded guilty and was fined $5. O'Donnell was still impertinent towards his better half, and impolitely intimated that her story was false. He was adjudged guilty, nevertheless, and was fined $10. The two prisoners were so independent about paying the fines that they were promptly sent to jail.

Sending Two Thousand Miles For Plainfield Candy.

The following letter from five Plainfield young men to Barnes the confectioner, shows how they starve for good things away from home:

BELKNAP, YOUNG CO.,
TEXAS AUG. 18, 1890.

DEAR MR. BARNES:—Please find enclosed a check, which we fellows who make up the Plainfield contingent here, would like you to invest in candy for us, reserving enough to pay the postage on the same to us. We all agree that we haven't had a decent bit of candy since we left Plainfield and after living on bacon and biscuits ever since, we have been here, we think we can appreciate a good article of candy.

Trusting that we may have a reply from you soon, we remain your sincere friends

Don't give up, there is a cure for catarrh and cold in the head. Thousands testify that Ely's Cream Balm has entirely cured them. It is a safe and pleasant remedy. It is applied into the nostrils. It is not a liquid or snuff. Cleanses by absorbing and healing. Price 50c.

Sought for the last hundred years; a remedy for catarrh, hay fever and cold in the head, found at last in Ely's Cream Balm. Safe and pleasant to use and easily applied into the nostrils. It gives relief at once and a thorough treatment positively cures. Price 50 cents.

A BROTHER'S BRUTALITY.

A Sister Abused and Cast Adrift—The Grand Jury Should Hear the Charges.

Henrietta Goetze, the invalid sister of Otto Hartman, of North Plainfield, told so undeviating a story of her brother's maltreatment of her, before Justice Hardy Aug. 20, that the Justice should decide to hold Hartman under bonds to await the action of the Grand Jury.

Mrs. Goetze says that Otto owed her considerable money, and because he made no payments, though he knew she was in want, she went to his house from Boston and sought to collect the debt. Instead of treating her kindly, and giving her assistance, she alleges, he locked her up in a room and beat her cruelly.

For two hours she was kept on the witness-stand, afternoon Aug. 20, telling her story, and so admirably did she conduct herself, and so frank and convincing were her statements, that Justice Hardy was forced to say in comment that he believed her implicitly.

After one beating, Mrs. Goetze said, she was so weak and exhausted from her brother's brutality that she could scarcely crawl to her couch, and lay as one dead for two days. Among the instances of cruelty she cited was his throwing her to the floor when she sought to flee from his presence and crushing her prostrate body by jouncing up and down on his knees. Even the brother's own story was considered favorable to the woman's case, and the testimony of Dr. Carman and Dr. Mattison clinched the nails driven by the prosecution. The physicians had examined Mrs. Goetze, after a severe beating, and had found her in a deplorable physical condition. Through Marshal Becker Hartman had asked them to decide whether she ought not to be removed to an insane asylum, and they had pronounced her perfectly sane.

The hearing in the case occupied six hours. When it was ended Hartman announced that Henrietta need not expect further shelter in his house, and, though she was penniless, he turned her out for the night. Her counsel, Wm. A. Coddington, who had taken her case out of charity because he believed her to be a wronged woman, furnished her with funds to pay for lodging at a hotel.

IS ALL THIS MONEY WASTED?

Ugly Rumors Afloat Which Plainfield Contributors Deny.

Pundita Ramabai, who came to this country from India a year or two ago, enlisted great interest and secured abundant financial aid through her earnest and affecting lectures in Plainfield and other cities, concerning her scheme for helping the child-widows of her native land, does not seem to have been very successful in carrying her plans into effect, if one may credit the Sacramento Record-Union. The gentle Pundita collected no less than $30,000 in California alone, it is alleged, and was joined there by Sarah D. Hamlin, who has aided in securing contributions.

"Since her sojourn in India," the Record-Union says, "Miss Hamlin has written some very interesting letters to a San Francisco daily, in which there has been an inauspicious lack of reference to the great reform to be instituted by the Pundita. Now comes the intelligence that the Pundita Ramabai is residing near Bombay, having a house a little out of the city, and having caged, corralled or captured for the purpose of her experiment one child-widow. Just exactly what manipulation this single occupant of the great reformatory is to undergo to reform her from the original depravity of being a child-widow we are not informed."

Members of the Ramabai Circle of Plainfield, however, claim that the Pundita is really doing a great work among her benighted fellow-countrywomen, and they will write to Ramabai for full information in refutation of the statements of the Record-Union.

THREATENED BY "WHITE CAPS, NO. 9:"

A Member of the First Church of Christ, Who Has Been a Citizen Here for Seventeen Years, Accused of a Scandalous Charge.

Edward Wilson, who has been a resident of this city since 1873, and now lives with his wife and children in Hetfield row, Arlington avenue, received in Tuesday afternoon's mail a letter signed "White Caps No. 9, First warning." The letter accused him of a scandalous neglect of his wife and threatened him with bodily injury. The letter also said: "You are playing ball in two yards."

Mr. Wilson was seen by a PRESS reporter, and said he was ready any moment to meet the charges brought against him and to vindicate himself and all concerned. He was also ready to meet the "White Caps." The scandal, he said, was started by a lot of gossips and enemies. It coupled his name and affections with a married woman who is an intimate friend of his wife's. When the talk first spread, he demanded an investigation by a committee of his fellow members in the First Church of Christ of which the Rev. Mr. Cleaver is pastor.

He, and his wife, and the "other lady" testified before the committee, and an entire vindication, he says, resulted. Wilson says the "other lady's" husband told him he was convinced of his wife's innocence or Wilson would have heard from him. It was supposed that the vindication of the church committee had smothered the scandal, and Wilson is at a loss to know why it is started again. He says that while a collector for a weekly payment insurance company, he has called regularly at the "other lady's" house when her husband has been away. But such call was strictly on business to collect the insurance assessments.

A "New Street" in Plainfield.

Transfers of real estate in this city were recorded Tuesday as follows:

Mary B. Loomis and husband, of North Plainfield, to Clarence J. Rice and Robert W. Rice, of North Plainfield, lot near Elm place, Plainfield, 40x99 feet, $40.

Clarence J. Rice, Robert W. Rice and Ruth H. Rice, his wife, all of Plainfield, to John H. Kitchen, of New Market, land on a new street in Plainfield, 126 feet Northeast from Elm Place, 45x175 feet, $1,250.

Young People Give a Circus for Charity's Sweet Sake.

Ferdie Lissignolo, Nelson Warren, Bert Rockwell, Bert Runyon, and Cal Runyon, gave a circus in the Lissignolo barn, Monday, for the benefit of the Plainfield Children's Home. The young people entertained a generous audience with acrobatic exhibitions, clown jokes and performances, and Wild West tableaux. The contortionist of the troupe gave a thrilling performance in midair, on the trapeze at the top of the hay-mow. The sum of eight dollars was realized, and youthful hearts were made supremely happy.

A Sunstroke Fatal After Years of Interval.

A little over two years ago Theo. J. Larow, a hard-working, industrious mechanic, and for many years a resident of this city, showed indications of brain trouble, the result of a sunstroke received while in the army, which made his removal to the Morris Plains Asylum necessary. He died at that institution a short time ago, and on Saturday afternoon was buried in Hillside Cemetery. The funeral ceremonies were under the auspices of Major Robert Anderson Post, G. A. R., Abel S. Titsworth, Commander, and the sermon was preached by its Adjutant, the Rev. L. E. Livermore of New Market. The deceased leaves a large and interesting family residing on West Fourth street.

BIG BLAZE FROM A PARLOR MATCH.

Exploding Gasoline Kills a Horse and Almost Burns a Boy to Death.

The rolling of a barrel of gasoline over a parlor match lying on the barn floor, was the cause of the fire on West Fifth street Monday afternoon. The barn, which was owned by John Darling, as announced in the accurate and exclusive report of the outbreak of the fire published in THE PRESS of Monday night, was situated at the rear of the house occupied by Paul F. Wachenhusen. Mr. Wachenhusen recently sold out his Home Oil route to Wm. H. B. Drake, harness maker, of Orchard place, and Mr. Drake kept his oil stored in the Darling barn. Monday afternoon two boys stopped at the Wachenhusen house and asked Mrs. Wachenhusen for some matches. Thinking that they intended to make a bonfire of a heap of old rubbish near the house, she gave them what they wished. Ten minutes afterwards a son of Mr. Drake started to roll a barrel of gasoline into the Darling barn. He saw a match on the floor, but paid no attention to it. The barrel rolled forward and struck the match. There was an instant explosion. The tiny flame of the match communicated with the film of oil surrounding the saturated barrel-staves, and a brilliant flash of light, accompanied by a sullen roar, was manifested. The barrel burst, and blazing oil was hurled in every direction. Young Drake rushed screaming from the barn, himself enwrapped in flames. His clothing was scorched, and his arms and face were seriously blistered; his escape from a horrible death is considered miraculous. The flames from the burning oil in a twinkling reached every nook and corner of the barn and adjoining outhouses, and the firemen, called out by the shrieks of Spicer & Hubbard's whistle and the clanging of the alarm bell, found a hot blaze awaiting them. Nothing but a wagon was saved from the burned buildings. A horse was burned to death in sight of the firemen, who were helpless to rescue it, as the barn was a mass of flames before they had reached the ground. Attention was turned towards saving the neighboring dwelling houses, five of which had been set afire by sparks. Four roofs were charred, and the house occupied by Peter Wyckoff, colored, was considerably damaged. The outbreak of the fire was witnessed by a neighbor named Hibbitts and ex-foreman Halstead of the New Brunswick fire department. Mr. Halstead said that he had never seen a fire spread so rapidly, and he was astonished that the injuries of young Drake, who had rushed from the heart of the fire, were so slight. The loss by the fire was about $3,000, partly insured.

AFTER THE BARBER'S SCALP.

A Colored Woman on the Warpath in the Borough.

One of Plainfield's colored belles visited "the colored barber shop" in North Plainfield Thursday afternoon and loudly and vehemently proclaimed that if the proprietor didn't marry her immediately she would instantly take his life. This she swore by sun, moon, stars and prophets, and to indorse her announcement she produced from her bosom a razor. The sight of the keen steel blade so frightened the young man that he paled and promised the girl to do whatever she desired if she would only keep quiet till evening. The damsel left and went to the house of one of the barber's "lidifrends," whom she abused so disgracefully that the insulted one threatened her visitor with arrest if she did not leave the house. The dusky Amazon then walked up and down the street, using language so unusual from a woman's lips, and causing such a scene, that her sanity was questioned. Finally she vanished, and hasn't since appeared in public.

THE HEBREWS VERY ANGRY.

But the Profanation of Their Sacred Meat is Unavenged.

The controversy over the sale of sacred meat to Hebrews in the Borough was ventilated before Justice Hardy Thursday, and as the charge of assault and battery preferred by Nicholas Gisser, butcher, against Thomas Rutledge, Borough Marshal, was not substantiated, the Court discharged the complaint. Gisser's own witnesses acknowledged that Gisser had refused to accompany the Marshal and that Rutledge had used no unnecessary violence. Gisser's claim that he was weak from illness and unable to go to the Borough Clerk's except in a wagon was met by Rutledge's statement that the distance of the proposed walk was only a block and that he feared Gisser's wanting to ride was a tricky attempt to whip up his horse and drive into Plainfield, outside of Rutledge's jurisdiction. Gisser threatens to have Rutledge re-arrested, this time for false imprisonment. The case still affords mild excitement to Borough residents. The Jews are very angry.

The Democratic Meeting Postponed.

The big Democratic meeting which was to have been held at Asbury Park, Sept. 8, has been postponed until Oct. 6.

United States Senator McPherson has written to W. S. McKean, Secretary of the New Jersey State Democratic Association, that the debate on the Tariff bill will last until September 10, and that the Senators and Representatives who are expected to speak at the Park will not leave Washington until that question is settled.

A Plainfielder Plans a Newspaper Palace.

The new $1,000,000 home of The Brooklyn Eagle, now in process of erection, was designed by and is being built under the direction of an architect whose former home was Plainfield. It is to be one of the most superb buildings in Brooklyn, and one of the finest newspaper palaces in the country. The man who is being praised by press and people for its architectural beauty, its convenience, completeness and elegance, is George L. Morse, a son of the oldest Freemason in New Jersey, Timothy Morse, of East Fifth street. Mr. Morse has planned many of the most notable edifices in New York, Brooklyn and other places. The publishers of The Eagle are greatly pleased with Mr. Morse's plans, and say of the architect that he "ranks high among the most capable members of his craft, and for thirty-one years has left on the architecture of Brooklyn the impress of his genius."

Oh, What a Record!

Below is the result of games won and lost by the Crescent League's team this season. Out of 21 games played the home team lost but 4, of which 2 were in April before the present nine was organized. Since then the Crescents have defeated the same teams with ease:

A TYRANT IN FREEDOM'S LAND.

A Despotic Master Beats, Imprisons and Robs an Honest Workman.

Deeds of oppression by a French tyrant in free America are reported from the neighboring village of Mt. Bethel, where the despot holds sway, by a victim of the arbitrary sovereign. The name of the monarch is Adolphe Renoux, a French renegade banished from Gallic shores, and the man rebelling against his violent methods is Yust Gauthier, a fellow-countryman. Gauthier is a carpenter, an honest, straightforward, peaceful man, and for several days has been working for Renoux, whose service he found so obnoxious that he decided to leave. Renoux had given Gauthier money for necessary expenses, but had not paid his wages, and when Gauthier demanded what was due Renoux replied that Gauthier was the debtor instead. Because Gauthier would not return the money paid to him for expenses Renoux refused to pay the wages, and at Gauthier's protest Renoux knocked him down, it is alleged by Yust, cruelly shackled his wrists and tied him fast to a heavy work-bench. Gauthier was kept a prisoner in a position of torture several hours, and was refused his freedom until he signed a paper giving all his carpentry tools to Renoux. When released, Thursday Gauthier, bruised and weak from his master's brutal treatment, dragged him*self painfully along the road to North* Plainfield and told his story to Justice Hardy, who issued a warrant for the arrest of Renoux on various serious charges.

Gauthier had several places of employment waiting him in Plainfield and Dunellen, but through the loss of his tools and the injuries to his body is at present unable to do any work.

His Leg Crushed by Heavy Timber.

Joseph Hoarhound, a North avenue carpenter, was at work on W. P. Smith's new house at Netherwood, Tuesday, passing lumber up to the floor above, when a heavy timber fell and struck him on the leg. Despite the pain caused by the injury, he continued to work until noon, when he began to suffer so intensely that his fellow-workman had to take him home. His leg from the knee down is swollen, black and blue, and it is feared that his ankle is sprained.

The Freight House Nuisance Even Talked of in Newark.

(From the Newark Advertiser.)

Plainfield residents complain of the Central Railroad freight yards, which shut off all approach from one side of the track, and compel the greater part of the Plainfield traveling public to make a circuit under the Park avenue and Broadway bridges, which, to early morning commuters especially, means a considerable loss of time. The tendency is, the citizens claim, to develop North Plainfield, which is on the passenger station side of the track, and to obstruct development in Plainfield.

Most of This Complaint is Uncalled For.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE PRESS:—Would it not be well for the Common Council, instead of putting the whole responsibility upon the county for the increased rate of taxation in Plainfield—the highest ever known—to consider as one cause of the heavy burden placed upon the taxpayers, their own extravagance? There is not a salaried official serving the city, but whose place could be filled by competent men, at about one half the compensation now paid our public servants. There are also other ways to save the people's money, that suggest themselves to every careful observer of public events.

ESPRIT FORT.

Georgie Wants to Know.

Little Georgie Evans, of Washington Park, had been closely observing the old setting hen. He went to the nest each day, counting the time and looking forward to the end of the three weeks when mamma said the little chickens would appear. When they came he stood rapturously gazing upon them, and then said:

"Mamma, who made the little chickens?"

"God made them, Georgie."

"The same God that made the world?"

"Yes."

"Well, my Sunday school teacher told me that God made the world in one week. I don't see why it should take Him three weeks to make a chicken!"

"Well, Georgie, you see—you see—He was in a hurry to get things started when He made the world, but now, I suppose, He takes His time about it."

Activity in Westfield Real Estate.

A large tract of land embracing one hundred acres or more in Westfield, has recently been bargained for by a syndicate for the purpose of arranging a series of villa plots to be improved at once. Another similar enterprise has been started in another part of the town. E. D. Chamberlain sold his farm last week for $10,000. Chauncey B Ripley has sold twelve lots at an average of more than $800 each—mostly on Summit avenue and Boulevard—since he began to offer that property for sale.

The buildings now being erected are of a much better class than heretofore. The new public school building on Academy place will be, when completed, the most costly and imposing structure in the town. There are other important real estate operations in process of negotiation in Westfield, THE PRESS is credibly informed, that are not for the public to know, yet.

B. B. Newton Disappears Again.

Benjamin B. Newton, who was formerly the Superintendent of Transportation of the Philadelphia and Reading Railroad, with his home in Plainfield, and who of late has been confined in the Retreat for the Insane at Merchantville, escaped Sunday from the house of Theodore Evans, 748 North Twentieth street, Phila., and has since failed to return.

He had been brought from the asylum by an attendant to visit a friend who was stopping with the Evanses. While the attendant was absent he walked out of the house.

No fear is entertained by his friends of his failing to return. They say that he has gone away before, but, after looking around, always returned. The story that he intended committing suicide they stigmatized as absolutely false, as he has no such mania.

BE THE SHORT
HAND
FORTUNE!

A line may be a very long one and yet be the shortest between given points. For instance, the St. Paul, Minneapolis & Manitoba Railway has over 3,000 miles of road; magnificently equipped and managed, it is one of the greatest railway systems of this country; for the same reasons it is the traveler's favorite to all points in Minnesota, North Dakota and Montana. It is the only line to Great Falls, the future manufacturing center of the Northwest; to the fertile free lands of the Milk River Valley; and offers a choice of three routes to the Coast. Still it is the shortest line between St. Paul, Minneapolis, Fargo, Winnipeg, Crookston, Moorhead, Casselton, Glyndon, Grafton, Fergus Falls, Wahpeton, Devils Lake, and Butte City. It is the best route to Alaska, China and Japan; and the journey to the Pacific coast, Vancouver, Tacoma, Seattle, Portland and San Francisco will be remembered as the delight of a life-time once made through the wonderful scenery of the Manitoba-Pacific Route. To fish and hunt; to view the magnificence of nature; to revive the spirit; restore the body; to realize the dream of the home-seeker, the gold-seeker, the toiler, or the capitalist, visit the country reached by the St. Paul, Minneapolis & Manitoba Railway. The New York Herald says the following information may be useful to some, if not new to many: Spinach has a direct effect upon the kidneys. A common dandelion used as greens is excellent for the same trouble. Asparagus purges the blood. Celery acts admirably upon the nervous system, and is a cure for rheumatism and neuralgia. Tomatoes act upon the liver. Beets and turnips are excellent appetizers. Lettuce and cucumbers are cooling in their effect upon the system. Onions, garlic, leeks, olive and shallots, all of which are similar, possess medicinal virtue of a marked character, stimulating the circulatory system, and the consequent increase in the saliva and the gastric juice promoting digestion. Red onions are an excellent diuretic, and the white ones are recommended to be eaten raw as a remedy for insomnia. A [illegible] made from onions is regarded by the French as an excellent restorative in debility of the digestive organs.

INDIA'S ENEMIES.

What the Native Population Has to Contend Against.

A FRIEND of mine had a summer residence about nine miles from Lucknow, and I accepted his invitation to spend a few weeks with him. He had about 300 acres of land, a large part of which was forest and thicket, with a creek running across a portion of the estate. The idea in India is to keep cool. Therefore, every house is built with this idea, being provided with as many windows as possible, and always surrounded with verandas. I had never seen a cobra, except in zoological gardens, when I went out there, but I was fated to have an adventure almost as soon as I arrived. My bedroom was at a corner of the second story of the bungalow and contained three windows. These were screened with wire and the sashes taken out. A hammock was slung to hooks in the ceiling, and the room was fairly comfortable even on a very hot night.

On the third morning, just at daybreak, I was aroused from sleep by a noise on the veranda which ran along under my bedroom windows. My hammock was within two feet of one of the windows, and of course the wire cloth admitted every sound from the outside. As the grounds were guarded by two chowkidars, or watchmen, I had no fear of thieves, and therefore had no arms within reach. I lay facing the window, with my face not over thirty inches from the screen, and was wondering what had caused the noise, when a big cobra suddenly lifted his head against the outside of the wire, and his eyes looked into mine. For half a minute it seemed as if my heart did not beat at all. Had the window been unguarded I could not have raised a finger to ward off the attack. The serpent hissed at me and moved his hideous head all over the screen, looking for some break in its surface. It bulged in as he pressed on it, and, knowing how slovenly work is done by Indian servants, I expected it to give way at any instant. After a couple of minutes the snake went to the second window, and then to the third, searching every square inch in hopes to find a way into the room.

After he left the window directly in front of me I might have dropped out of the hammock and got my revolver from the bureau, but it occurred to me that if I provoked the cobra he would be pretty sure to make a more vigorous attack. I therefore lay perfectly quiet, closed my eyes so that I could just peep at him, and after going over all the windows a second and third time, I heard him crawling around the veranda. I then dropped out, opened the door and called to my friend, and he seized a double-barrel shotgun and passed through the halls until he found the serpent on the other side of the house. He had given up seeking an entrance by the windows, and was mounting to the roof when a charge of buckshot fired at close range through the screen cut him almost in two. No one was at all excited. The incident seemed to have no more weight than the visit of a bat.

A week later two of the servants accompanied me on a hunt around the neighborhood after birds. Neither was armed, and both were barefooted, barelegged and barearmed. In the swampy ground along the creek I shot several birds of the snipe species, and we were about to cross it when one of the natives, who was in the lead and following a path, halted, turned back, and quietly said:

"We had better go another way, sahib."

"But why?"

"Because the crocodile might do us harm."

I advanced to the spot where he had halted, and at once made out a huge

HIS EYES LOOKED INTO MINE.

saurian lying in the creek right across the path, and evidently waiting for some one to cross. This was not over a quarter of a mile from the bungalow, and the saurian had evidently come down the creek from a small lake about two miles away. I made ready to fire at him, but one of the natives touched my arm and respectfully said:

"Please don't, sahib. If you anger him he will bring others to make us trouble."

"But he ought to be driven away or killed."

"Yes, but when there are a thousand more in the lake what would you gain?"

He seemed so earnest about it that I turned away. That night a number of the servants crossed the creek to attend some sort of a party, and in the morning a young man was missing. After considerable inquiry it was decided that the crocodile had seized him as he attempted to cross the path. I said to the native who had restrained my fire:

"Now you see what you did. Had I killed the reptile the young man would have been with us this morning."

"Ah, sahib, but you might not have killed him, and then he would have taken two of us."

About six miles below Patna, on the Ganges, in the Bengalee district, a couple of English officers with whom I was acquainted had a shooting box, and I went up with a party to enjoy some sport. It was a wild strip of country along the stream, and although so near to a village this fact did not render game any less abundant. A dozen tigers, three or four panthers and a score of hyenas had been bagged there within two years, but it still remained a favorite lurking ground for big game. As a matter of curiosity I hunted up the returns made to the Government from this 'Baree,' and found that the average of natives bitten by serpents, devoured by crocodiles, or slain by wild beasts was over three per week the year round. These were the figures reported, but only one case in three is reported by the natives, as they persist in believing that the blanks sent in by officials are somehow connected with taxation or official surveillance. Two days before we started a native came in to the civil authorities to report a case. He said:

"We were going to see our father and mother at Nugador, a village seven miles away, my brother and I. We were in a path crossing the forest to save distance. He was ahead. It was about two hours after daylight. We were very happy, and he was telling me a story which his wife had told him, when a tiger suddenly sprang upon him. I stopped. The tiger stood over him, with both paws upon his breast, and looked at me and growled and switched his tail. I could do nothing. I walked backward in the path, and the tiger seized my brother by the shoulder, gave him a half whirl, and then trotted away into the thicket. I have been told that it is my duty to report this."

We had been at the shooting box three days, and had killed a dozen hyenas, a panther, and a couple of big snakes. There were four white men of us in the party, and we had eight or ten native hunters and servants. On the fourth morning, before breakfast, I was [illegible] by [illegible] my foot, and was advised to lie quiet during the day. The house was divided into two rooms, each about twelve feet square, and each having two hammocks in it. The first room was used to store provisions in. The door between the two was a frame covered with wire cloth. There was only one window in each room, and that was provided with a sliding sash, with wire cloth tacked over the outside. The outside door was also a screen, but this was left standing open during the day.

After breakfast one of the natives fixed a poultice of leaves for my wound, and I lay down in a hammock in the inner room. The three other white men went off up the river, accompanied by all the natives except two, one to attend me and the other to see to the cooking. I lay facing the doors, and had a view of the fire and a strip of country beyond it. At nine o'clock we heard the reports of rifles far away. Half an hour later, just as I was elevating my head so that I could read a book which was at hand, I saw a tiger spring upon the two men. They were not at the fire, but a few feet away, under a tree, and their faces were toward me. The animal had therefore approached unseen. He knocked both down, and struck them after they were down, and then stood over their prostrate bodies, and looked at the forest. This was hardly ten feet from the open door. It was so sudden that I lost half a minute, and by the end of that time the tiger left the men and came to the door and looked in. He probably scented me, for he switched his tail and growled, and while he stood there I saw blood on his neck.

My hammock had ceased swinging, and I kept very quiet in hopes the brute would go away. He stood and growled and stared for a minute, and then advanced to the inner door and pushed against it. Had it opened toward me he could have entered, but it opened the other way. With his eyes and nose against the wire he growled in a way to send the chills over me, but I feared to move a finger for fear he would make a dash and come through the cloth. He did rake his teeth along the surface, and also strike the wire two or three times with his paw. He must have hit the sharp ends of some of the wires the last time, for he uttered a yelp and drew back, and after licking his paw for a moment retreated through the open door. As my rifle was in the further room I felt it prudent to lie quiet for a time, and when I did get up the beast had disappeared. I found one of the natives dead, his skull having been crushed by a blow, while the other had received a bite in the shoulder, but was "playing dead" to deceive the beast.

Just before noon the party came in, and then I learned that they had started a pair of tigers out of cover about a mile above. The female had been killed in a gully, but the male, after being wounded, had bolted out of sight. He was the chap who had paid the camp a visit and revenged himself for the injury.—N. Y. Sun.

A TILT WITH FOILS.

Mr. Kelly Teaches His Wife How to Fence.

"THERE!" exclaimed Mr. Kelly, looking up from his paper, "that would be a good thing for you."

"What would?" asked his wife.

"Fencing," replied Mr. Kelly.

"Fencing!" she echoed, in surprise; "I never could build a fence."

"What's the use to be an idiot?" retorted her husband, with considerable asperity; "I mean the art of sword playing. Here—let me read you: 'Fencing is now regarded as fully introduced into fashionable circles for amusement of the ladies. It is a wholesome, fascinating exercise admirably adapted to women. Married ladies are even more benefited than the unmarried'—and lots more to the same effect," said Mr. Kelly. "How d'ye s'pose you'd like it?"

"Well, I don't know," said his wife, doubtfully. "How is it done?"

"Oh, they generally use small swords—foils, they call 'em, but you might begin with a stick, and I'll show you how, if you want me to."

"You say it's fashionable?" Mrs. Kelly hesitatingly asked.

"Says so right here," exclaimed her husband. "What d'ye say," he went on, enthusiastically, "shall we begin now? You need exercise, Martha, and I've noticed for some time that you was becoming sedentary—that's what the paper says right here in this piece. Shall we begin?"

Mrs. Kelly reluctantly consented, and her husband, inspired with the idea, dashed out into the shed, and presently returned with two laths which in his exuberance he had recklessly wrenched off the hen-coop.

"Now, then," he exclaimed, pulling off his coat, while his wife moved the table and chairs out of the way, "this is the way it is done," and he instructed his wife how to hold the representative foil, while he made preliminary passes in the air to demonstrate the method of exchanging blows. "Now, to make it more real and pleasant," he continued, "we'll call it the fencing scene in Hamlet."

"Oh, that will be ever so nice!" Mrs. Kelly exclaimed; "and I'll be Mr. Hamlet."

"Oh, yes," sneered Mr. Kelly, coldly, "a healthy Hamlet you'd be. Who ever saw a Hamlet with red hair and a mole on his chin? I'll be Hamlet myself."

His wife graciously yielded the point to save dispute and contented herself with acting as Mr. Laertes, the other character in the play.

"Come on, now," said Mr. Kelly, assuming a jaunty position, with his lath in the air and his left hand behind his back for protection.

His wife grabbed her lath with both hands, threw it energetically aloft and knocked a globe off the chandelier.

"Oh, that's the way!" growled Mr. Kelly, as she stooped to pick up the debris. "Hamlet would have done just that way."

"I didn't know I was right under the burner," protested his wife, as she threw the broken glass in the stove and resumed her lath.

"Now, be more careful this time," said Mr. Kelly, as she again took a position. "No—don't hold your foil like that—you ain't going to beat no carpets. There—that's more like it—now, then."

The laths rapped against each other a few times, and Mrs. Kelly received a terrible slip on the hand that removed the skin from three knuckles, and evoked from that lady a despondent yell.

MRS. KELLY RECEIVES A SLIP ON THE HAND.

"A hit—a palpable hit," gleefully exclaimed Mr. Kelly, as his wife dropped into a chair and hugged her hand.

"It almost broke my finger," she wailed.

"Pooh! Mustn't mind a little thing like that," Mr. Kelly remarked, as she bound up the injured member.

"I guess you wouldn't call it a little thing," protested his wife.

"Bah!" returned Mr. Kelly, scornfully; "a man wouldn't notice a dozen cracks of that sort. Come on, now."

His wife picked up her lath again in a

MR. KELLY CATCHES IT ON THE EAR.

dispirited sort of way, and crossed Mr. Kelly's foil.

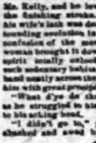
"Look out, now," he said, excitedly; "I'm coming for you with the death blow, and you want to look out for me."

This bit of information had the effect of stimulating his wife to extraordinary efforts, and the foils struck fire at every blow, while Mrs. Kelly's lath performed a variety of gyrations simply marvelous in their eccentricity.

"Have I come?" shouted the excited Mr. Kelly, and he lowered his foil for the finishing stroke. At that instant his wife's lath was describing a most astounding evolution in the air, and in the confusion of the moment that worthy woman brought it down with a degree of spirit totally unlooked for in one of such sedentary habits, catching her husband neatly across the ear, and knocking him with great precipitation over a chair.

"What d'ye do that for?" he yelled, as he struggled to his feet and hung on to his aching head.

"I didn't go to," pleaded his wife, abashed and awed by the unlucky termination of their innocent pleasure.



KELLY FALLS BACKWARD OVER A CHAIR.

"Oh, no, you didn't go to," shrieked Mr. Kelly, in a passion-torn voice, dancing about the room and rubbing his injured ear. "Oh, of course not—you wouldn't have done it for the world."

"You must'nt mind a little thing like—"

"None of your back talk round here," shouted Mr. Kelly; "you take and lug them laths out into the shed, and the next time you want any exercise don't you ask me to help you out with none of your blame foolishness," and as his wife meekly gathered up the remains of their encounter, he jumped into his boots and went out doors to rub his swollen ear.

A Prospective Senator.

Judge Carey, the long-time delegate from Wyoming, will probably be one of the Senators from that recently created State. He is a large man, tall, strong, vigorous, heavy and yet not phlegmatic. In a recent conversation, in the House restaurant, he said: "I don't understand the meaning of the word 'malice,' except inferentially. I have been blessed with a disposition absolutely free from that element. I am quick-tempered, and will strike from the shoulder to resent an insult or injury. That is well known. But, I would not lay a straw in the way of my worst enemy, on the following day. In fact, it is easy, absolutely easy for me to obey the Scriptural injunction: 'Let not the sun go down upon thy wrath.'"

Those who know him best, testify to the truthfulness of this statement, unostentatiously made by the lovable Wyoming man.

HONESTY IN THE DARK.

How Confidence Was Established Between Two Strangers.

A Detroiter who was down in Kentucky on business a few days ago put up at a hotel which was very much crowded, and found himself obliged to occupy a room with a stranger, who claimed to be from Wisconsin. The pair sat and conversed for awhile to size each other up, and then each retired to his own bed. They might have left their money and watches with the landlord, but each seemed to feel that the valuables would be no safer down-stairs than up. After the light was turned out proper disposition was made of personal property, and no doubt each man lay awake for an hour or two to watch the other. Both awoke about the same time in the morning, and as they got up the Wisconsin man observed:

"Isn't that your wallet there by the wash-stand?"

"Good lands! but it is! It must have worked out from under the mattress! What's that under the foot of your bed?"

"Bless me, but it's my $200 watch. I must have kicked around a good deal. What's that under the head of your bed?"

"Hang me if it isn't my watch! It must have worked loose and dropped through. Is that any thing belonging to you there on the floor?"

"I should remark! That's my wallet!"

Thus, despite all the precautions taken, the property of each had been exposed to the taking, and next night, when they tumbled into bed, every thing was left to hand with their clothing.—Detroit Free Press.

THE WIFE'S COMMANDMENTS.

I.
At early morn thou shalt aspire
To get up first and light the fire.

II.
Nor any morning shalt thou miss
Bestowing on thy wife a kiss.

III.
If in the night the baby cries,
Thou shalt the infant tranquilize.

IV.
Thou shalt take care thy wife [illegible]
Her pocket-book with bills well lined.

V.
Thou shalt not criticise her cakes,
Her cooking, nor the bread she bakes.

VI.
Thou shalt not fail at Eastertide,
To keep her with new hats supplied.

VII.
A sacred duty thou shalt deem
To treat her daily to ice-cream.

VIII.
Thou shalt not speak in temper rash
If she desires some extra cash.

IX.
Thou shalt not come home "full" at night
With lame excuses for thy plight.

X.
This is the tenth—thou shalt not chide,
But shalt by all her laws abide,
If to these ten she adds ten thousand more beside.

A HUNTER'S STORY.

"Uncle Mose's" Thrilling Adventure with a Crane.

"UNCLE MOSE," as Mr. M. B. Franklin, of this place, is known all over the county, is one of the most successful and experienced hunters in the vicinity, in spite of his low stature, which is not quite five feet, and his corpulence. He was surrounded a few nights ago by an audience who listened with interest to the recital of some of his adventures as a nimrod, when the recorder put the question to him:

"What do you account the most perilous adventure of your life, Uncle Mose?"

The old hunter thought a moment before he answered:

"Well, now, I've had a good many, but I reckon about as close a shave with death as I ever had was trying to kill a crane. It was of the white species, or what is known as the whooping crane, and which is considerably larger than the other variety, the blue or sand hill crane. This one I refer to was the largest I ever saw, being nearly six feet in height and weighing over twenty-five pounds, while one of fifteen or twenty pounds is considered a good-sized bird. My adventure with it happened nearly eighteen years ago, and I was correspondingly spryer and stronger than I am now, but that crane put me up to all I was capable of to escape with my life.

"I had been out hunting quail, and, as I had pretty well filled my bag, was going home just before sunset, when I passed Rutherford Lake, which, as some of you perhaps know, is a good-sized pond lying in the northeast corner of the county, of which it forms part of the line separating it from Grimes. It is shaped very much like a beef's tongue, running nearly four miles long, with only about three hundred feet across the widest part. Well, there I saw the crane I am telling of, standing on the bough of a tree that had been broken off and fallen in. It had lodged about the middle of the lake, and the majestic bird, snow white, with only the tips of his wings a beautiful glossy black, looked as if he was an image cut in marble ornamenting an artificial sheet of water, so motionless was he, outlined against the sunset sky.

"I declare I hated to disturb him, but I had been wanting for months just such a specimen for the collection I was making of the birds of these parts, so boarding without leave the old dugout I found tied to a tree near by, I sculled as close as I dared to the crane, and, taking careful aim, fired. He dropped instantly and began fluttering feebly about, just enough to keep himself above water. I was afraid, though, that he was hurt so bad that he would die and go to the bottom where I would lose him, so I rowed as hard as I could to get to him before this could happen.

"He seemed nearly gone when I reached him and tried to catch him by one of his outstretched wings, but no sooner had I touched him when he gave such a flounce that took me so completely unawares that I made a frantic clutch at him and shot clean out of the crazy old dugout, heading straight for the bottom of the lake some twenty feet below. That did not matter so much, for I can swim like a duck, but weighted by my heavy hunting boots, which filled with water at once, I found it was all I could do on coming to the surface of the water to keep myself above it. Besides which what must the wound I carry on my arm as a memento of Shiloh do but break out just then and go to bleeding. It was my right arm, and I suppose I must have strained it somehow in making that clutch at the crane.

"Well, there I was, about as helpless a creature as you ever saw, for I could see nothing of the dug-out, which must have been capsized by my weight when I went overboard and, filling, went down, carrying my gun with it; and on laying hold of the projecting bough of the submerged tree on which the crane had been sitting, the thing turned over too, and went down under the muddied water. So, feebly paddling, I made for the shore, when the crane, which was still floundering around, beating the water with its wings, got within my reach once more, and then what I conceived to be a lucky thing came into my mind. I had heard of a sailor who, drowning, laid hold of an albatross, and thus kept himself above water till some one could come to his rescue, so I clutched the leg of the crane, and thought myself saved; for, knowing the prodigious strength of these birds, and seeing that this one was by no means so badly wounded as I had thought, I trusted it would carry me at least close enough to the shore to enable me to grasp the stout water flags that bordered it, and so scramble to land.

I CLUTCHED A LEG OF THE CRANE.

"But as I found afterwards I had taken hold of the leg my shot had broken, and while the tough ligaments of the member held firm, I must have caused the bird excruciating pain. At any rate my hold seemed to drive him frantic and he began to beat me with his great powerful wings until I was nearly insensible, but still afraid to let go, for when I cautiously tried to touch bottom with my feet I could find none, and, so exhausted that I could not even have paddled, I held on as the only thing I was able to do. So when the crane found I was not to be beaten off, he hit on another plan, and that was to drown me by dragging me with my head under the water.

"We had all the time been gradually approaching the shore, where the water was shallower, but, as I have said, it was not enough so for me to wade out, and, all defenseless as I was, I gave myself up for lost if we did not speedily reach a point where I could afford to let go of the crane, of whose society I had about enough. Though agreeable enough in our different ways, we were, somehow, not congenial. With the water filling my nostrils, ears and eyes, and my head still ringing and sore with the buffeting it had received, I was nearly dead, when I felt something slap me in the face and rasp me with its keen edge. But never was touch of any thing more welcome, for I knew I had run against the stalk of a water-flag, one of the drooping blades of which had given me the slap. I let go of the crane's leg and caught the stalk, and while, of course, it would have given with my weight had it had to support it, it was sufficiently strong to enable me to keep my footing on the slimy, sloping bottom that I could now just touch. So, grasping one after another, I pulled up near enough to the shore to lay hold of the strong roots of a water oak growing on the edge of the lake, by which I pulled myself on to terra firma. Once there, I sat down, too exhausted to do any thing but try to bind up with strips of my linen the wound in my arm, which was still bleeding, though but slowly.

"Presently I saw a darky named Pete Reynaud, whom I knew, driving some horses down to drink at the lake, a short distance from me, and hailing him I told him to go and get his gun, for I had made up my mind to have that crane yet, for it was still in the water flags, making futile efforts to stand on its broken leg and wade out. And when Pete brought the gun I killed it without difficulty with another single shot, and the darky wading in after it brought it to me, but I declare, when I saw the noble creature that had fought so hard for its life lying dead at my feet, it seemed to me as if I had been guilty of something very much like murder.

"The dugout I had so unceremoniously borrowed was Pete's, who got it out next day, together with my gun. But alas for that fine bag of 'quail' I never saw it more. It had been left on the shore of the lake when I went after the crane, and a dog or some two-footed thief had carried it off. But if you will step over to my shanty at any time, gentlemen, I will take great pleasure in introducing that crane, handsomely mounted and well preserved, to you, and if you don't admire him you are not a judge of noble birds."—Texas Cor. St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

ELECTRIC FLASHES.

A NOVEL use for the electric motor is reported from Altoona, where a motor-worked fan is employed in a vault where books are kept in order to preserve them from the effect of damp.

AN unusual electrical phenomenon was witnessed on the Fourth of July night at Asbury Park. Colored balls of fire were frequently seen darting to and fro over the city, rivaling a pyrotechnic display.

THE new theory of the lightning rod is that it should as far as possible concentrate the energy of the lightning on itself in the quieter form of heat. Consequently, a piece of iron wire the size of a telegraph wire is sufficient for all ordinary flashes, and much cheaper than the half-inch copper rod or tape once thought to be requisite.

AN occurrence which shows how particularly ready electricity is to avail itself of any opportunity to "short circuit," or stray from the right path, is reported from Ohio. The switchboard of an electric company caught fire, the machine began "flashing," and the lights went out. It was found that an ordinary card photograph had fallen into the switchboard, and the gilt edge around it had come into contact with the two ends of the line, thus causing a short circuit.

RECENT investigations by Captain J. P. McClear have brought out some new and important facts concerning the behavior of lightning under certain conditions. After examining a number of trees which had been struck by lightning, he found that those which were struck before the falling of rain were shattered, while those which were struck after the rain began were simply scored, and had the bark more or less blown off. These phenomena point to the fact that during rain every tree is conducting electricity. Other considerations affecting the issue are the position of the flood, the amount of foliage on the tree, its conditions of moisture, and its connection with running water.

ONE of the most beneficial ways of purifying rooms in which the atmosphere is especially liable to vitiation, is to produce ozone by electrical sparks, and the practice has been strongly recommended by the highest medical authorities. The delightful freshness and vigor which is perceptible in the air after a series of sparks from an ordinary influence machine is a proof of the salutary and refreshing influence produced. A physician in Philadelphia has taken a very wise step in the introduction of a small electric machine for the production of ozone. It is in a compact form, operated by a small battery, and can be conveniently carried. There is said to be a large demand for the machine for purifying the sick rooms of private patients.

ANOTHER industry which is destined shortly to be stirred to its very depths by the advent of the electric motor is that of the bootblack. The first blow at what will soon be regarded as the ancient practice of shining by hand has been dealt in Chicago, where electrical blacking machines are now at work on the streets. The outfit is of the simplest description. A small motor is concealed in a box beneath the foot rest of the bootblack's chair; a flexible shaft with one end attached to the armature spindle has the other fitted with a revolving polishing brush. The only other element in the outfit is a small push-button, and when this is touched the brush spins round at a speed that laughs to scorn the deftest hand that ever gave the exultant finish to the morning toilet.

JOLLY JOKELETS.

"GROUCH is the stingiest man in college." Lawrence—"Yes he's mean enough to take the beam out of his own eye, if he thought he could sell the timber."

"OH, dear," said an old man, who was fishing for his dinner and lost a large pickerel from his hook, "how deep'rot bad it makes you feel to lose what you never 've had."

"JOHN," said Mrs. Billus, anxiously, "you whipped Willie too hard. His spirit is utterly broken." "What makes you think so?" inquired Mr. Billus. "He asked me a little while ago if I didn't want to cut his hair."

AN American elm will live under favorable circumstances 300 years; a maple 500 years; the orange 650 years. It is estimated a first-class scandal will live several eons. Several that originated in early Egypt are still living and in good health.

WEARY SEARCHER (looking for board)—"I hope, madam, you do not object to children?" Boarding-House Mistress—"Oh, not in the least. I have nine myself." Weary Searcher (backing off)—"Um—er—if I decide to take the rooms I will send you a postal. Good-day."

"ISN'T that Mr. Dolliver near the chairman?" said Mrs. Pongee to her husband, at a public dinner. "Yes, my dear." "How utterly miserable he looks! Has he been ill?" "Oh, no, he's all right. The poor fellow is booked for a funny speech after dinner, that's all."

MRS. AVENOO—"Bridget, the parlor windows are so dirty I can't see through them." Bridget—"Well, mum, I [illegible] jist came from the front door, and beyant the faces of Miss Fashion and her young man in the bay window opposite, thur's nuthin' across the way wort lukin' at."

FANNIE'S mother is a great hand to borrow of her next-door neighbor. One day Fannie went into a neighbor's for a visit, but found them all ready to go away to stay a week. "Is oo all doin' at once?" "Yes, baby and all." "Why," she said, in an aggrieved tone, "how tan oo? My mamma will want to bor' tings."

AT a Scotch fair a farmer was trying to engage a lad to assist on the farm, but would not finish the bargain until he brought a character from the last place; so he said: "Run and get it, and meet me at the cross at four o'clock." The youth was up to time, and the farmer said: "Well, have you got your character with you?" "Na," replied the youth; "but I've got yours, and I'm no comin'."

'TIS MONEY MAKES THE MARE GO.

Deep learning is a splendid thing;
There's strength in erudition;
And wit and beauty each may bring
Its share of recognition.
But those who take the palm through life
Its features to compare know
These are but trifles in the world—
'Tis money makes the mare go.

Wealth hides a boundless sea of sin
Or beautifies its features
Until the ones who dip therein
Are quite respected creatures.
For there are wrongful paths in which
The poor would never dare go
That may be followed by the rich—
'Tis money makes the mare go.

Oftimes a true but poor young man
Will seek the aid of Cupid,
But do the very best he can
The ladies vote him stupid.
The while some wealthy, witless dunce
Will never have to fare so,
They'll all be after him at once—
'Tis money makes the mare go.

By many a maiden proud and cold
Are scores of hearts rejected,
While others worth their weight in gold
By lovers are neglected.
For those with wealth the men [illegible],
Their fortunes they would share though
Their loveless bonds bring deep regret—
'Tis money makes the mare go.

And in the end there'll come a day
When wealth shall lose its power,
And all their gold be swept away
In one short, fleeting hour.
And when they stand on Jordan's brink
Their hearts shall deep despair know
Who all their lives are wont to think
'Tis money makes the mare go.

LITTLE DOT'S MESSAGE.

A Note and a Bouquet for Mamma in Heaven.

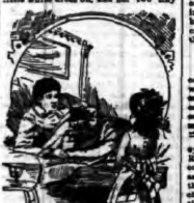
"BLESS your heart, she'll be all right in less than no time now," exclaimed the old doctor. "You go and lie down for a bit, Miss Anna. I shall have you on my hands if I don't look out. I've given Miss Mary a sleeping draught, and she's sure to sleep for a couple of hours. I'll send one of my girls down to watch her, so just you go and lie down."

The old man bustled off, and Miss Anna sank down into the rocking chair with a long-drawn sigh of relief. Of course she was tired—who wouldn't be after ten such days of ceaseless watching. But, nevertheless, she had no intention of carrying out the old man's advice. Sleep, indeed, while Mary lay there in the next room almost at death's door. Why, the very idea was preposterous. What on earth could the doctor be thinking of? She'd never heard—

But, strange to say, when presently there was a patter of tiny feet upon the gallery, Miss Anna did not hear them; and a moment later, when the door was pulled open, after several vain attempts, and a great flood of September sunshine came flowing into the room, Miss Anna spoke no words of welcome to the quaint little stranger that stood there craving admission.

It was Tot. Everybody knew Tot thereabouts, even though she was such a little mite. She stood there just for one moment, her big, gray eyes fixed in wonderment upon Miss Anna's sleeping form. Then, as the situation dawned upon her baby mind, she let the door slam to behind her and trotted across to the threshold of the room where Miss Mary lay.

Miss Mary turned over presently and could scarcely believe her eyes. She must be dreaming, she told herself, and yet, although the blinds were lowered and the room in semi-darkness, there was a little child over there in the doorway that looked marvelously like Tot. She gazed at the little figure steadily for a minute; until the sweet little face beneath the broad black sailor hat stood out distinct and clear. She had a pretty little white dress on, and her two tiny hands were clasped tightly about a huge bouquet of flowers.



MISS MARY RAISED HERSELF ON ONE ELBOW.

Miss Mary raised herself on one elbow and asked softly:

"Tot, dear, is that you?"

For answer the child ran toward her, and, laying the flowers down upon the coverlet, gazed up expectantly into the thin, pale face.

Miss Mary leaned forward and kissed her, and then she looked at the flowers. For the life of her she could not keep from smiling, it was such an incongruous bouquet. There was larkspur, and there were marigolds, bachelor's buttons, sweet-william and just one late moss rose. Miss Mary couldn't help wondering to herself how it had managed to outlive its fellows. Then as she glanced at the huge sunflower in the center of the bunch, her smiles broke out afresh.

"Why, Tot, this is awfully good of you. Are all these lovely flowers for me?"

The child shook her head emphatically until every golden curl was set a-bobbing.

"No," she said, "these is for muzzer. I wants you to take them, please." Miss Mary started and grew a shade paler, if that were possible. "But, Tot, dear—how can I, darling. Your mamma, you know, is d—is in Heaven."

Tot nodded her head and looked up at Miss Mary triumphantly. "I know; that's why I brought them; and you is going there, too. Nurse says so, and so did cook. They was talking and Tot was out in the garden, and they didn't know she hearded it. Nurse said as of all the angels without wings she'd ever seen anywhere you was the best she'd ever knowed, and then cook wiped her eyes with her apron, and she said if it was the doctor she'd have her doubts about it, and even if it was the clergyman himself she wouldn't feel quite sure, but she was so dead certain you'd get to Heaven she'd be willing to bet on it. That's just what she said, Miss Mary—dead certain. Only Tot mustn't say it any more. Papa says it's slang."

Miss Mary turned her head away so that the child might not see that she was crying; but she held out her hand to her, and by its feeble assistance the child scrambled up upon the bed.

"Tot thought as you was going there she'd love to send something to muzzer. Muzzer never writes to Tot, you know, never once since she went away. Why doesn't muzzer write to Tot, Miss Mary? When papa goes away he always writes a letter to Tot, all for her own self. He puts Miss Marjorie Hastings on the envelope, and nurse reads it to Tot out loud. When Teddy and Tom is at school they writes to Tot lots and lots, so why doesn't muzzer write? Muzzer isn't like cook neither; she could spell beautiful and cook can't. She could spell 'the cat and the rat on the mat' just as easy, and talk lovely out of a book. Muzzer was teaching 'the cat and the rat on the mat' to Tot just before she went away. Nurse teaches it to Tot now, and when Tot gets stupid she raps her over the fingers. Muzzer didn't do that—never!" she added with a little sigh that was half a sob.

There was silence for a little while, and then Tot lifted her head again and her little face was as bright as ever.

"Is your trunks all packed, Miss Mary?" Miss Mary could not answer, so the child took her silence for consent. "If you hadn't packed them Tot was going to get cook to come down and help you. Cook packs trunks just beautifully. She always packs Tom's and Teddy's. She sits on the top and squeezes them down. It's the only way they can shut them. Last time on Tedd's trunk she jumped up and down three times: but if your's is packed, Miss Mary, you can carry the flowers in your hands. Give them to muzzer with Tot's love and a kiss, and ask her to write Tot a letter. Muzzer will know Daddy Longlegs right away; that's the sunflower. Muzzer always called him that. He grows right up in the corner of the garden, and Tot had a dreffull time picking him, he was so high up. Tot got a box and stood on that and pulled Daddy Longlegs down. Muzzer won't remember the rest of them cos they've growed since she went away. But muzzer helped Tot to plant them all, Tot remembers. Tom and Teddy was home for a holiday, and muzzer and all of us went out into the gardens. Tom had a shovel and Teddy had a hoe, and Tot dropped the seeds in. Muzzer had gone away before they comed up, but Tot always remembers to give them a drink just as she told her to. Tell muzzer that we've got a new watering pot now, and Teddy's gone into long trousers, and the little bantam hen has laid an egg. It was a weeny little bit of a one. Tot had it for breakfast. And tell her Tot's getting a dreffully big girl. She comed down here all alone."

"Alone! Across the bridge!" exclaimed Miss Mary, sitting almost upright in bed. The bridge was safe enough for a grown person, even though it was such a wretchedly made affair, but for a child like that—why it would be the easiest thing in the world for her to slip underneath the railing. The creek was deep just at that point and the current very swift. Miss Mary uttered a prayer of thankfulness as she thought of the child's escape.

Then the medicine began to assert its sway, and though Miss Mary fought valiantly against it it was as much as she could do to keep awake.

"You're sleepy, Miss Mary," remarked the child.

"Yes," she answered, "I'm afraid I must plead guilty, Tot. I'm not at all polite, but you must blame the doctor for that; he's given me some horrid medicine. Make yourself comfortable, Tot, dear. There's your little rocking chair over in the corner, and Ruperta Ann is in the cupboard. We'll just put the flowers in this vase for the present until—until I am ready to go."

So the little chair was brought over to the bedside, and Ruperta Ann, a huge rag baby, was brought forward to be put asleep. It was a peculiarity of Tot's to talk to her mimic children precisely as though they were possessed with all the attributes of flesh and blood. She fondled Ruperta Ann for a little while, then reproached her sharply for her extreme wakefulness. Finally she began to sing to her in her sweet treble a little song which her mother had taught her. Miss Mary opened her sleepy eyes in surprise as the child began to sing. It was the first time since her mother's death that Tot had ever sung this song. They had often coaxed her to do so, for it was by far the prettiest song in all her baby repertoire. Once up at the Red House, during the boys' holidays, Miss Mary had been seated at the piano playing for the three children. They had just finished singing: "The Frog He Would a-Wooing Go," and half unconsciously Miss Mary's fingers strayed into the opening bars of Robin Redbreast. "Come along, Tot, and sing it," cried the boys. And so Tot stood up there beside the piano and began:

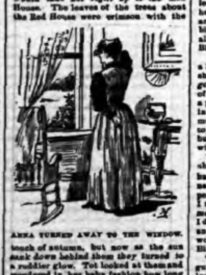
"Good-bye, good-bye to summer,
For summer's nearly gone;
The garden's—"

And then she stopped suddenly; she could not go on with it. Her little lips were quivering, and a great lump had crept into her throat. Since then no one had ever asked her to sing it, and consequently Miss Mary was all the more surprised to hear her begin it now of her own accord.

The last sight that Miss Mary's tired eyes rested on was little Tot, with Ruperta Ann's decidedly wooden cast of countenance looking over her shoulder, as she rocked slowly to and fro, and the last sound that reached her was the chorus of the little song which Tot was singing:

"Robin, robin redbreast,
Oh, robin, dear!
Robin sings so sweetly
At the closing of the year."

Tot sat there for a long time after Miss Mary fell asleep, but finally she rose, and, with visions of nurse in an irate state of mind before her, set out on her homeward way. Miss Anna was still asleep in the sitting-room, and passing out as silently as she had come Tot closed the door softly behind her. She had brought Ruperta Ann with her for company's sake, and she chatted softly to her as she trudged along. She stood at the garden gate just for an instant and gazed along the road which lay before her. It was not a long journey even for such little feet as hers—a stretch of common, then round the corner across the meadow, and after that, once the creek was crossed, there was a short cut through the garden which would take her right up to the Red House. The leaves of the trees about the Red House were crimson with the touch of autumn, but now as the sun sank down behind them they turned to a ruddier glow. Tot looked at them and wondered in her baby fashion how long it would take to reach them and nurse. Then she turned the corner and went on.



ANNA TURNED AWAY TO THE WINDOW.

It was after ten when Miss Mary awoke, and her sister was still asleep. When at last she awakened Miss Mary told her of little Tot's visit. "Why, Mary, you've been dreaming!" she exclaimed. But Miss Mary pointed to the flowers upon the table. Shortly after that Miss Mary fell asleep again, and she did not really regain consciousness until forty-eight hours had passed. The first thing she looked for was Tot's bouquet, but to her dismay she found that it was gone. There stood the table and the vase upon it, half filled with water, but the flowers were gone.

"Anna," she exclaimed, "what have you done with them? They were better than all the medicine I ever had."

Miss Anna turned away to the window that her sister might not see her face. It was no time for particulars, so she just said simply:

"I sent them back to the Red House. Tot needed them, dear, for the dear little soul has taken the message herself." —N. Y. Sun.

GOOD MARKSMANSHIP.

Saved His Wife's Life by a Quick Pistol Shot.

He Was a City Man, but He Knew How to Use a Revolver Pretty Well—Story Told by an Old Adirondack Guide.

"YES, WE have a large variety of people here in the woods during the year. Some come to hunt and fish, others to look over the timber and iron lands, others in pursuit of health. I have hardly known a season when we did not have at least one or two gold hunters." The speaker was one of the veteran guides of the northern Adirondack region, who made his headquarters in St. Lawrence County.

"The best marksman I ever saw in St. Lawrence County," the guide said, "was a Buffalo man named Birgin, who came here a few years ago with his wife, who was an invalid. She was threatened with consumption, and the doctors had advised her to try the air of the mountains. Birgin had a neat log cabin built about two miles in from here early in the spring, and when he had furnished it handsomely he moved in with his wife and two servants. He seemed to have plenty of money, and didn't have any thing to do but take care of his wife and sketch and write a little and practice shooting with a revolver. He didn't seem to care much for hunting, and I don't think I ever saw him use a rifle.

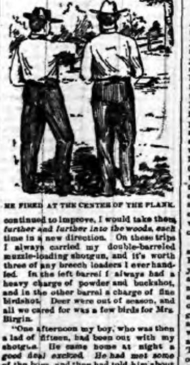
"I never could see why he practised so much, for he could hit every thing within range that he could see. I have known a good many crack shots and seen a deal of close shooting in my time, but this city man beat them all. He didn't use any of these new-fangled pistols, but always practised with a rather old-fashioned looking Colt's revolver. He always said he hated to kill any thing. He shot to kill before he left the woods, though.

"One day I asked him how he came to be so expert. He said that when he was a very young lad he had a fancy for pistol practice. When Captain Travis opened a pistol gallery in Buffalo he took lessons of him. The captain became a good deal interested in him and took pains to instruct him. When he went away he made him a present of the revolver he still used, and advised him to practice with nothing else. It was one Travis had had made on purpose for sharpshooting.

"When Birgin told me about Travis he showed me a shot I would not believe could be made if I hadn't seen him make it three times in succession. Some hard wood boards had been left where the floor of the cabin had been laid. Birgin took one of these boards and laid it on the ground and leveled it up carefully with a spirit level. Ten paces from the plank he put a mark about as big as a silver half-dollar on a tree. Then he got back ten paces from the plank and leveled the pistol and fired at the centre of the plank. The bullet glanced from the hard wood and struck the mark on the tree. This he did three times in succession. He said that was one of the shots Travis had taught him, and he had always kept it in practice. He said that some time his practice might be of use to him. And he was right about that.

"I was not very busy in the spring and early summer, and I went around with Birgin a good deal. Like every stranger, he was afraid of the woods, and he paid well for any thing that looked like work.

"After a couple of months Mrs Birgin's health was so much better that she was able to join us in short strolls into the timber, and she enjoyed them very much. She would sit on some cushions with one of the girls an hour or two at a time, while Birgin would ramble round and sketch and examine the rocks. When I had nothing particular to do I used to stroll over to Birgin's cabin along in the forenoon, when the weather was fine. Then, as his wife



HE FIRED AT THE CENTER OF THE PLANK.

continued to improve, I would take them further and further into the woods, each time in a new direction. On these trips I always carried my double-barreled muzzle-loading shotgun, and it's worth three of any breech loaders I ever handled. In the left barrel I always had a heavy charge of powder and buckshot, and in the other barrel a charge of fine birdshot. Deer were out of season, and all we cared for was a few birds for Mrs. Birgin.

"One afternoon my boy, who was then a lad of fifteen, had been out with my shotgun. He came home at night a good deal excited. He had met some of the boys, and they had told him about a panther that had been seen and heard in the neighborhood. He talked so much about the panther that he forgot to tell me he had fired the charge of buckshot and left both barrels loaded with bird shot.

"I didn't take any stock in the story about the panther, and thought the boys had been trying to scare the lad. I had never seen a live panther, and never expected to see one, at least about here. I thought so little about it that I didn't mention the matter to the Birgin people. I didn't want to alarm them for nothing, and spoil their pleasant strolls in the woods, when they were doing Mrs. Birgin so much good.

"*The next morning I took my shot*gun and went over to the cabin. I only looked to see that it was loaded, and supposed the load of buckshot was in the left barrel, as usual, as the boy had never interfered with it before. My carelessness, for that's what it was, came very near being disastrous.

"Mrs. Birgin was feeling stronger than usual that morning, and we walked a long way from the cabin. One of the servants went with us and carried a big basket of provisions. We camped for lunch in a pretty little ravine over near Little river. After lunch Birgin and myself crossed the little ravine and left the women sitting on the bank. Birgin had his revolver in his belt, as usual, and began hammering on a rock looking for specimens, and I sat looking on, with my gun over my knees.

"Suddenly I heard a stir in the underbrush on the other side of the ravine. I turned my head, and you can imagine how I felt when I saw a full-grown male panther only a few feet back of where the women sat. It had probably been attracted by the smell of the provisions and was making observations.

"I confess I lost my head a little, as I was not hunting for panthers. But then, did you ever happen to meet a full-grown panther in the woods? You had a touch of 'buck fever' when you were up here last fall and fired at your first deer. A panther is a great big cat, and when one is interfered with it is apt to make things lively unless it is disabled with the first shot. Otherwise it is better let alone.

"My first thought was to give the panther a dose of buckshot, and I took quick aim and let go my left barrel, over the heads of the women. I knew by the light recoil that something was the matter, but I could not understand it. I sent the other charge instinctively. The panther was less than one hundred feet away.

"You can imagine the effect of the bird-shot in the face of a robust and hungry panther. It simply maddened him. The beast prepared to spring upon the women, but I could do nothing with only an empty shotgun. At my first shot Mrs. Birgin had turned and caught sight of the panther just above her and fell in a dead faint.

"The huge beast made the spring, but went wide of his mark and rolled down the bank to the bottom of the little ravine. Birgin had been equal to the emergency. He sprang up instantly when I shot and drawing his Colt's revolver sent a thirty-eight caliber slug into the panther's right eye. A second slug caught him in the center of the forehead just as he sprang clear of the ground. He just grazed the form of Mrs. Birgin and was dead before he had rolled down to the bottom of the glen.

"Birgin hurried up the bank to attend to his wife, who soon recovered, and I went to look over the panther. Its face and neck were peppered with the little bird shot, but the empty socket and the hole between the eyes told the story. While I was overhauling the panther Birgin came down and looked on. 'Now I know what I have been practicing all this time for,' was all he said. He told me afterward that he did not wait to fairly get the sights; but his long practice made it impossible to miss his aim.

"Birgin and the girl helped Mrs. Birgin back to the cabin, half carrying her most of the way. I skinned the panther leaving on the head and claws. Birgin took the skin with him to Buffalo when his wife's health was fully restored in the fall.

"For awhile the boys had a good deal to say about gunning for panther with bird shot, but they won't soon forget the two shots with which Birgin brought down the only panther ever killed in these woods with a pistol."—Rochester (N. Y.) Democrat.

EARLY STAGE-COACHING.

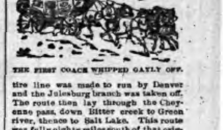
How the Daily Line Was Started and Managed.

Government Assistance in the Enterprise—History of the Scheme—The Great Old Concord Coaches That Were in the Service.

THERE is a man in this town, now hale and hearty at the age of seventy-five, who was a member of the firm that started the first daily stage that ever ran from the Missouri river to Salt Lake City. He is Colonel Alex Majors, who was the founder of the famous pony express. Colonel Majors, as a member of the firm of Russell, Majors & Waddell, worked for years in the interest of securing daily stages. It was his idea that if stages left the Missouri river for the west and Salt Lake City for the east every day the business facilities of the vast trans-Missouri region would be wonderfully improved. It was found impossible to put on a line of daily stages for so long a distance without some Government subsidy, and for a long time Congress was appealed to for assistance. At length the postal service allowed $800,000 per annum for a daily delivery of the mails at the Missouri river from the west and at Sacramento from the east. Of this sum $400,000 went to Russell, Majors & Waddell for the service east of Salt Lake, while the other half was paid to Butterfield & Co., contractors, on the other side of the range.

It was in the fall of 1859 that the first stage of the daily line left Atchison, Kan., then a prosperous and promising young city, a leading boat landing and a formidable rival of the then feeble and struggling Kansas City. There was a great deal of rejoicing over the coming of the new enterprise and with many good wishes and amidst the shouts of the assembled populace, the first coach whipped gayly off. The new line marked an epoch in western methods of travel. The spring before a line had been put on from Leavenworth to Denver by Jones & Russell. The stages ran spasmodically and the firm encountered trouble from the outset. This line made only a few trips when the Indians became so hostile that it was impossible to guarantee a traveler safe passage to the mining camp of Denver. The route lay from Leavenworth up Smoky Hill fork and directly across the plains to Colorado's capital. It was dangerous and expensive, for the Indians stole nearly every team of mules that the company put on the line. The concern at length fell into the hands of Russell, Majors & Waddell, with all accompanying rights and franchises. That pioneer firm then bought the Hockaday & Liggett company, operating an irregular and unsatisfactory line of small coaches from St. Joseph to Salt Lake on a schedule of twenty-two days. This company had no post stations and the same animals that started from a terminus would frequently struggle through nearly to the other end of the line.

With the two companies out of the field and a guarantee of Government assistance, Russell, Majors & Waddell went to work with vigor in their daily stage enterprise. They built splendidly-equipped, strong and warm post stations every ten or twelve miles, established divisions with superintendents in charge and announced a schedule time of ten days from Atchison to Salt Lake, a distance of 1,200 miles. The coaches left each terminus daily and there was never a hitch in the good time announced. At first the route taken by this through line was that known as the old South pass route, along the California trail by Fort Fetterman and Fort Laramie, thence up by the North Platte and the Sweetwater, through the South pass to Fort Bridger, across Green river, through Echo canyon, over the big mountains and down Emigration canyon to Salt Lake City. The daily Denver stage was soon put on running from Denver to Julesburg, where it joined the through Salt Lake coach and delivered and received passengers. Later the entire line was made to run by Denver and the Julesburg branch was taken off. The route then lay through the Cheyenne pass, down Bitter creek to Green river, thence to Salt Lake. This route was fully eighty miles south of that originally used.



THE FIRST COACH WHIPPED GAYLY OFF.

About eighty coaches were used in this service. They were large, strongly-built vehicles, known in old staging days as the Concord coach. Each one cost about eight hundred dollars and was especially fitted for the heavy work required of it. Nine passengers could be accommodated with ease on the inside of each. They were softly cushioned and were altogether the finest stages even run in the West. Each stage was drawn by four fine, strong Kentucky mules, and experienced, reliable drivers were put into the service. They received good pay, were fearless and intelligent and an accident was a rarity.

The same firm that operated and made such a success of the pony express at its own expense, stopping the doughty little animals only when the telegraph came, also made the coaching a success. Noted characters soon found that the Salt Lake & Denver daily line was the only reliable route to the West and all of them bought their tickets that way. Atchison soon became a prominent place from which overland travelers started Westward and its future was believed to have been made. The railroads came all too soon for the town's prosperity, however, and the splendid Concord coaches were retired or else sent farther west to the end of the great iron railroad. Colonel Majors delights to talk of the old days of stage coaching. To the Times reporter he said the other day:

"It all seems so strange that our fine old coaches are no more, for travel by them was comfortable and full of charms. In the whole time in which we operated our through daily line we were never once molested by Indians or road agents, as the highwaymen of the West were called. We never lost one of the Government mail pouches and never killed a passenger. Senator Gwynn, who was such an active worker in the interest of the pony express, had no connection with our stage line, although he felt a lively concern in its workings. I do not think the Senator was killed in a duel with the famous Broderick, for, if my memory serves me, he died in the New York Hotel, New York, of old age. My partners in the stage line enterprise are dead, Mr. W. B. Waddell having passed away at his home in Lexington, Mo., in September, 1871. Mr. W. H. Russell died in the spring of the same year at the home of his son in Palmyra, Marion County, Mo."

The first general superintendent of this famous old stage coach line was Benjamin Ficklin, a Westerner, whom all the West knew in the fifties. He knew every foot of the great trans-Missouri country and the choice was a wise one. Ficklin managed the company well and then drifted to something better. When the railroads pushed the big Kentucky mules and the Concord coaches out of the way Ficklin went East. He made money in Washington and died in the capital city. His death resulted from the swallowing of a fish bone. Jack Gilmore was a division agent at Salt Lake. He remained in that position as long as the stages ran, when he moved to the mouth of the Echo can*yon on Weaver river*. He lives in that section yet and his house overlooks the moss-grown trail over which the stages rolled so gayly thirty years ago. Luke Benham was another division agent. His headquarters were at the North Platte division. Benham died soon after the stages stopped. Hank, the celebrated driver, whose joke on Horace Greeley has been immortalized by Mark Twain, once drove for the daily Salt Lake line, although it was over the coast range that he made Horace take in his head.

Artemus Ward traveled in the Russell, Majors & Waddell stages, and Colonel Majors remembers him as the most congenial of companions on a long "cross-country" journey. Horace Greeley often rode on the daily Denver line and Schuyler Colfax was once an honored traveler in a special stage. All celebrities of the '50's rode in the handsome Concords, for it was the unquestioned leading route to the far West. There are perhaps less than six of the old stages in existence now, and they are running on some short, unimportant line in the mountains, all battered and worn, little suggesting the glories of the days when the fare from Atchison to Denver was fifty dollars, with twenty dollars added to Salt Lake. —Kansas City Times.

Facts About the Birch.

The birch is capable of supporting a much greater degree of cold than any other tree. In the old world its northern limit is 71 degrees upon the west and 68 degrees upon the east coast; in America its northern limit is 64 degrees upon the west and 58 degrees upon the east. In Germany the highest elevation at which it is found is 5,200 feet above the level of the sea; in Sweden 3,900 feet and in Lapland 1,732 feet. It is worthy of remark that this tree decreases in size not only as it advances toward the north but also as it proceeds southward beyond the limits of its native region. It attains its highest perfection and greatest height in Germany and southern Sweden. The birch is not particular in its choice of soil or situation, and will grow almost equally well in sandy, rocky, dry or damp soil. London Garden is authority for the foregoing statements.

By order:
E. L. STEVENS,
President of Society.
W. R. WILSON,
Chairman Executive Committee.
Attest—W. S. [illegible], Secretary.

THE SITUATION.

Governments such as ours have a plain and specific mission to fulfill, and deviation therefrom is disloyalty to republican principles, for which no partisan consideration, of any name or nature, can possibly furnish a valid excuse.

The true and strictly legitimate purpose of a representative government is to equally foster and protect all classes of its citizens in the full enjoyment of justice, freedom, peace, health and prosperity.

To accomplish that benign object, government must be honestly and wisely administered in each of its three grand divisions—the Executive, Legislative and Judicial.

Taxation, whether by direct levy, or indirect, as through import duties, is of course the main source of revenue to meet public expenses, and therein abides one of the most important and responsible functions of government.

Taxes of all kinds ought to be laid with rigid justice and alone for the general public benefit.

Otherwise, taxation is partial and oppressive, however artfully it may be glossed over by political intrigues and mercenary ambition.

At the present time over sixty million of people inhabit the United States, and the vast majority of them, with hard labor and close economy, can barely obtain the common necessaries of life, or if more, only to a very humble extent.

That immense body of laboring taxpayers create the real worth of the country, yet precious little of it can they secure for themselves.

And why?

Simply because class legislation has subverted equal and exact justice, and under the false name of protection enslaved as law the heartless sway of privilege.

Far, far better for the honor and safety of the government and the welfare of the people would it be, if honestly accumulated small or moderate fortunes were the rule and pampered millionaires the exception.

Widen the opportunities for industry and enterprise.

Make taxation rightly equitable.

Give to labor its just rights and reward.

Reduce the cost of living.

Stop public extravagance and waste.

Put an end to monopolistic extortion.

Drain dry the fountains of political corruption.

And then, but not until then, will the toiling masses have a fair chance to improve their worldly condition, and our boasted form of government be in fact, instead of empty name, of the people and for the people.

The tariff is a tax upon the consumer. That stubborn fact all the special pleaders in the land cannot overthrow.

And, like every other species of taxation, to be worthy of popular approval it must bear without partiality each industrial and business pursuit, falling with equity upon the poor as upon the rich, and placing the weak on a legal footing with the strong.

WISCONSIN DEMOCRACY.

The Democrats of Wisconsin held a large and enthusiastic State Convention in Milwaukee last week.

A significant incident of the gathering was the hearty and long-continued applause given the name of GROVER CLEVELAND whenever mentioned.

The Convention also presented the following clear and emphatic indictment against the Republican party:

"By the McKinley bill the Republican party aims to burden the masses with additional high protective charges for the benefit of the favored few. By lavish expenditure of an immense levy of unnecessary taxes it strives to corrupt the voters.

By the Force bill it endeavors to make its political power self-perpetuating in placing Congressional elections directly within its control. By its lavish support of the Speaker of the present House of Representatives in his arbitrary assumption of authority it attempts to disfranchise its political opponents. By these and other acts it manifests its disregard of just principles of government, its distrust of the people and its determination to override every right in its efforts to maintain its supremacy. Extravagance everywhere marks Republican rule. The present National Administration has already exhausted the large surplus received from its Democratic predecessor and now, with constantly growing revenue, is threatened with a deficit. The whole country is burdened by oppressive war taxes, enhancing the cost of the necessaries of life. The people, and especially the agricultural and laboring classes, ask relief from these unjust burdens imposed in the interest of monopolies. The Republican party answers this request by legislation increasing the tariff. The Democratic party insists that the present tariff be reduced and taxation lowered to meet the just requirements of economy in public expense."

Have you ever seen that woman lately? She is astonished! What woman? That woman picking grapes for Speer's Wine. Just cut her in another column and read about it. His wines are found by chemists to be absolutely Pure and equal to the best in the World. The Board of Health in large cities and leading hospitals have adopted their use where wines are needed.

UNRAVELING THE PLOT.

SOME OPENING CHAPTERS THAT SHOW HOW THE SCHEME TO BREAK THE WATER CONTRACT IS BUT A STEP TOWARDS ROBBING THE PEOPLE.

If John Kean's Tool, the "News," Succeeds in Driving Out the Company That Corporation Counsel Marsh and Councilman Newhall Have Bound Down to Low Hydrant Rentals and Reduced Water Rates, Then a Company Controlled by That Moneyed Man Will Fasten Its Clutches Upon the City and Compel the Payment of Unrestricted Charges for Every Drop of Water Used.

I.—THE DEMAND FOR THE TRUTH.

Large numbers of letters received every day of the same tone as that published in these columns of Tuesday last, signed by E. P. Reynolds, call upon THE PRESS to disclose, as far as is within its knowledge, who are the indirect projectors and what is the motive of their attack upon the consummation of the contract to build at last in this city the water works that Plainfield has so long needed for the comfort of its residents and the attraction of an increased community. Mr. Reynolds' letter partly will be given space again in these columns, though it is only one of many of like nature received during the past few days. Mr. Reynolds is one interested alone for the welfare of all, and he signs his name to what he says like a man:

To the EDITOR OF THE PRESS:—It should be the chief end of the local newspaper not only to print the local news, but to watch the interests of the community, to warn against dangers, to advocate [illegible] beneficial. THE PRESS, therefore, is in the line of duty in printing all that vitally concerns the people of Plainfield in reference to an enterprise of such vital importance as the Water Works.

The City Council of 1889—in good part made up of able gentlemen [illegible] having considerable interests at stake in the city—concluded a contract with responsible men for the construction of a water works on terms approved by the city's attorney, by the Mayor and, in a general way, by the people. It has never been charged that any city official had any improper interest in the promotion of the enterprise. The construction of the works is now going on without [illegible] to the approval of the city's engineer; no complaint has been published in respect of the character of the work, and the people of Plainfield, with more or less impatience, are awaiting the abundant supply of pure water which they have a right to expect within a year. There is no doubt that such a supply will add to the comfort and safety of our people, and will add to the attractiveness of our city as a residence, in many ways.

At this stage of the work a voice is raised against its progress, an obstacle—in the shape of an unexpected lawsuit—thrown in its path. Is it a competitor, or even a dweller in Plainfield who thus protests? No, but the complaint of [illegible] comes from an alien, a man of Jersey City. Neither [illegible] nor his advocates are known here, and few of our people know aught of the old charter which is to be dragged out of the past as an obstacle.

What, then, means this attack? Who are its projectors? What are their motives? These are questions which the taxpayers and citizens of Plainfield will ask, and it is the office and duty of THE PRESS to investigate the source and object of the attack, and truthfully to publish every detail relating thereto. Your efforts in this line will gratify the people, will enhance the value of your paper and so yield a sufficient reward.

Let us have the truth.

E. P. REYNOLDS.

Every honest reader of the above, single-minded like THE PRESS for the City's fair treatment and prosperity, will join in repeating that last line, "Let us have the truth!"

II.—THE FIRST SHOT OF THE SPECTER.

During the last month of last year, the Republican Council of 1889 was holding frequent meetings in order to grant the franchise for the building of water works in Plainfield before the Council of 1890 stepped into their shoes and gained some of the glory. The old Council naturally wanted to leave on the record of their existence the culmination of as many good acts and creditable accomplishments as possible. By the evening of December 23, matters were nearing completion. An adjourned meeting was then held entirely for the purpose of hearing the Committee on Water Works, Councilmen Newhall and Erickson, report their progress. The bid of Mr. Moore for the Water Works Company of Plainfield had already been accepted, and the meeting discussed the several clauses of the contract presented for adoption.

Among the spectators present was Engineer Bassett, who, as the representative of the Commonwealth Water Co., had been one of the many whose bids were too high. But he would not give up without a last kick, and he accompanied it with a slightly veiled threat. He said he was present to present the claim of the "Plainfield Water Supply Company," organized by an act of the Legislature in 1869, and holding a perpetual contract to furnish the city with water. This company, he said, was prepared to make more liberal terms for the introduction of water works than any yet submitted. Mr. Bassett said it was the intention of the Company to merge the perpetual franchise into a more favorable contract. He asked for an opportunity for representatives of the company to be heard before final action was taken.

No attention was paid to him, however. Those present who ever knew of the "Plainfield Water Supply Company," believed its charter had lapsed and the Company had allowed itself to drop out of existence. That the company was dead, needed no better proof than that one of its members, Councilman Erickson himself, was a member of the Committee recommending, and one of the Council voting to award a contract for the building of water works, to another company.

Four evenings afterwards the Council had another meeting, and Mr. Bassett's company sent in another warning. It was a communication all telling to the alleged perpetual contract to furnish Plainfield with water, that had been granted by act of the Legislature in 1869, and still in the possession of the Commonwealth Company, adding that it was the intention of the Company to merge the contract into a proposition, and that the same would be ready in three days. This second threat was also treated with scorn; and among those who voted to file the communication without attention, was Mr. Erickson, a member of the "Company" from which the Commonwealth Company had secured an option on the old water charter they were using as a bugaboo.

III.—PREPARING TO RESIST ATTACK.

It is not necessary to state that every step taken by the Water Committee of the Council of 1889, was only after extended deliberation and upon the advice of Corporation Counsel Marsh after the consideration of every possible point that could arise in the future. It will be first told here, however, that the Water Committee and the Corporation Counsel, weighed and found wanting the very action that is now taken, seven months after the contract has been awarded by the city, signed by the Mayor and accepted in good faith by J. Herbert Johnston, residing in New York city and Plainfield; Cornelius N. Hoagland, residing in Brooklyn, N. Y.; William Foster, Jr., residing in New York city; James Moore, residing in Elizabeth, N. J.; Samuel Kean, residing in Elizabeth, N. J.; Jno. R. Moore, residing in Elizabeth, N. J., and Geo. Kyte, residing in Fanwood, N. J., who are the Water Works Company of Plainfield.

Over seven months before, then, Chairman Newhall and the Corporation Counsel foresaw the very action taken by the City's enemies and their tool, the News. The constitutionality of the law was a question that was gone into very deeply before the awarding of the contract was recommended. It was the point of most vital importance, and the Corporation Counsel called the attention of the incorporators of the Water Works Company to it. Councilman Newhall, however, as well as every other sound minded [illegible] authority THE PRESS has consulted, agrees that there is not the least shadow of suspicion on the law. The Atlantic City water works, representing an investment of three million dollars, were constructed under its provisions, and so were the works at Bound Brook and other places in the State. The attorneys of all those corporations undoubtedly satisfied themselves also, before such large sums were invested by their clients, that the law was constitutional. As to the matter of the charter granted twenty years ago to the Plainfield Water Supply Co., it was agreed that any life it had had, lapsed long ago—in fact it is, said, that members of the company acknowledged they believed it "dead." With the eyes of all parties wide open then to the possibility of just the antagonism that has arisen, the contract was issued by the city and accepted by the company.

IV.—[illegible]

As in all steps taken in the matter of securing water works for Plainfield, the city—thanks to Councilman Newhall, Corporation Counsel Marsh and others concerned—has secured the best of the deal (except in the appointing of a supervising engineer at a salary of $6,500, when as good men in every way and better in many ways, would have accepted the work for half that money). In fact a very bad bargain did the Water Works company make for themselves, and an unprecedentedly good one did the city make for itself in the matter of hydrants, for instance. Look at just that one item in the deal so beneficial to the city, that its enemies are trying to break. The Company agrees to put in the hydrants at a rental per year of $15 each, when the facts are that the hydrant itself costs $26, and the average rental throughout the country is $35 a year. The entire rental received for the public hydrants in Plainfield, therefore, in two years, would be just four dollars more than each hydrant costs. Yet subscribers to the bonds would have been forthcoming if the ex-Hon. John Kean, Jr., had not said that he wanted to furnish the funds himself, and thereby stopped the sale to any outside investors.

V.—THE MONIED BOSS REBUFFED.

The bonds, therefore, were not floated, the incorporators were not called upon to build the works out of their own pockets, and the Company rested on its trust in shrewd John Kean, Jr., one of the sureties on its bond. Then he thought he saw the chance to possess himself of the contract—peacefully if possible, by threats or legal violence if necessary. As soon as ready money was wanted, he suggested that the company come to him. He would be happy to advance it. They fell in this second trap but never in another. Kean said if the Contractor and Mr. Kyte, one of the company, would just draw a note for $5,000 and send it to his bank, he would take care of it. They did so, but when it came due a few days ago, he informed the makers that they must pay it. They refused, a suit was begun, and they filed as an answer the statement that they had a good and sufficient cause for their action. This was the first move to force the Contractor in a hole and compel him either to sell out, or throw up the contract for want of funds or fear of the law. Then followed the action brought before the Supreme Court to break the law under which the contract was given. This served at once the purpose of closing while the suit was pending, any possible channel through which the Company might have secured money to continue the work; and it is hoped by the News and its masters, that in the end the law will be declared unconstitutional and the present contract and the present Water Works company, will be wiped out of existence.

But in another and a more peaceful way did John Kean, Jr., bring pressure to bear to get the contract into his own possession. He offered a price for it; but the contractor said "no." The price was bettered, but the answer was still an emphatic refusal. How would he be treating the members of the company if he sold out, was a thought that undoubtedly came to his mind. The tempter suggested probably that they only went into the scheme as a personal favor to the contractor. Then, thought the latter, there is all the more reason I should deal honorably with them and keep my faith with the people of Plainfield. He utterly refused to give up the contract, then the threat was made that will appear further on in this tale.

VI.—HOW THE ENEMY WAS ORGANIZED.

Knowing that the Plainfield Water Supply Co., had resurrected itself and its charter; because Engineer Bassett had been given an option on the latter to use it in an attempt to scare the Council; and knowing that that option had almost expired, the writer said to a member of the Water Supply Co., one day in July: "I have been expecting every day your people would have an injunction put on the Water Works Co., stopping their progress. But maybe you are only waiting until the work is nearer completion." The reply was: "Oh, we've got no right to do anything of that sort. They have been given a contract by the city to do a certain work. Our charter doesn't give us any power over them."

But not many days after a call was made for a meeting of the Plainfield Water Supply Co., for the "annual" election of a board of directors. This call was signed, if THE PRESS is not mistaken, by E. R. Pope, J. C. Pope, J. F. Hubbard, J. W. Murray and E. N. Erickson. This was just the number required for a call, and it will be noticed that in order to find sufficient members in existence for the purpose, it was necessary to have the name of ex-Councilman Erickson who was one-half of the committee who had in charge the making of the contract with the Water Works company.

This election was held on Monday, Aug. 4. There was a shuffle of the cards, and lo! a new Board came out in the deal. Frank S. Bergen, Kean's keen lawyer, was President, and among the directors were Kean himself and H. G. Runkle of this city who is also interested in gas and water works all over the country. It may be that Kean promised to deliver into the hands of the Water Supply Co., the Water Works Co's contractor and his contract. Anyhow, the contractor was offered stock in the Supply company if he would drop out of its way. He refused. Then he was offered cash in lieu of the stock, and he again positively refused to break his faith with the Plainfield people and sacrifice the incorporators of the Water Works Co. Then John Kean, Jr., said: "I will bring an action to bust your corporation, and the minute I do that you won't find an investor that will advance a cent for your works," the substance of which he has since repeated to a reporter of the New York World.

VII.—WHAT WILL A VICTORY BRING?

Some will say, why should John Kean, Jr., who is an endorser on the bond of the Water Works company, seek to "bust" it? Will he not in such event be the sufferer financially? No! Even if he could be held for the whole amount of the bond he would reap a profit in the end. But if the law is declared unconstitutional, the contract granted under it would be wiped out and the bond given as surety for its completion would be abrogated.

The result that Kean hopes for and expects in this case—and in fact has desired for other reasons before the Plainfield contract was thought of—is, therefore, that the law should be declared unconstitutional. Then the advantageous contract the City now has would be annulled, the work now progressing would stop where it is, and as there would no longer be a law under which the City had the power to make a contract, it must either bond the people to build its own works, or do without.

Except—and here is the reason for suspecting that the Supply company, with John Kean, Jr., as one of its directors, is at the back of the fight that is being made through the News and the Courts to break the present contract no matter at what cost to the City or damage to the community's interests and prosperity. Free from competition, and master of all it surveys, the Plainfield Water Supply Co., will step up with its resurrected charter, build works as it will and charge the City and the people any rates it may please.

VIII.—THE BRANDING OF A LIE [illegible]

The enemy's Tool has printed a decision of Vice Chancellor VanFleet's which the paper claims already "criticises" the giving of the Plainfield contract under the law in question. The News says the Water Works company's counsel was not "aware" of this decision. One of these [illegible] is false, and the other foolishness. The decision was only on the question whether a contract awarded under the law gave the contractors an exclusive franchise. The decision was thoroughly sifted by Corporation Counsel Marsh and the Water Works Co's counsel. They found it had no bearing on Plainfield's action, as the City did not claim to give an exclusive franchise, and the Water Works Co., never asked or expected such monopoly.

Of course the News is not to be condemned for all the lies that appear in its columns concerning this matter. Everything that is grammatical is written by some one outside who is working the tool. But the talk about an effort to sell the bonds of the company to the "people of Plainfield," is of course understood to emanate from the brain of the editor because of its inanity; and the talk about the Company's "mulcting" the city, is of course from the same source, because of the same nature. Everybody views the state of affairs in this way—if anyone is being "mulcted" just now its the poor Water Works Co., who are compelled to pay $1,000 a month to the City on a contract that the Supreme Court is asked to take away from them.

IX.—THE FIRST STEP THE CITY SHOULD TAKE.

Chairman Newhall of the Water Board says he does not consider that any action taken so far in the courts, should be considered as an injunction, or even a stay, on the city. He believes the law will stand, as the question of its constitutionality was thoroughly considered before the granting of the contract.

Yet while the Court's decision is in doubt, and must be awaited for months probably; with a possibility that in the end the present Company will be thrown out and the work postponed a year longer; Constructing Engineer Hering's preposterous salary—which the Water Works company may now be paying, but which the city may have to hand back—should be summarily cut off.

WHEELMEN OUT FOR A LARK.

They Have a Good Time and Rescue a Lady's Pocketbook.

Messrs Frank L. C. Martin, Stuart H. Patterson, E. L. Walz, Jr., David H. Lenox, and A. L. C. Marsh, of the Plainfield Bicycle Club, left New York with their wheels on the steamboat Albertina last Saturday afternoon, got off at Navesink Highlands, and rode to Seabright, where one of the party, Mr. Patterson, left and rode to Belmar, while the others rode to Red Bank, where they remained one night. Next day they rode back to Seabright, and spent the morning sailing on Pleasure Bay. In the afternoon they wheeled through Long Branch and Asbury Park to Belmar, where they were again joined by Mr. Patterson. On the road between Avon-by-the-Sea and Belmar a scramble was indulged in between the wheelmen for a lady's pocketbook, fashioned of handsomest snake skin, that lay in the road. Messrs Marsh and Martin saw it about the same time, and both made a dive from their wheels. Mr. Martin was the successful grabber. The purse was found to contain about $50 in cash, with no card or name in it to serve as a clue to find the owner, save a check drawn on a Philadelphia bank. Mr. Martin is now in correspondence with the party who drew the check and thinks he will be able to find the owner so as to return the lost money.

The wheelmen stopped over night at Belmar, next day riding down as far as Sea Girt and riding back to Asbury Park, where after a surf bath they had an excellent dinner, returning to Long Branch and taking the boat for home. The trip was one that will long be pleasantly remembered by the participants.

Mr. Seader's Pension Was Allowed at Once, When Senator McPherson Moved in the Matter.

Eleven years ago Jacob Seader of this city, an aged veteran, sorely wounded in the service of his country, applied for a pension. He was not as many already drawing pensions, just past middle age and able to earn a comfortable living at a trade or behind a counter; but he was 70 years old and utterly incapacitated by the results of his army service from earning anything. Yet his application filed in 1879 dragged along without success. He was examined time and time again, and passed upon favorably, yet nothing came of it.

Seader was told by a member of the Winfield Scott, G. A. R., Post, of this city, that he could not get his pension allowed until he joined the Republican ranks. That as long as Seader voted the Democratic ticket he could not get a cent of pension, no matter how much he deserved it. Seader thought different, but as the years went by, and his Republican friend—who was in good health and working every day at his trade, yet drawing a pension for incapacity—kept saying "I told you so," Seader began to feel there was some truth in the statement, which he also heard from others, that he must join the G. A. R., and vote the Republican ticket, or he'd get no pension.

But a philanthropic citizen—who is an officer of the late war and a good Democrat, but who will ask for no pension himself—heard of Seader's case and brought it to the attention of the Democratic U. S. Senator, John R. McPherson. The latter gave it his personal attention at once with the following result:

WASHINGTON, D. C., August 27, 1890.

The Hon. J. R. McPherson, U. S. Senate.

Dear Sir:—The pension claim of Jacob Seader of Plainfield, has been allowed. * * * * As you have called up this case by means of inquiry, I deem it but courteous that I should advise you of the final action, as above set forth.

Very Respectfully,
GREEN B. RAUM,
Commissioner.

The Cuban Giants, the Alerts, and the Ridgewoods, All Defeated by Plainfield's Crack Team.

Modest Michael Gregg saved the game from the Cuban Giants in the 9th inning, last Saturday, and won it for the Crescents a few minutes after. It was the closest and quickest game ever played on the Plainfield grounds—not a run made until the fight finished, yet the visitors came dangerously near home on a number of occasions. The head work of Gentle Gregg, the superb playing of Freddy Jones as a back stop, and the fielding of Gillis, McIndoe, Martin and Lufberry, pulled their team out of several holes during the afternoon.

As Manager Bright told a PRESS reporter, the Cuban Giants had not before put so fine a team in the field this season. It consisted of six of the original colored champions, and was no more like the team that played at Somerville a few weeks ago than the Boston League nine is like the Bayonnes. The game they put up Saturday was one of the finest ever witnessed. There was not an error of judgment throughout, and no approach even to an error of any kind except in the case of an unaccepted chance in the ninth inning, when a high fly of McIndoe's was allowed to drop in the faces of Bell, Boyd and Garrison who all rushed after it.

In the first inning Martin got to first on a bunt and stole second, but died there. In the second inning McIndoe got to first on a safe hit but was caught stealing second. After that nobody of the Crescents reached a base until the sixth, when Douglass who was afraid to let Hatfield have a chance at him, gave the latter his first on balls. In the seventh it seemed as if the home team would get a run. Lufberry, the first to the bat, made a safe hit; but Wiegand fouled out, McIndoe hit his to first base and Gregg hit his into the pitcher's hands. In the eighth, Jackson again gave Hatfield his first on balls, and also Gillis. Then the Crescents had two men on bases for the only time during the game. But Lee struck out, Jones flew out to Nelson, and Martin batted a little one that was thrown to first before he could get there.

The way Gregg saved and won the game in the ninth inning when the score stood 0 to 0, is this. The Giants were first at the bat, and their coachers shouted "Here's where we win! Its all ober but de cheerin!" B. Jackson faced Gregg with admirable confidence, but gentle Michael struck him out. Then the fire works begun but did not worry Gregg a bit. Nelson knocked a liner into right field and reached second on Lufbery's failure to hold the throw in. Catto stepped up and after two balls and one strike had been called, hit the ball right into Gregg's hands. Catto thought he was out, but Gregg smiled kindly at him and turned his back. Nelson was playing away down the line towards third base and Gregg smiled at him, too, and waited. Nelson, however, could not make up his mind which way to go, so Gregg started to chase him to third and kept the run up until Nelson was within four feet of Lee, then Gregg lined the ball to the latter and there were two out and a man on first only. Had Gregg thrown Catto out at first, as it is natural for an infielder to do every time he gets a short hit in his hands, two runs at least would have been scored in the ninth by the Giants, because W. Jackson followed with a hit that would have brought Catto home and Douglass' hit would have brought W. Jackson home. But Gregg is always figuring away ahead. The result was that although the Giants eventually filled the bases in the ninth, Gillis made a fine catch in centre field of Boyd's savage hit and the visitors were out without a run.

The Crescents went to the bat in the ninth amid the plaudits of twelve hundred. But Lufberry flew out to Garrison on the first ball pitched, and Wiegand struck out just two minutes after. McIndoe then stepped up and knocked a high fly that everybody was sure Bell would clutch with ease. But three players ran for it, as told above, and no one got it. McIndoe had reached second and Gregg was at the bat, but there were two out and the scorers began to fix their sheets for ten innings. Then occurred one of those seeming impossibilities that about once a year happen so unexpectedly to a ball nine. Gregg hammered the ball into the right field bleachers, making a home run himself and bringing McIndoe in ahead of him. The excitement was terrific. One of the largest attendances of the year was present and the shouting was deafening. Those who had backed the Giants began a cry of "foul ball." This claim was ridiculous, but of course it at once found supporters enough to stir up trouble. The right fielder of the Giants who ran to get the ball, made no claim that it was foul but had gone to the dressing room to take off his uniform before he heard there was any dispute about it. A PRESS reporter hurried over to the bleachers and found the man who had been struck by the ball. He had not moved from his seat yet, and there was a crowd of fifty people around him who could all see that he was "inside" of the foul flag. The man said his name was Goff, and that he would make an affidavit himself and get a hundred witnesses to testify that it was a fair ball. The score was:

Monday morning's game was more like the handle on a jug, than was really expected. Of course everybody realized that Elizabeth's team of semi-amateurs, were not in it with Plainfield's semi-professionals; yet when the former came on the ground quite materially strengthened, the 700 people present thought the game might at least be interesting. Then, too, Shaw was put in the box to give Gregg a rest before the afternoon's game, and Hatfield was brought in from the field to catch.

But even under all these circumstances the result of the game was never in doubt. The Crescents earned five of their fourteen runs, and could have earned a dozen more. McIndoe made one of his holiday hits over the fence, bringing in two runs ahead of him. Shaw pitched a model game, and if the Crescent outfielders had not played entirely too deep, the Alerts would have had but two hits. In the fourth inning Shaw only pitched four balls before the Alerts where out and in the next inning he struck out the whole side.

The Alerts two runs were given them. In the sixth inning with two out and no runs, the third man hit to Lee who fielded it to Wiegand. The latter dropped it and gave the runner his base. The next at the bat knocked a high fly into Shaw's hands and he let it twist out. The next batter, after two strikes was given his base on balls, and the bases were full. Mills then made a little hit and two runs came in.

The afternoon game was played under a great strain on both sides. The Crescents wanted the victory more than any of the season. There was standing room only when the game commenced, and during its progress 1500 people shouted themselves hoarse. One excited man with $19 on the game, left his seat and chased McIndoe to second base in the eighth inning. Peter Collins, formerly of this city and now one of the employes on the Brooklyn L where all the Ridgewoods work, offered a silver bat to the member of the latter team who should make the longest hit. It was won by Heiser in the eighth on a two-bagger down in the corner of left field.

Hammond was put in to pitch for the Ridgewoods at the start. It was plainly visible in the very beginning that he was not the man to win the game. Hatfield, the first of the Crescents to the bat, got his first base on four bad balls, his second on a passed ball, his third on a wild pitch and scored on Lufbery's hit to left. In the third inning, a single by Martin, a three-bagger by Lufbery, and a double by Wiegand followed in succession. Two more runs were scored, and with the game 3 to 0 for the Crescents, Livingston was substituted but too late to win. For the balance of the game the Crescents got but two hits neither of which scored.

The Ridgewoods earned one of their runs. The other two were made on an error of Martin's, and Jones' only passed ball for a month. Haley being still timid about the hand he split when playing here before, changed places with Fritz in the last two innings. Mr. Berriman's umpiring in all three of the above games, was thoroughly satisfactory to the visiting teams, because it happened that all the close decisions were hard on the Crescents.

ENGLAND AND IRELAND AT WAR.

Fists, Dogs and Pistols the Weapons That Follow Tongue-Lashings.

The Burke family and the Jackson family, next-door neighbors in the region of "the Cedars," a clump of trees beside the railroad track not far from the Potter Press Works, have long been indulging in open hostilities, the history of which was related in the City Court on Saturday.

The fact that the Burkes are Irish and the Jacksons English seems to have had something to do with arousing the belligerent feeling, although Mrs. Burke says that she lived in the same neighborhood, among Irish, English and Scotch, before the Jacksons came, and never had a bit of trouble. At any rate, the Burke army, in the shape of an adopted son James, and the Jackson army, in the shape of a natural son Henry, have been having it hot and heavy for some time past. At first only saucy and naughty words were interchanged, but presently stones began to follow threats, and pistol-shots to follow dog-bites. The stones never caused any bruises, except on the face of the earth, and the bullets never bored any holes except through the high board fence separating the two back yards. Finally the boys began to lie in ambush, awaiting each other's coming, in the "Cedars." One night Jamesey Burke reached home with his back all red "from Hennery Jackson's poundin' an' kickin'," and his brand new hat missing, "an' being all tored up by Hennery and Hennery's dorg." Michael Burke, head of the Burke cohorts, visited the Jackson castle instanter, and insisted that "Hennery" go out into the night and the wildwood and gather up the fragments of "Jamesey's" two-dollar straw helmet. The Jacksons were amused and sarcastic, and sent Michael home in high dudgeon, and declaring that "Well, if Hennery wouldn't bring back the hat he had stolen they'd see who was what."

The arrest of Hennery resulted, and the Burkes appeared against him in Court this morning, when Mrs. Burke, besides telling Judge Codington that she'd lived here since '71, when she came here very young, took particular pains to ventilate the skeletoned closets of the Jackson family. Mrs. Jackson and daughters, she said, had often been obliged to take refuge over night on the Burke piazza and in the Burke parlors, and they were so ungrateful as to "sic" "Hennery" and "Hennery's dorg" on poor "Jamesey." "Why," she continued, "old man Jackson had told Hennery that if Hennery didn't lick Jamesey's hs, the old man, would slap Hennery's mouth."

The Jacksons had lawyer Reed for Counsel. The Burkes had no lawyer, and no witnesses. No case was made out, and the complaint against Hennery was dismissed. But the Court warned all parties that their bickerings must stop at once and forever.

HOW FRUITS ARE SELLING.

Apples, Pears, and Grapes: Their Scarcity and High Prices—One Fruit Not a Failure.

The supply of Maryland, Delaware, and South Jersey Bartlett pears has been nearly exhausted. Most of the pears from these places of late have been of poor quality. And this week about ends the Bartlett pear season from these sections. The Hudson River crop is not of good quality. But the few pears that have already come from Central New York indicate that some very nice Bartletts may be expected from there. However, prices will continue to increase after a few days until the season ends with the ice-house pears, which come here in bushel boxes.

There will, however, be a more liberal supply of commoner pears, and good table pears may now be had for as low prices as at any time during the season. But no good table pears will wholesale for less than $6 per barrel.

Besides the Bartletts, the Clapp's Favorite, Flemish Beauties, Louise Bonne, Seckel Bell, LaConte, and Sheldon pears may now be obtained in the markets. There is now a better supply of apples in the market than at any time before this season. There is a better crop of apples in the vicinity of New York and along the Hudson Valley than elsewhere within a thousand miles of New York. Fairly good cooking apples are obtainable for $1 a barrel less than at any time before this season. But this condition of the apple market will last only a few weeks. It is impossible to get any really fine apples. They have not grown this year.

Grapes are coming into the market in great quantities, and are being picked by growers before they are properly ripened, but they sell very freely and at double the prices usually obtained for the best grapes. The Ives is a small black grape, acid when ripe, but when half ripe most unpleasantly sour, yet tons of them were sold daily all last week and part of this for upward of 6 cents per pound. The supply of grapes is beginning to be greater this week, and the quality is better, but the prices are not yet lowering.

California grapes are beginning to arrive quite freely. This is the one fruit from California that is really meritorious. The best of California grapes, perhaps, are Tokays. They are as yet mostly too green. The best California grape now to be obtained is the Muscat, a white grape —sweet, but possessed of a decidedly spicy flavor. A five-pound box of either Tokay or Muscat may be purchased at retail for about $1.

"The old reliable cranberry" is the affectionate term used by epicures concerning the one fruit that will not be a failure. This year's total crop in the United States is estimated at 750,000 bushels. Prices usually range from two dollars at the beginning of the season, to three or four dollars at its close. Last year the price ran up to six dollars, and this year, owing to the scarcity of other fruits, cranberries will probably start at seven dollars per barrel. The Cape Cod crop is later than usual this year, while that of New Jersey is in advance. Contrary to the usual custom New Jersey berries will probably be the first in the market. Wherever there are lands suitable for the cultivation of the cranberry, the industry is gradually increasing. This is especially the case on Cape Cod, where suitable bogs abound, and where the cool nights favor early ripening.

New Jersey's cranberry crop will be at least twenty per cent. larger this year than the crop of 1889, and will bring better prices. The crop of last year was 135,000 bushels, and it is probable that the price will be much higher than that which was quoted late last season, $5 a bushel. Placing this year's crop, which will be picked after September 15, at 175,000 bushels, at $5 per bushel, the product of this season will be worth nearly a million of dollars. The berries are grown on low pine land, and at little or no expense. Owing to the scarcity of other fruit the market will open very steady and the demand is expected to be very brisk. Everything has been favorable to a big crop.

Washingtonville Warblings.

Richard A. Rogers, of New York, is the guest of his cousins of Highland Farm.

Otto Schwalb, of the United States steamship Enterprise, is on a leave-of-absence and is visiting at his home at Union Village.

The school house has been put in thorough repair and the grounds around it nicely graded and sodded. The paths have been spread with cracked stone, and the general appearance of the place is greatly improved, thanks to the enterprise and generosity of those taking an interest in the school. Charles Gifford, of Little Valley, is engaged to teach for one year. The school will open Monday, Sept. 8.

Frank Mobus is confined to the house by an attack of typhoid fever.

Miss Addie Halsted, of Brooklyn, is visiting her friends, the Misses Milligan, at Maplewood Cottage.

A BABE IN THE COURT ROOM.

Unconscious of Trouble and Shame, It Prattles While Its Erring Mother Weeps.

Maggie Benesworth, with a baby in her arms, was a prisoner in the City Court Saturday morning, charged with various offenses unknown to polite society.

Yis, plase God, she said, she was guilty; an' by the blissid Vargin, an' all the saints, 'twas the phwisky and the beer that done it; shure 'twas the drink in her, an' she didn't know what she was doin'. She'd plade guilty if she hed t' die and go to State Prison for it.

Judge Codington told her that she had been doing some very wicked things, and deserved severe punishment, yet he didn't know what to do with her. At this Maggie began to whimper and to mop her face with her baby's shawl, the only garment it wore besides a thin slip of a dress. She said she had three other children, and had to work to support them; and if she went to jail who would give them food and clothes?—and Winter coming on. The Court asked if her husband couldn't supply their wants, and she sobbed that he'd been out West these twelve years now, and was maybe dead, an' God be wid him wherever he was, and he had been such a care to her anyhow, wid havin' t' be bailed out o' jail, or his fine paid, ivery wake reg'lar, an' he was a good man, an' a lovin' one, an' had wint away wid all her money but wan dollar in the bank, the Saints be praised, an' God be wid him.

As for the prisint offinse, she wasn't the only wan that hed been intoxicated, for 'twas the day o' the circus, an' the circus min hed been tratin' all the wimin t' beer till they was all as bad as her, to be shure.

The Court couldn't decide what punishment to inflict, under the circumstances, without inflicting hardship on the little ones, and told Maggie to appear for sentence Tuesday morning.

"The Saints be praised," she said. "I'll be here afther goin' on the ixcursion on the Moonday. Shure I'll be here mesilf, an' hev me $5 riddy in me pocket. An' if I don't may I dhrop did in me tracks!"

The officers motioned the woman out, and she shambled away. The baby, which had been industriously engaged in emptying a bottle of milk, completed its labors, smiled and shook its chubby fists, and prattled gleefully.

TRIED TO BURN THE ENGINE HOUSE.

But Only Slight Damage Beyond the Destruction of the Dog Pound.

Another fire whose origin is attributed to incendiaries, visited North Plainfield Friday night, and in this instance the supposed firebug was especially audacious; for he chose the Borough engine house itself as his shining mark.

Back of the lockup in the rear of the engine house has for some time stood a large box-closet filled with excelsior, spare lengths of hose, and similar supplies. It was also used as a dog pound. At half-past eleven o'clock this closet was discovered to be ablaze, and in a few minutes it was enwrapped in flames which were rapidly communicating with the engine house building. Cornices, windows and doors were quickly afire, and it began to look as though the alarm bell clanging in the tower overhead was tolling its own death-knell. Presently, however, Warren engine was dragged forth, lengths of hose were laid, and streams of water were directed on the flames. The fire was extinguished after causing a loss, as estimated by Foreman Fairchild, of $150.

There was nothing of an oily nature among the supplies destroyed, and the firemen scout the theory of spontaneous combustion. They insist that the hand of a firebug is apparent.

The Borough people were greatly excited over the fire; and considerable alarm is expressed because fires of mysterious origin have become so frequent.

SOUGHT TO KILL THE ITALIANS.

Harsh Treatment of the Dagoes by Young Men From Jerusalem.

Wm. Perrine and Del Pheasant, natives of Jerusalem Road, beyond Scotch Plains, went on the warpath against ex-Street Commissioner Engleman's gang of Italians working on the county roads. Perrine was pounding Tommy Delenco, and Pheasant was pounding Eggie Blounie, when James Connelly and other valiant young men went to the rescue and, in the face of a shower of stones which drew blood in several places, drove the two young men away. Subsequently the belligerent twain returned in a wagon, armed with a jug of whisky, an axe, and two revolvers. They flourished their weapons promiscuously, but were chased, and Perrine was captured. Connelly brought him, a prisoner, in a wagon to Plainfield, in spite of his drunken plea to be allowed to go to Summit to dig for clams, and he was given a hearing yesterday before Justice Nash, who held him for the grand jury, on the charge of assault and battery, and sentenced him to thirty days imprisonment in the county jail, for drunkenness and disorderly conduct. Perrine vowed that he would get square by killing the Italians.

Somerville Fair.

The 21st annual fair of the Somerset County Agricultural Society will be held on the grounds in Somerville one month earlier than usual, viz: on Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday, Sept. 9, 10 and 11. Trotting Wednesday and Thursday, commencing at 12:30 P. M. each day. On the line of the Central Railroad of New Jersey, one hour's ride from New York. Competition open to State. Send for premium list to W. S. Potter, Somerville, N. J.

Principal Campbell.

The public school at New Market will re-open on Monday, Sept. 8, being one week later than usual. This change has been made on account of the Trustees purchasing new Globe single desks for the grammar department. The school will be under the charge of David S. Campbell, formerly of the Public schools of this city, as Principal. He holds a first grade certificate and is highly spoken of as a successful and competent teacher.

Knocked Out the Villagers.

The Young Arlingtons went to Scotch Plains yesterday afternoon to play a nine of that place. The Young Arlingtons say they had "blood in their eyes," the result of which was that they won the game with ease. They knocked four of the Scotch Plains pitchers out of the box in six innings. The Young Arlingtons played a very nice game in the field and at the bat, while the Scotch Plains nine could not find the ball at all. The score was 15 to 9, in favor of the Young Arlingtons. The Arlingtons say that the umpire couldn't tell a strike from a foul ball, and yet they won. The features of the game were the pitching of G. Mattis, who struck out ten of the Scotch Plains, and the first-base playing of M. Sutphen, who stopped everything that came his way.

Sick Headache

IS a complaint from which many suffer and few are entirely free. Its cause is indigestion and a sluggish liver, the cure for which is readily found in the use of Ayer's Pills.

"I have found that for sick headache, caused by a disordered condition of the stomach, Ayer's Pills are the most reliable remedy."—Samuel C. Bradburn, Worthington, Mass.

"After the use of Ayer's Pills for many years, in my practice and family, I am justified in saying that they are an excellent cathartic and liver medicine—sustaining all the claims made for them."—W. A. Westfall, M. D., V. P. Austin & N. W. Railway Co., Burnet, Texas.

"Ayer's Pills are the best medicine known to me for regulating the bowels, and for all diseases caused by a disordered stomach and liver. I suffered for over three years from headache, indigestion, and constipation. I had no appetite, and was weak and nervous most of the time. By using three boxes of Ayer's Pills, and at the same time dieting myself, I was completely cured."—Philip Lockwood, Topeka, Kansas.

"I was troubled for years with indigestion, constipation, and headache. A few boxes of Ayer's Pills, used in small daily doses, restored me to health. They are prompt and effective."—W. H. Strout, Meadville, Pa.

CITY DEPARTMENT.

OFFICIAL PAPER OF THE STATE, THE COUNTY AND THE CITY, AND HAS THE LARGEST CIRCULATION OF ANY PAPER PUBLISHED IN THE COUNTY OF UNION.

. A. DEMAREST, - - City Editor.

—Oh, move the freight house!

—Letter-carrier Blair was given a new [illegible] Monday.

—James Arnott, Jr., carries his left arm in a sling, the result of a fracture caused by a fall.

—A horse owned by John Morton died Sunday morning, making the third horse he has lost recently.

—The Central railroad had 160 extra cars in use Monday, for special excursions of the day.

—Patrick Keefy, hackman, was fined $5 on Saturday by City Judge Codington for not displaying his badge.

—F. B. Stevens of East Fifth street, had some pigeons come home from the ocean-bound steamer, "Umbria," the other day.

—The new "Howard" car is very fine, but there ought to be some law that would apply to the man who painted the name on it.

—The regular choir of Grace church will resume its duties next Sunday. Rehearsal at the usual time. All the men and boys are expected to be on hand.

—Richard Rapeney who accompanied the Grocers' Association excursion from this city Monday to Boynton Beach, caught a crab that measured 21½ inches from tip to tip.

—The petit jurors drawn from North Plainfield for the September term of court, are George Putnam, Gideon Barnes, Henry Brokaw, C. Frank French, Augustus Coniden.

—Complaints are loud and just in the Borough, over the late lighting of the lamps. It was 9:30 o'clock last night before Duer street was reached by the Italian lamplighter.

—Under the new election law all the townships, as well as the cities, must have the lists of voters printed and posted in hand-bill form within twenty-four hours after they are made.

—The Westfield Standard says that "several Plainfield and Summit crack tennis players have already signified their intention of entering the Westfield Athletic Club tournament in October."

—An attempt was made to burn the hotel at Bound Brook, Monday. A train of kerosene was laid from outside into the cellar, and lighted. The firemen quickly responded to an alarm and saved the building.

—Robert McNabb has purchased, through the Real Estate Trust, a twelve-acre tract of land at Netherwood Heights. The new owner will begin immediate improvements and will construct a handsome residence.

—About 7 o'clock of Monday evening, the curtains in a window of the house occupied by J. R. Stickle, on East Fifth street, caught fire. For a few minutes there was a fierce blaze that was only quenched after much difficulty.

—Joseph G. Miller has just purchased of the Lee heirs, the very desirable residence location at the West corner of Broadway and Sixth street. The property has a broad frontage on Broadway and includes a fine building lot on Sixth street.

—The official census figures show that Plainfield's increase is greater than that of New Brunswick and Rahway combined. The bureau at Washington announces the following: New Brunswick, 18,4[illegible]; increase, 1,2[illegible]. Plainfield, 11,2[illegible]; increase, 3,125. Rahway, 7,0[illegible]; increase, 6[illegible].

—The many friends of James B. Bogert, in the great Metropolis of New York, will learn with regret that he has severed his connection with a former employer, William Moeller, to take charge of the sale of the famous Hotel Netherwood at Plainfield, N. J., where he is a favorite with the public.

—Nine cars packed in seats and aisles were not enough to accommodate those who wanted to go to Boynton Beach with the Grocers' Association excursion, on Monday. Two hundred people, at least, were left behind for want of railroad accommodation. Of the distinguished guests present were Acting-Mayor Moffett, ex-Mayor Rockfellow and Councilman Dunham.

A Plainfielder to the Rescue.

A wagon owned by N. A. Barnett of Westfield, collided with one owned by Wm. Edgar on the Mt. Ararat [illegible] on Tuesday, and in a twinkling Edgar's wagon was overturned. Edgar narrowly escaped being crushed by the fall, and his horse was severely cut and bruised. One of Engineer F. A. Dunham's county [illegible] corps sprang forward in the nick of time, seized Edgar's horse by the head and prevented a runaway.

Another Fire of Unknown Cause.

Fire broke out about 10:30 o'clock Monday night in the paint shop of F. O. Smith, 126 West Front street. The cause is not known. The flames spread to the new barn and chicken coop of Henry H. Hoffman, adjoining, which were entirely destroyed. The barn was 14x36 and contained a cow and a lot of hay. The cow was rescued, but everything else was destroyed. Hoffman's loss was $300; insured.

Smith had an insurance of $1,000 on his shop and contents which were entirely consumed.

Some Illustrious People Who Came Home on the "Servia."

Monday morning just after midnight, the steamship "Servia" reached Sandy Hook, and a few hours later had landed her passengers again on the western shores of the United States. Among those the most glad to get home, were Dr. and Mrs. T. S. Davis, Master Charley Davis and the Misses Davis, of Park avenue; Mulford Estil, of Grove street; Leander Lovell, and two sons, of Crescent avenue; and Corporation Counsel Craig A. Marsh. Henry George, Dr. Lyman Abbott, Daly's company and others were among the passengers who made the voyage interesting and entertaining.

Glad News for Plainfield [illegible]

A series of base ball games between the Somerville and Plainfield teams, will be arranged for the Saturday afternoons of September 13, 20 and 27.

This will be glad news to the base ball cranks of both places. It is the intention of having one game on each team's ground, and the third chosen by tossing a coin.

Make no mistake about the nine Somerville will put in the field. It will not be the same as has played during the past few months. It will be much strengthened.

It is no more than is just to pitcher Harkins and the Somerville people, that he should have better support than he has had.

Plainfield's team will not be changed. It could hardly be bettered. If we lose it can't be helped and Somerville will deserve heaps of credit.

There will be exciting races at the Somerville fair of next Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday. The classes are all well filled and fine contests are to be expected.

"It goes right to the spot," said an old gentleman, who found great benefit in Ayer's Sarsaparilla. He was right. Derangements of the stomach, liver, and kidneys are more speedily removed by this medicine than by any other. It reaches the trouble directly.

PERSONALIA.

Miss Mable Force is visiting relatives at Philadelphia.

Seymour March and family, of Putnam avenue, are home from Belmar.

Robert Fairbairn, Jr., of Second place, is home again much improved in health.

J. M. Peyton and family, of East Sixth street, are home again from Lake Hopatcong.

Mr. and Mrs. G. E. Sto, of "The Elms," East Front street, have returned from Belmar.

L. W. Serrell of West Front street, is among the recent visitors to the Park House, [illegible].

C. W. Opdyke, F. Opdyke and Clinton Keene, of Plainfield, have been camping at Budd's Lake.

Thos. H. Warman and family, of Grove street, have returned from their Summer sojourn at Belmar.

Miss Edith Clapp entertained a party of young friends at her home on Mercer avenue, Friday evening.

Chas. Long of Newark, is visiting his grandparents, Mr. and Mrs. Andrew Eaton, of Bow street.

Mr. and Mrs. J. F. Homan and family and Miss Florence Hottenger are home from Lake Hopatcong.

Miss Mary Wells, of Washington avenue, returned Friday after a few weeks at St. Andrews, New Brunswick.

Miss Phronia M. Randolph, of West Front street, is home again after a months' visit at seaside and mountains.

The name of Miss Mary E. Holton, of Grove street, appears on the list of new arrivals at the ElDorado, Ocean Grove.

Charles Overbaugh, a former Plainfielder, but now of St. Louis, is visiting his sister, Mrs. Amos F. Gray, of West Second street.

Miss Addie Roberts, daughter of Councilman Roberts, has returned from a two month's trip through Pennsylvania, greatly improved in health.

The Misses Gracie and Florence Voorhees, of Woodbridge, are visiting their aunt, Mrs. W. H. VanWinkle of Park place, North Plainfield.

Wm. A. Wilson and wife of Jersey City were the guests of Mr. Wilson's parents during Sunday and Labor Day on Harmony street, North Plainfield.

Jasper G. Cadmus, who has been ill several weeks, was able to venture out of doors Saturday, and received hearty greetings from many friends.

Wm. L. Smalley, of 23 Craig place, is the first to take down his front fence in that section of the Borough. Now let others in the vicinity do likewise.

Peter Bergen, father of ex-City Attorney Frank Bergen, of Elizabeth, died Friday at his home in Somerville. Mr. Bergen was one of the oldest residents of Somerset county.

Dr. H. N. Carroll, of North Plainfield, religious press director, and editor of The Independent, has returned, with his wife and daughter, from a pleasant outing at Pine Hill, N. Y.

The Rev. C. B. Mitchell and Mrs. Mitchell have returned from Liberty, Sullivan county, N. Y. Mr. Mitchell gained eleven pounds in weight during his absence of three weeks.

Charles Potter, Jr., and family, left the Larkin House, Watch Hill, Monday morning, for Westerly, R. I., where they will visit friends for a few days before returning home on Thursday.

Among the guests at the Smith picnic at Peapack, August 27, were the Rev. Cornelius Schenck, Mrs. T. H. Hardy, Miss Lillian A. Force, John C. VanDyke and Joseph Allen, of Plainfield.

Councilman Spangenberg was asked the other day to agitate the question of a sewer system in Plainfield. He replied that the city seemed to be in the sewer, already, with its water works scheme.

A. F. Matthews, who ranks among the brightest of America's newspaper men, is the guest of his old-time colleague, editor Frank W. Runyon. Mr. Matthews is at present on the staff of the Philadelphia Press.

H. A. Lee, a New York manufacturer, who came with his family to this city for the Summer, was so charmed with Plainfield that he has leased a home on First place, and will become a permanent resident here.

The Phillipsburg Democrat says that the Rev. T. Logan Murphy, of North Plainfield, is at present engaged in making important improvements in and around his property at Carpentersville, Warren county.

On Wednesday, Aug. 27, George Ryno, of South Plainfield, was united in marriage to Lena, daughter of Mr. L. Harris, the ceremony being performed by the Rev. Mr. Cubberly, at the residence of the bride's parents.

The Rev. Father Smyth, pastor of St. Mary's church, officiated at the 10:45 service, Monday morning. He said he was very glad to see his parishioners again, and promised that at a future date he would give them an account of what he saw in his travels.

In a game between picked nines of the Plainfield Y. M. C. A., at Boynton Beach, Friday, Dr. D. C. Adams in the pitcher's box tried to catch a high fly. The ball struck fairly in his hands but twisted out so suddenly as to tear the whole nail of one his fingers, entirely off.

George Wharton Edwards, of Plainfield, has adorned Amelia Gere Mason's article on "The Women of the French salons," in the September issue of The Century Magazine, with excellent ornamental drawings and decorative borders, together with an accurate sketch from one of the famous salon paintings.

Col. Charles W. Thomas, who was a member of Governor Green's staff, and a resident of Bound Brook, is prominently mentioned in connection with the Assemblymanship of Somerset county, on the Democratic ticket. His nomination would be a credit to the party, and bring assured success to the ticket.

Councilman Seymour G. Smith, the biggest of the "Big 6," returned home Saturday from a visit at Harwick, N. Y., leaving his family there for the present. He reports having had a good time in the fishing line, but does not return in as good health as his many friends would like to see. Nevertheless, he will "be there" in Councilmanic matters when the proper time arrives.

Councilman Walter L. Hetfield returned to his Plainfield home Saturday, from a two weeks' outing at Block Island, R. I., and enjoyed the excellent game of ball in the afternoon between the Crescents and the Cuban Giants. This member of the "Big 6" looks in excellent trim after his vacation, and reports having made big catches of the finny tribe during his visit. One of the victims to his line was a nine-pound blue-fish. Mr Hetfield is now ready to tackle the water question, or any other that comes before him.

The Bound Brook Chronicle says of Mrs. B. F. Littell whose death was recorded in Friday's PRESS: "Mrs. Littell was a quiet, motherly woman, loving her home and taking great pride in her children. She was also a kind-hearted neighbor, and many poor families will remember her kindness to them in days of hardship and affliction. The funeral will take place on Sunday at the Methodist church, of which Mrs Littell was for many years a member. Her brother, John Milliken, of Plainfield, was for a long time a constable here. Mr. Littell and his family have the sympathy of the entire community in their bereavement."

W. E. Hinkson, of Princeton, a graduate of the Philadelphia College of Pharmacy, is the latest addition to the affable and competent staff of clerks at Reynolds' pharmacy.

The Rev. and Mrs. Cornelius Schenck, and their son, Cornelius Frelinghuysen Schenck, left yesterday for a visit with Mrs Schenck's mother in Philadelphia. It will be young Master Schenck's first trip abroad.

Counselor W. K. McClure is back from a stay at the Megantic Club's fish and game preserve of thousands of acres in Canada. He reports it a sportsman's paradise, where four-pound bass are daily catches. Messrs R. L. Livingston, Wm. H. Brower and Henry C. Squires, of this city, are also members of the association.

The ladies at Hotel Netherwood surrendered the parlors to the gentlemen Tuesday, and Messrs O. Heidgman, Harry Martin, D. F. McCabe, W. H. Racer, F. L. Froment, W. E. McCredy, W. S. Thorne, Jr., and A. E. Bonary, indulged in a stag dance. Messrs Martin, Racer, McCredy and Bonary taking feminine [illegible].

Karl Feininger writes from Berlin that his voyage to Hamburg was a very pleasant one, and his reunion with his family a thing to be long remembered. "I cannot say," he continues, "that I anticipate the coming separation on September 13, but I must be in New York again before October 1, and resume lessons." Those who want to join his Plainfield class may address him at Steinway Hall, New York.

NEGLECTING THE PEOPLE'S DESIRE AND THE CITY'S INTEREST.

The Central Railroad Company Assures THE PRESS That They Never Knew of the Existence of Committees Appointed by the Council to Request the Removal of the Freight House.

In an interview with a PRESS reporter Thursday, Gen'l Sup't Olhausen of the Central Railroad, said that the project of removing the Plainfield freight house and yard from its present location, called up a number of points for consideration that almost universally weighed heavily against the scheme. Even putting aside, he said, the question of dollars and cents —and the change if made would cause an enormous outlay on the part of the company—would the majority be benefitted? The convenience of a yard so centrally located as that now in use in this city, was of great advantage in every way to the receivers and shippers of freight. Move it in any direction to a point where the company owned land sufficient for the purpose, and the cost of cartage to and from the new yard, would be largely increased.

Another location must be chosen where there was vacant land sufficient to accomodate the growth of the city's freight patronage for years to come. There was no such extent of land within reach of any of the streets that are now macadamized, and during the Spring and rainy seasons the yard could only be approached through roads hub-deep with mud.

Mr. Olhausen was assured by the reporter that if he would remove the freight house and yard from its present objectionable location, the city would willingly build macadamized streets to the new location; and furthermore, the people would undoubtedly subscribe liberally towards the cost of making a handsome park of the present yard, and laying out attractive driveways and approaches to the station from the South side of the track. The Superintendent confessed that such assurance placed another face upon the matter, and promised that a fresh start would be made at his end of the line towards a renewed contemplation of the scheme.

He intimated, however, that he was not aware there was a universal demand by the people for the removal of the present freight house. The letter to President Maxwell—published in THE PRESS of last Tuesday—was understood by the company as coming from a man who was not a resident of the city proper, and one who got on and off at the Grant Avenue station. Upon being told by the reporter that the Councils of both 1889 and 1890 had, in compliance with the popular demand, gone so far as to appoint committees from its own members to confer with the railroad authorities towards the accomplishment of the project, he was much surprised. He said that the company had never received a visit or communication from such committees, had never heard of their appointment and was not even cognizant of their existence or the existence of any extended popular advocacy of the scheme or organized effort in the city to bring about the change THE PRESS was so earnestly advocating.

The reporter left justly impressed with the sincerity of Mr Olhausen's expressed wish to do whatever the people desired in the matter so far as the company was able and the greatest number of its patrons could best be served. Although one of the busiest men in the country, he set everything else aside when the reporter's card reached him through the hands of the many officials that stand between him and the outside World, and devoted his time without restriction, and his most courteous attention to his visitor's rather feeble presentation of a matter that the Plainfield people have so earnestly and generally desired the consummation of, for many months.

Next Time It Will be Her Leg.

The little daughter of John J. Ackerman, of Warren street, North Plainfield, fell from a seesaw Monday, resulting in a fracture and a dislocation of her right arm. It is a very bad case, but Dr. Long has it in charge and the little one is doing remarkably well.

Although only nine years old, the child has been particularly unfortunate. The other arm was broken about five years ago, and her collar bone, also, has been fractured.

Racing at the Driving Park.

Several spirited races occurred at the Gentlemen's Driving Park, Saturday.

The first race was between Charles Brower's Aala, Peter Osborn's Galatea, and John Osborn's black colt. Aala won the first and third heats in 2:43 and 2:45½. Galatea won the second heat in 2:45¾.

The second race was between John Osborn's Peter and M. Quinn's Kittie Jackson. Peter won both heats. Time, 3:12 and 3:09½.

The third race was between Mr. Reynolds's Experiment and Nate Robbins's Doctor. Experiment won in 2:34.

Peter Osborn drove the gray stallion Pilot Jackson, owned by Mr. Reynolds, a mile in 2:40¼.

O. T. Waring drove Copeland to road wagon a half-mile in 1:20.

We Named Them and We're Proud of It.

A correspondent asks: "Who first gave the 'Big 6' Councilmen, that title?"

Early in the year Mayor Male nominated Wm. Hand as Street Commissioner. He was not confirmed, and the Mayor was therefore very much in the humor of permitting Commissioner Angleman to hold over, much to the disappointment of the people and Councilmen Gallup, Hetfield Moffett, Roberts, Smith and Spangenberg.

On February 7, in speaking of the circumstance, THE PRESS said: "Still there is this sprig of hope sprouting in the breasts of the Big 6. The Mayor has been known to change his mind. It is said that he promised he would not sign the contract employing constructing engineer Hering; and he didn't—for a while."

Thus it was that they were baptised with a name that will last, like their good deeds, for years and years.

THE EXPENSE OF A CONSCIENCE.

A Plainfield Resident's Ideas of Honor Are Taxed by Uncle Sam.

The Rev. Dr. K. P. Ketcham, whose return from Europe was announced exclusively in THE PRESS Thursday, has been having an interesting brush with the Custom House people in New York. While in England he bought three bicycles, one for himself, and one for each of the Plainfield young ladies for whom he was acting as chaperon, the Misses Yates. Uncle Sam imposes a duty on bicycles, except when they bear evidences of having been appropriated to personal use, and the popular Plainfield pastor was told that he would have to "muss the machines up a little," either by riding them about the streets of London himself or hiring a professional "musser" to do it. Such a thing didn't exactly accord with Dr. Ketcham's high ideas of what was honorable, and he decided that he would ship the machines just as they came from the warehouse, in the full glory of their enamel and brightness. When, however, the Majestic passengers exhibited their baggage to the officers on this side of the Atlantic, Dr. Ketcham was informed that he would have to pay duty on the three bicycles, which were evidently salable merchandise. The clergyman assured the officials that the machines were for private use, but the Custom House inspectors asked for "evidences of wear." Dr. Ketcham responded—ignoring the suggestion that he produce the evidences by riding the machines about on the deck of the Majestic—that he had supposed a man's word of honor was sufficient in such a case as this, but nevertheless was compelled to pay duty. He surrendered the tariff tax under protest, and will appeal to the Government for redress.

KILLED BY HIS BROTHER.

Careless Handling of a Defective Gun Causes a Distressing Accident.

Eight-year-old Freddie Kissam, son of Wm Kissam, whose home is on the road from Fanwood to Rahway, two miles from Fanwood, was accidentally shot by his fourteen-year-old brother, Charles, late Saturday afternoon, and died next day in great suffering.

The elder lad, gun in hand, left the house at about five o'clock to shoot a crane which had been flying about the place during the day. Freddie persisted in accompanying him, in spite of his protests. When but a few yards from the house Charles wheeled suddenly about to order his brother back. His gun, which was at half-cock, almost fell from his grasp, and he gave a sudden grip to recover it. His fingers tightened on the trigger, and to his horror the contents of the weapon were discharged into Freddie's side and breast. The boy's lungs were riddled with shot. Freddie was carried into the house, and Dr. J. B. Harrison, of Westfield, was summoned. The physician was able to relieve the boy's pain somewhat, but found it impossible to save his life. The lad died Sunday afternoon.

Freddie's brother is frantic with grief, refuses to eat or drink, and says he wants to die.

An examination of the fatal gun reveals the fact that the hammer is defective, and falls whether at half-cock or full-cock.

Death of N. W. Fine.

N. W. Fine, son of Mr. and Mrs. C. M. Fine of West Front street, died Monday after a long illness. He had been treated for softening of the brain, which was attributed to the depositing of a clot of blood on the brain from the bursting of a blood-vessel. It was a matter of surprise to the physicians that he lived so long under such suffering, and his case was called one of the most remarkable in medical annals. The patient took scarcely any nourishment, and was kept alive merely through his own force of will-power. He was in his thirty-sixth year.

But for the Next Offence They'll Go to Jail.

Three big boys who in spite of their sixteen or seventeen years of age haven't yet learned not to jump on moving freight trains, were caught by special officer Stephen R. Hope stealing rides on the Central Railroad Thursday. They blubbered and begged to be released, and the biggest one of all offered his watch and chain as a ransom. When the stationhouse was in sight they cried pitifully, and promised so faithfully never to do it again, that the kind-hearted Hope gave them their freedom.

Shot So Close as to Burn His Clothes.

Further particulars that are obtainable as the excitement subsides over the accidental shooting of six-year-old Freddy Kissam by his older brother Richard, are: The little fellow as soon as the charge of shot struck him, turned and ran for home. He ran so fast that although the bigger boy started after him, he could not catch him.

When Freddy got in the house he threw himself down on a lounge and cried out to his mother that he was going to die. He said, further, "And Dick ought to be shot too, for shooting me." The little lad's clothing was ablaze from the closeness of the explosion, and the first thing the mother had to do was to put out the fire.

Shifting of Realty.

The following transfers of real estate have been recorded since those last published in these columns:

Randolph M. Stelle and Frances E. Marsh, executors will of Manning Stelle, of this city, to James E. Havens of New York; land in this city at intersection of South side of Stelle avenue with Plainfield avenue, 200x280 feet, $6,325.56.

William Ritter, of this city, to Jacob Grieb, of this city; land Northwest side of Third street, 330 feet from Spooner avenue, 50x167, $1.

Jacob Grieb and wife to Frederick Ritter, of this city, same tract, $1.

Randolph M. Stelle and Frances E. Marsh, executors Manning Stelle estate, of this city, to Anna F. Marshall, lot West side Central avenue, this city, 200x250 feet, $1.

Randolph M. Stelle to Anne F. Marshall, land on West side Central avenue, this city, 50x200 feet, $1.

Rather Suffer Himself Than Trouble His Mother.

Albert, the young son of Mr. and Mrs. Edward Love of East Ninth street, while playing with a number of lads about Crescent Square, the other day, had a tumble from his bicycle and a companion falling on him, young Love's collar bone was broken.

Mrs. Love at the time was worried about her servant girl who had taken too much ether, and with a doctor was anxiously attending the girl. Albert remembered this, and unconscious of the nature of his injury went and sat on the steps of the Crescent Avenue church for over an hour in great pain. He did not want to go home and make any more trouble for his mother. When he did the doctor set the broken bone; and the brave boy is doing nicely.

Lieutenant Flannery Receives a Sword Wound.

During the parade at Red Bank, Monday, of the Uniformed Rank, Knights of Pythias, of New Jersey, Lieut. J. E. Flannery, of Crescent Division, Plainfield, was wounded in the fleshy part of his thigh by a sword thrust from some one marching behind him. The Knight behind was carrying his sword out of its scabbard, and it was accidently stuck into the Lieutenant's leg because he got out of step. The wound was dressed at a neighboring drug shop.

Others present from this city at the parade which was a great success, were Grand Officers Lieut-Col., George R. Pelhemus and Quartermaster John C. VanDyke. Crescent Division was led by Capt. J. H. Carney, Lieut. J. E. Flannery, Herald J. M. Hawkins and Recorder R. J. Robinson.

THAT SODA-WATER OUTBREAK.

A Peculiar and Dangerous Accident That Happens Very Rarely.

The soda-water explosion in J. G. Miller's pharmacy Thursday afternoon, reported exclusively in THE PRESS, came within an ace of being a very serious affair. The cylinder which burst was partly filled with water, which was being charged with carbonic-acid gas from the generator in the rear of the store. The pressure was not unusually high, and no thought of danger was entertained. Pharmacist Miller himself was in charge of the generator, and his assistant, Peter Hodge, was rocking the cylinder in the soda-water cradle, to distribute the gas through the interstices of the water. Three of the druggist's friends were standing near the cylinder, chatting and laughing. Suddenly there was an explosion like that of a cannon, loud enough to be heard a considerable distance down the street. The bottom of the cylinder, a heavy mass of chilled steel and copper, was hurled with terrific force directly over the spot from which A. C. Horton, Wm. Egbert and I. D. TenEyck had moved but a moment before. Had they been in its path some one must have been frightfully mangled. As it was, the projectile smashed to pieces a heavy iron mill used for grinding and mixing drugs, crashed against the woodwork, bounded back and forth, and smashed everything it touched. The broken cylinder, repelled by the sudden rush of gas, kicked like a gun, struck Mr. Miller in the legs and severely injured his knee. He was taken home in a carriage, and will be lame several days. Peter Hodge had a tight grip on the rim projecting from the bottom of the cylinder when the explosion occurred. When the rim flew away it nearly wrenched his fingers from their sockets, and for hours he felt as though he had received a shock of electricity. The force of the rush of gas that enveloped him brought blood to the surface of his skin. All the bystanders were drenched with the soda water, which was thrown about in all directions.

The accident was caused by a flaw in the cylinder, which hitherto had stood the regulation tests for hundreds of pounds to the square inch. It is considered miraculous that no one was more seriously injured.

Plainfield once before had a soda water explosion, when a cylinder under high pressure burst during the night in an underground vault at Stelle's pharmacy and blew up a portion of the sidewalk overhead.

State Scholarships.

An examination for scholarships for the State College, will take place at the county court house, Elizabeth, on Saturday, September 13, 1890, at 9 o'clock A. M. The examination is open to all candidates in this county who may wish to make application. For further information apply to the County or City Superintendents of Schools.

Save the Fish.

Mr. Otto is about to make some alterations and repairs which will necessitate the letting out of the water in the New Market lake. It is hoped that the Fish Commissioner of the district will take some steps to place a netting in position so as to avoid the entire loss of the fish out of these waters that are the source of so much pleasure and sport to the boys and young women folks of Plainfield.

Commissioner Hooker Will Have to Attend to Him Again.

If there is no way to prevent ex-Captain Carey from obstructing the sidewalk on Grove street near Front with his express wagons, there ought at least to be a means of making him put up danger signals in order that persons who are not prepared to die on the spot may cross the street in time to bring their lives away with them.

Let's Return the Compliment.

Crescents went to Norwich;
Nutmeg men won the game.
Norwich—7,
Crescents—3.
Heavens! what a shame!

Norwich coming here next;
Won't the welkin ring!
Crescents—7,
Norwich—3.
That's the proper thing.

Drew No Hasty and Unwarranted Conclusions.

We are at liberty to quote the following from a private letter to the editor of THE PRESS, from the President of the Central railroad, concerning the project of moving the freight house:

Necessary delays in carrying out intentions and plans for improvements to facilitate our service and promote the convenience of our patrons, are sometimes regarded as indifference to the wants of the public, but such conclusions are at best hasty and unwarranted.

Yours respectfully,
J. R. MAXWELL.

Won't Drive That Horse Again.

I. A. Connett had a narrow escape from serious injury in a runaway accident on Friday. He was driving a horse attached to his market wagon, with a view to purchasing the animal. Either the horse didn't like the idea of casting aside carriage life for butcher-wagon service, or something startled it. At any rate, it suddenly plunged forward and dashed down East Second street, on which thoroughfare it ran away once before this Summer. Reaching Park avenue it swept around towards the grocery store of Martin Brothers, leaped across the curb and spurned the sidewalk with its feet till a convenient fence and hitching post effectually blocked the way of the wagon it was pulling. The fence and post both suffered, and one of the wagon wheels was wrecked. Connett and his companion were hurled from the seat to the pavement, but despite the heavy fall on the hard flagging neither was greatly hurt. The harness held the horse, which was returned to its owner.

Death of George H. Babcock's Father.

Asher M. Babcock, one of the oldest men in the town of Westerly, R. I., and father of one of Plainfield's best known citizens, died on August 25, in his ninety-third year. He was born at Leyden, Mass., June 16, 1798, of Rhode Island stock, and was one of a family of twelve children, all of whom lived to marry and raise large families. Two brothers and a sister survive him. A noted mechanic in his day, Mr. Babcock took a prominent part in early manufacturing enterprises both in Central New York and Rhode Island. He also invented and operated for a time one of the first machines for making shoe-pegs. Among his inventions is what is known as the "pin-wheel motion" in plaid looms, by which it is possible to weave a number of patterns with one cam. This was extensively used at one time, but is now largely superseded by what is called the Crompton motion.

Mr. Babcock was one of the early Abolitionists and was always identified with the "liberty" party, by whatever name it was known. He married on January 1, 1820, Mary E. Stillman, by whom he had eight children, and in 1847, Prudence C. Cleveland, by whom he had one son. Five children survive him, George H. Babcock, of Plainfield, who is at the head of the Babcock and Wilcox Co., New York and Glasgow; Herbert A. Babcock, at whose house he died; Harriet Eugenia, the wife of William L. Burke, the Broadway hatter, and two other daughters in California.

"Five years ago I had a constant cough, night sweats, was greatly reduced in flesh, and had been given up by my physicians. I began to take Ayer's Cherry Pectoral, and after using two bottles of this medicine, was completely cured."—Ange A. Lewis, Elmer, N. Y.

PLAINFIELD WILL HAVE TO PLAY.

Westfield's Last Three Games Show That It Has a Strong Team.

On Saturday the Westfield team went to Staten Island and played a game with the Corinthians on their new grounds at Port Richmond. This turned out to be one of the closest long games that has been played anywhere this year, as shown by the score:

Westfield......0 0 1 0 0 0 0 1 0 0 0 0 0 0—2
Errors—Westfield, 4; Corinthians, 7; Base Hits—Westfield, 8; Corinthians, 5.

Yesterday Westfield lost a game to, and won a game from the Allertons of New York. In the morning game the Allertons had Sworback to pitch and were reinforced by several Metropolitans. Westfield had in O'Neil and McManus, the regular battery. The score was:

Westfield.............1 1 2 0 3 4 0 2 1—14
Allerton...............1 0 1 0 3 0 1 0 0—[illegible]
Errors—Westfield, 2; Allertons, 7; Base Hits—Westfield, 13; Allertons, 6.

In the afternoon game Westfield put in Johnston and McManus, and the Allertons had Galligan of the Bayonnes. The score was:

Westfield.............3 2 0 1 0 0 0 1 2— 9
Allertons.............1 3 1 2 0 2 0 0 1—10
Errors—Westfield, 4; Allertons, 2; Base Hits—Westfield, 9; Allertons, 12.

The Westfields were short in both games the services of DeWitt and Sansom, who were relieved from duty in base ball in order to win the singles in tennis in the League tournament at Fanwood. This they did easily.

WHAT WILL THE WATER BOARD DO?

Should It Not Order the Work Stopped Pending the Court's Decision as to the Legality of the Contract?

Is it not good business policy and for the city's protection, that the Board should order Contractor Moore to stop work? Suppose the Supreme Court decides that the city's enemies, who are determined to break the present contract, are right and that the action of the Council of 1889 in granting the contract was unconstitutional, then Contractor Moore must be reimbursed every cent he has spent. Nobody questions that. And this sum grows every day the work continues.

Should the claim of the City's enemies —as set forth by their tool, the News—be upheld; and the law under which the present water works contract was granted, be declared null and void; then the contract and the bond would be wiped out and the sureties released. The City would be compelled to pay back to the Water Works company whatever money has been spent; added to the $6,000 deposited in monthly installments with the Treasurer; added to Contractor Moore's claim for services rendered, and added to such an amount of damages as the Courts would surely grant the incorporators who in good faith accepted the contract awarded them, and devoted their time and money to carrying out its provisions at the sacrifice of such other business as might have been set aside or lost through their acceptance of the work in this city.

A YOUNG BOY MAIMED FOR LIFE.

Another Victim of the Folly of Catching on Railroad Trains.

Harry Richardson, son of Charles Richardson of Scotch Plains, was maimed for life by a railroad accident at Fanwood, afternoon August 27. The lad was playing about the Central tracks, jumping on and off the cars of a moving coal train, when he slipped and fell to the ground, with one of his legs lying directly across the rail. A single horrid crunch of the heavy iron wheels against the flesh and bone, and a scream of agony from the boy, and the foot was severed at the ankle and lay, forever useless, beside the track. Engineer Moynahan, of drill engine No. 30, happened to be near the scene of the accident, with his crew, and the men carried the injured boy to his home. Dr. Westcott, of Scotch Plains, and Dr. Probasco, of Plainfield, were summoned, and the crushed leg was amputated below the knee.

Frank Allen and Wilbur Miller, two boys, picked up the severed foot and carried it to Richardson's home.

Oh, If 'Twere Only So!

(From the Newark Advertiser.)

The congregation of Grace Protestant Episcopal church, at Plainfield, will celebrate the twentieth anniversary of the rectorship of the Rev. E. M. Rodman this Fall, and contemplate making the event especially memorable by the erection of a handsome new church edifice on the commanding site at the junction of West Seventh and Sycamore streets.

Funeral of Mrs. B. F. Littell.

Funeral services over the remains of Martha Milliken, wife of Benj. F. Littell, ex-Postmaster of Bound Brook, were held at the Bound Brook Methodist church Sunday. The attendance was very large. Members of Jerusalem Lodge, F. and A. M., of which order Mr. Littell is a member, together with friends and relatives, attended from Plainfield. Mrs. Littell was a sister of John Milliken of this city, and of Elias Milliken of Dunellen.

Road Hogs Mar a Moonlight Run.

The run through Dog Tavern and Rahway to Elizabeth taken by the members of the Plainfield Bicycle Club Thursday night, was a merry affair. When the boys were about three miles from Rahway a carriage containing four men passed by, the driver, urged on by the others, lashing viciously at the bicyclists with his whip. Only one of the riders—Captain F. L. C. Martin—was hit, but the signal of war had been sounded, and the wheelmen dismounted, and ran after the carriage, intending to stop the horse and make the men pay for their fun. The driver, however, whipped up his horses, and the fellows escaped punishment.

At Rahway the cyclists took the new county road and followed it to Elizabeth, returning to Plainfield by train. On the cars one of the number, Ed. French, was missed. It was supposed that he had been inadvertently left behind studying the beautiful effects of the moonlight over the surrounding country.

The Handsomest of Its Kind.

Recent improvements made in Force's Hotel, on North avenue, reflect credit alike on the proprietor and workmen engaged. The latest improvement is the change of the bar from its former location in the rear of the office to a commodious front room, which has been handsomely papered in figured cartridge, or Boston ingrain, by W. S. Chase, who is excelled by none as a workman in his line of business and judgment in the matter of selection of paper and colors. The floor is covered with linoleum cloth, and the bar and surrounding woodwork are finished in cherry.

John Robertson, who has had long experience in large hotels in New York city, has charge of the bar, and it is needless to say he is adept in his business and understands how to cater to the wants of the numerous patrons of the hotel. T. O. Doane did the refitting of the bar. John L. Force put in the electric wires. Messrs Marsh & Ayres, of No. 10 Park avenue, were the contractors for refitting the room, which is the handsomest of its kind in the city.

Hoopskirts Again

May come into style, but it is hoped not. The transformation which will bring back that style of crinoline ought to be indefinitely postponed. Transformations in the health of thousands of women throughout the country have taken place during the past few years. Pale, haggard and dispirited, they have become bright-eyed and healthy. The secret? Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription, which cures all those ailments peculiar to women.

THE BROTHER'S SIDE OF THE CASE.

He Presents Many Mitigating Circumstances That Excuse Much, and Will Excuse More.

To the Editor of The Press:—In justice to myself and my family, it is but right that under the circumstances—after having been so often misquoted by the papers, relative to my position towards my sister—I should make myself understood through your columns touching my relationship with her, as spoken of in last Thursday's PRESS. The writer, whoever he may have been—certainly not your reporter—sought to do me great injustice in the article headed: "A Brother's Brutality." That article intimated that I had abused my sister and had cast her adrift, when the fact of the matter is that I have always protected her and given her a home under my roof, even after the time she made complaint against me.

It is true that the counsel who appeared for her did offer her some money, not perhaps so much out of charity, as the article would intimate, as in his endeavor to gain more sympathy for an undeserving woman. I did not cast her adrift that night, nor have I since, the truth of the matter being that she is still living with me. But I now desire to state through your columns, in order that my motives may not be misconstrued or impugned, that I propose to request her counsel to ask her to leave my premises; and in case of her failure so to do I shall deem it my duty, in as gentle a manner as possible, to request her to leave, which if she fails to do I must take some measures to dispossess her. Her actions before the trial, and since, have been entirely unbearable. Her condition is not of such a state as to make things as pleasant as a sister should towards her brother. She is a constant thorn in the side of my wife, and makes things very unpleasant for me. Since her supposed victory of the case, she has an idea, which she constantly throws out in my house, that the law compels me to do just exactly as she bids, and time after time she is constantly threatening law.

I do not wish to enter into the merits of your last Thursday's article, but this much I have to say. Those who heard the trial—and many were there—will deny the article entirely. This much, however, can be said: there was nothing shown that she came here for the purpose of collecting a debt. To the contrary, I can refer anybody who is interested to Frank B. Fay, No. 1 Pemberton Square, Boston, who will certify that I offered to my sister a permanent home, and for that purpose, and no other, I took her and her child into my house. As to the general character of myself, or complainant, I take great pleasure in referring you to my uncle, Chas. Wix, 53 Dey street, New York, who is acquainted with all these matters and understands her conduct for the past thirty years.

Now, sir, it is very distasteful to me to make any reference concerning her, or to drag family matters into public print, but I have a reputation and some honor at stake, and it is only right and just that the public who were not at the trial, hear the facts, and be informed of at least a portion of my story. She seeks daily to slander me at various places and to various persons, and I do this as a personal safety to myself.

OTTO HARTMANN.

[The article in THE PRESS merely presented such evidence as was given in court. Under it the Justice was compelled to hold Hartmann. As THE PRESS has already said, it believes but little of Mrs. Goetze's story, and her brother is entirely justifiable in taking means to remove her from his house in view of her recent proceedings.—ED.]

A Train Stopped by An Equine Quartette.

Four horses wandered away from their pasturage Friday morning and climbed upon the embankment of the Central Railroad at Liberty street. They roamed about the tracks and got directly in the path of a passenger train. The train was stopped, and the horses were tethered in a vacant lot to await the coming of their owner.

Organizing Under Captain McQuoid.

The Nameless Bowling club, that can beat anything in its vicinity barring the Crescent League's team of bowlers, reorganized at Westfield, Thursday, and elected the following officers:

President—Henry Jackson.
Vice President—Nathaniel Gardner.
Sec'y and Treas—Eugene Hanford.
Captain—Charles McQuoid.

But if Plainfield's Water Company is Illegal, so is Somerville's.

(From the Somerville Messenger.)

Chief Justice Beasley has granted a writ citing the city of Plainfield to show the constitutionality of its action in the granting of a franchise to the Water Works Co. of Plainfield by the Republican Council in 1889. If it is declared to have been illegal, the city will lose thousands of dollars.

A Thousand-Dollar Check for the Bride.

A fashionable wedding occurred in the Westfield Methodist Episcopal church on Aug. 27, when the Rev. Frank Bush Ham was married to Miss Margaret Aletha Mapes, daughter of Mrs. Stephen L. Mapes of Westfield. The groom is a son of Benjamin F. Ham of Cranford, who presented the bride with a certified check for $1,000. After the ceremony a reception was held at the home of the bride's mother. The bride and groom left on a late train for their future home in Nebraska, where the popular young preacher has a pastorate.

Plainfield Well Represented at the State Building Loan Convention.

Pursuant to invitations from Hon. James Bishop, Chief of the Bureau of Statistics of Labor and Industries, delegates from the various Building and Loan Associations of New Jersey met as a convention in the Assembly Chamber at Trenton, Tuesday morning, and continued in session through the afternoon. About one hundred and twenty duly appointed delegates were present, among them being Treasurer Codington and Secretary Harper of the Plainfield Building and Loan Association, and President Rushmore, Secretary Struthers and Attorney Stillman of the Home Association of this city. Ex-Speaker Armstrong, of Camden, presided in his usual able and dignified manner.

—A man of about 35 years of age was soliciting assistance from Plainfield shop keepers, on Friday, with the plea that he was a member of the G. A. R., in hard luck. According to his evident age, he was about six years old when the war broke out.

HOW CAN THE LONG
BE THE SHORT

a line may be a very long one and yet be the shortest between given points. For instance, the St. Paul, Minneapolis & Manitoba Railway has over 3,000 miles of road; magnificently equipped and managed, it is one of the greatest railway systems of this country; for the same reasons it is the traveler's favorite to all points in Minnesota, North and South Dakota and Montana. It is the only line to Great Falls, the future manufacturing center of the Northwest; to the fertile free lands of the Milk River Valley; and offers a choice of three routes to the Coast. Still it is the shortest line between St. Paul, Minneapolis, Fargo, Winnipeg, Crookston, Moorhead, Casselton, Glyndon, Grafton, Fergus Falls, Wahpeton, Devils Lake, and Butte City. It is the best route to Alaska, China and Japan; and the journey to the Pacific coast, Vancouver, Tacoma, Seattle, Portland and San Francisco will be remembered as the delight of a life-time once made through the wonderful scenery of the Manitoba-Pacific Route. To fish and hunt; to view the magnificence of nature; to revive the spirit; restore the body; to realize the dream of the home-seeker, the gold-seeker, the toiler, or the capitalist, visit the country reached by the St. Paul, Minneapolis & Manitoba Railway. HE WASTED NOTHING.

An Old Fellow Who Tried to Dicker with a Dentist.

AN old fellow that very much resembled the type of a countryman found in the comic pictures of the [illegible] illustrated weeklies, stumbled about on the stairway leading to a dentist's office, and finally discovered the door, knocked upon it until the dentist invited him in, in a tone by no means gentle, he [illegible] without going to the trouble of knocking down the house.

"Well, you air about the hardest man to git at I ever did see," the visitor remarked as he entered the room. "Been a-smilin' round here for a good bit."

"You have found me, and now what can I do for you?"

"You pull teeth, I reckon."

"Yes, that is a part of my business."

"All right. I have been bothered a good deal lately with a [illegible] snag of a thing, an' I thought that if we come to some sort of a understandin', I would have it snatched out. I never go to expense if I can help it—economy is my motto in all things. I'm a [illegible] myself—[illegible] for the [illegible] an' [illegible] all I can. What air you holdin' teeth at now?"

"I don't understand you."

"What air you holdin' teeth at—what is it worth to pull 'em?"

"Fifty cents apiece."

"That is for a whole tooth, I reckon. This here one"—and he opened his mouth with an awful grin—"ain't more than half a one, you see. I reckon you will lift her out for about half price."

"No, full price. I'd rather pull a whole one than a snag."

"Ah, ha! I didn't know but I could git up some sort of trade with you. I see down-stairs that you've got a lot of teeth fixed on a thing that looks like the ruff of a feller's mouth, an' I have heern that folks can chaw with them as well as they can thar nat'ral teeth."

"Yes, just the same."

"Well, now, I've got a lot of teeth at home that ought to be of a good deal of service to you. You must fix them on a ruff and sell 'em at a good figger. My wife—an' she never have pretty good-lookin' teeth, too—took the newralgy some time ago and Dock Wilson 'lowed that she better have all her teeth pulled out. She done it, an' was goin' to throw the teeth away, but I told her to hold on. She did so an' then I said: 'Now, look here, you know the principles of this household as well as I do, an' I don't see why you want to throw these here teeth away. They tell me that thar air fellers in town that take teeth an' fix them on a thing so that folks can chaw with them, an' [illegible] we can sell these teeth for a little something.' Now, to tell you the truth," the old fellow continued, "I have brought them with me—five of them an' all sound, you see"—he began to unwrap a piece of paper—"an' if you'll pull out this here tooth of mine, I'll give them to you. Ain't a [illegible] in [illegible], see? They air of the best, for before wife had the newralgy she never [illegible] hickory nuts with them. What do you say?"

AN' IF YOU'LL PULL OUT THIS HERE TOOTH.

At first the dentist was horrified, but after a time he said, with a smile: "No, I don't deal in second-hand goods."

"Well, but what do you git all your teeth?"

"Make them."

"You don't tell me that they air makin' false teeth now."

"Yes, that's what they are doing."

"That beats my time, dog'n. Reckon after while they will be makin' tongues. So you don't want these here puffickly sound teeth—rather make 'em, as it was."

"Yes, rather make them."

"All right, that part of my business is settled. Now for another drive. I ain't slept none for five nights. Just as soon as I would lay down this thing would begin to jump like a skeered frog, an' sleep was out of the question. I rubbed my jaw with all sorts of liniment an' [illegible] all sorts of bad tastin' stuff in my mouth, an' now I can't afford to lose any more sleep, for I've got to dig a well an' do a whole lot of other work. I'll give you twenty-five cents to jerk this thing out. Won't take you but a minit, an' you will be better off by that amount. What do you say?"

"I say fifty cents."

"Look here, out on my place I've got a blacksmith shop an' [illegible] a good deal, first and last, an' I sharpen a plow for twenty-five cents, an' it sometimes takes me more than an hour. You can certainly afford to do something for a quarter that won't take you two minutes."

"Oh! you could afford it, but I won't. I won't undersell my neighbors, you know."

"Well, then, I reckon we'll have to call this trade off. Good day."

He blundered down-stairs, and half an hour later, while the dentist was rubbing up his instruments of torture, there came another thump at the door. The "old feller" had returned. "Look here," said he, "I thought I'd talk to you a little further about this tooth. I went around to the lot where I had my hoss tied, thinkin' I'd go on home an' worry the thing out, but it got so howlin' me so that I couldn't stand it. Now, tell me, what is the very best you will do?"

"Fifty cents."

"Well, we'll call it fifty cents providin' you take these here teeth for half payment."

"I don't want the teeth. Throw them out."

"Oh, no, that would be a waste, an' my motto is never to waste nothin'. Fifty cents is a good deal of money to a man that [illegible] between the corn rows. Never plowed none, I reckon?"

"No."

"Well, if you had you'd know that fifty cents is a good deal. Suppose we say thirty cents?"

"You may say it if you want to, but I won't."

"Strange you air a hanger on if ever I did see one. How would forty strike you?"

"Won't strike me at all."

"Must have fifty, I reckon?"

"That's what I said."

"This tooth is about to kill me, now."

"All right; give me fifty cents and I will snatch it out."

He studied a few moments, and then, shaking his head, replied: "No, blame if I do. I can go to the circus for fifty cents—can't stay in the concert, but I can see the monkeys an' hear the clown sing an' see the fellers jump an' see the beautiful gal ride the hoss, an' will have something to talk about till fodder-pullin' time. Well, good-day. Reckon I'll go to the show."—Opie P. Read, in Arkansaw Traveler.

A BACKWOODS SUNDAY.

A Charming Picture of Life Amid Rural Scenes.

SUNDAY in the backwoods of Tennessee, viewed by one whose feet rarely stray from the worn paths of active life, may hold nothing attractive, but to the old men and women—the youth and maiden of the soil—it is a poem that comes once a week to encourage young love with its soft sentiment and soothe old labor with its words of promise. In the country where the streams are so pure that they look like strips of sunshine, where the trees are so ancient that one almost stands in awe of them, where the moss, so old that it is gray, and hanging from the rocks in the ravine, looks like venerable beards growing on the faces that have been hardened by years of trouble—in such a country, even the most slouching clown, walking as though stepping over clods when plowing where the ground breaks up hard, has in his untutored heart a love of poetry. He may not be able to read—may never have heard the name of a son of genius, but in the evening, when he stands on a purple "knob," watching the soul of day sink out of sight in a far-away valley, he is a poet.

When the shadow of Saturday night falls upon a backwoods community in Tennessee, a quiet joy seems to lurk in the atmosphere. The whippoorwill has sung unheeded every night during the week, but to-night his song brings a promise of rest. The tired boy sits in the door, and, taking off his shoes, strikes them against the log door-step to knock the dirt out, and the calf, that has followed the women when they went to milk the cows, comes and rubs against him. The humming-bird, looking for a late supper, hums among the honeysuckle blossoms, and the tree-toad cries in the locust tree. The boy goes to bed, thrilled with an expectation. He muses: "I will see somebody to-morrow."

On the morrow the woods are full of music. The great soul of day rises with a burst of glory, and the streams, bounding over the rocks or dreaming among the ferns, laugh more merrily and seem to be brighter than they were yesterday. Horses stand near an old log church and a swelling hymn is borne away on the blossom-scented air. The plow-boy, sitting near the spring, heeds not the sacred song, but gazes intently down the shady road. He sees something coming—sees the fluttering of a gaudy ribbon and is thrilled. A young woman comes up the road, coyly tapping an old mare with a dogwood switch, and eager lest some one else may perform the endearing office, he hastens to help the young woman to alight. He tries to appear unconcerned as he takes hold of the bridle rein, but he stumbles awkwardly as he leads the animal toward the horse-rack. When he has helped her down and has tied the horse it is his blessed privilege to walk with the girl as far as the church door.

"Who's Jim a-doin'?" he asks as they walk along under the embarrassing gaze of a score of men.

"Plowed yistiddy; ain't doin' nothin' to-day."

"He here to-day, I reckon," he rejoins.

"No, went to preachin' at Ebenezer."

"What's Tom a-doin'?"

"Went to mill yistiddy; ain't doin' nothin' to-day."

"He here to-day, I reckon."

"He 'lowed he would, but I don't know whether he will or not."

"What's Alf a-doin'?"

"Cut sprouts an' deadened trees yistiddy; ain't doin' nothin' to-day."

"He here to-day, I reckon."

"Yes, 'lowed he was a comin' with Sue Price."

"Anybody goin' home with you, Lize?"

"Not that I know of."

"Well, if nobody else ain't spoke I'd like to go."

"We'll see about it," she answers, and then enters the church. He saunters off and sits down under a tree where a number of young men are wallowing on shawls spread on the grass. The preacher becomes warm in his work and the plow-boy hears him exclaim: "What can a man give in exchange for his own soul?" But he is not thinking of souls, or of an existence beyond the horizon of this life; his mind is on the girl with a gaudy ribbon, and he is asking his heart if she loves him. The shadows are now shorter and hungry men cast glances at the sun, but the preacher, shouting in broken sentences, appears not to have reached the first milestone of his text, and it is evident that he started out with the intention of going a "Sabbath day's journey." One young fellow places his straw hat over his face and tries to sleep, but some one tickles him with a spear of grass. An old man who has stood it as long as he could in the house, and who has come out and lain down, gets up, stretches himself, brushes a clinging [illegible] from his gray jeans trousers and declares: "A bite to eat would hit me harder than a sermon west of a rock. Don't see why a man wants to talk all day."

"Thought you was mighty fond of preachin', Uncle John," some one remarks.

"Am, but I don't want a man to go over an' over what he has already done said. If my folks wa'n't in thar I'd mosey off home an' git suthin' to eat."

"Good book says a man don't live by bread alone, Uncle John."

"Yes, but it don't say that he lives by preachin' alone, neither. But on! they are singin' the doxology now, an' I reckon we will soon be loosed."

The plowboy goes home with his divinity—Uncle John's daughter.

"THOUGHT YOU WERE MIGHTY FOND OF PREACHING?"

"Reckon Jim will be at home?" he asks, as they ride along.

"He ortent be. Air you awful anxious to see him?"

"Not so powerful. Just 'lowed I'd ask. I know who's yo' sweetheart," he says, after a pause.

"Bet you don't."

"Bet I do."

"Who is it, then, Mr. Smarty?"

"Uncle Jones."

"Who, him? Think I'd have that [illegible] thing?"

"Well, if he ain't I know who is."

"Bet you couldn't think of his name in a hundred years."

"You must think I can't, but I can."

"Well, who, then, since you are so smart?"

"Mose Alderson."

"Ho, I wouldn't speak to him if I was to meet him in the road."

"But you'd speak to some people if you was to meet them in the road, wouldn't you?"

"Yes, of course I would."

"Who would you speak to?"

"Oh, lots of folks. Did you see that bird almost hit me?" she suddenly exclaims.

"I reckon he 'lowed you was a flower."

"Oh, he didn't, no such of a thing. You ought to be ashamed of yo'se'f to make fun of me thater way."

"I wa'n't makin' fun of you. No, if I was ter ketch anybody makin' fun of you it wouldn't be good for him."

"What would you do?"

"I'd whale him."

"You air awful brave, ain't you?"

"Never mind what I am; I know that if any man was to make fun of you he'd have me to whup."

A number of people have stopped at Uncle John's house. They sit in the large passageway running between the two sections of the log building, and the men, who have not heard the sermon, discuss it with the women who were compelled to hear it from halting start to excited finish. The sun is blazing out in the fields and the June-bugs are buzzing in the yard. It is indeed a day of rest for the young and old, but is it a restful time for the housewife? Does that woman, with flushed face, running from the kitchen to the dining-room and then to the spring-house for the crock jar of milk, appear to be resting? Do the young men and women that are lolling in the passage realize that they are making a slave of her? Probably not, for she assures them that it is not a bit of trouble, yet when night comes—when the company is gone—she sinks down, almost afraid to wish that Sunday might never come again, yet knowing that it is the day of her heavy bondage. Old labor has been soothed and young love has been encouraged, but her trials and anxieties have been more than doubled.

It is night and the boy sits in the door, taking off his shoes. To-morrow he must go into the hot field, but he does not think of that. His soul is full of a buoyant love—buoyant, for the girl with the gaudy ribbon has promised to be his wife.—Opie P. Read, in Arkansaw Traveler.

TEMPERANCE NOTES.

ACTION OF ALCOHOL.

Scientifically Considered Inebriety Is a Dissolution of Brain Functions.

All clinical study shows that some state of defective brain and nerve development, or some form of functional or organic degeneration, precedes the first use of alcohol. In certain cases it is clearly central nerve exhaustion, functional perversions, organic defects from injury or disease, or hereditary predisposition. The first use of alcohol, either in so-called moderation, or in toxic doses, as in intoxication, seems to concentrate and organize the forces of dissolution, which, from this time, move on with great uniformity and accelerating speed. When inebriety is fully developed, this is very apparent, and often traceable from stage to stage.

The action of alcohol as a paralyzant on both cell and nerve fiber, and its chemical interference with nutrition and circulation, together with the complex forces of heredity and environment, are all powerful causes readily explaining the presence and progress of dissolution.

In the more recent studies of the mind, three divisions are recognized, the emotions, the volitions and the intellects, from these the evolutions and dissolutions can be traced. The study of inebriety should follow these divisions, and point out the changes from a healthy mind. Beginning with the present track back the emotional, volitional and intellectual changes, and ascertain how far they have been the result of alcohol and narcotics; or of previous degenerations, defects, injuries or hereditaries. While the facts are numerous and complex, and often difficult to substantiate, yet when grouped and compared they range themselves into certain outline forms of dissolution that can not be mistaken. The following are some of the general facts seen in all cases of inebriety. The dissolution of volition is the first prominent symptom. This is loss of self-control, either local or general. The co-ordinating brain centers are enfeebled, and the man is unable to direct his acts or conduct with consistency. The greater the loss of vital energy, the weaker the volition, until finally he is a mere creature of any functional impulse that may be present. Alcohol not only produces loss of nerve energy, but damage to nutrition, and inability to restore this loss, and the desire for relief becomes more and more intense, demanding a continuance of spirits for this end. This dissolution process may be apparent only in matters controlling the functions of the body, and the influence of surroundings upon them, or it may extend to relations of life beyond this. Dr. Wright has very aptly termed "this paralysis at first functional, then organic." Beginning in failure to regulate the more simple acts of the body, it extends to the complex duties and relations, and finally ends in dementia. The inebriate has always more or less pronounced dissolution of volition, which increases as his case becomes more chronic.

The next prominent phase of dissolution is that of the emotions or feelings. The exhaustion from the palsy of alcohol and the derangement which may have preceded it, manifests itself in emotional changes, in great exaltations and depressions. The psychical sensory centers are in a state of intense irritation, and all impressions cause pain, both psychical and physical. Alcohol relieves this quickly. States of brain anæmia, which Meynert thinks are due to a spasm of the arterioles and an arrest of the blood supply, cause deep despair and melancholia. In the early stages an effort is made to escape these nerve depressions by the increased use of spirits. Later it deepens into despair and suicide. The exaltations and hyperæsthesia are followed by a profound lowering of all the functions with anæsthesia. These emotional exaggerations and depressions are evidence of the sensory centers and dissipations of energy. Manifest in slight changes at first, then it passes on to mania and melancholia. The inebriate has always a pronounced dissolution of the emotions. He is subject to every appeal from both within and without, and the capacity of discrimination and control becomes weaker steadily. In the Temperance, political and prayer meeting these cases are very interesting studies, and the degree of dissolution can be very readily seen.

The third diversion is the dissolution of the intellect and intelligence. This function is the power of associating ideas and comparing them with others. It has been described as the process of the formation of new ideas by the union of one already impressed tract of nerve tissue with another. Or the process of utilizing new and old groups of memory motor cells by uniting these to those already in use; or of getting into action organized tracts of thought in the exercise of memory. Any state or condition of paralysis which will break up the complicated sensori-motor groups, or sever their minute attachments, will be manifest in the intelligence.

The delusions, the false beliefs, the strange surroundings and oddities of inebriates are common in all cases. Beginning in simple matters pertaining to the bodily functions, it grows until it includes all the relations of matter and mind. With the decline of nervous energy, and impairment of the higher functions of the brain, the lesions of intelligence increase. It may be for a long time apparently confined to the care and control of the body, but as dissolution goes on it embraces every function of the brain. In some cases a degree of automatic intelligence remains long after general brain failure appears. This has given rise to a false belief that an inebriate may possess unimpaired judgment and intelligence up to the end of life. In these three ways the march of dissolution can be traced in all cases. Beyond this there is a phase of dissolution not so clear, because it concerns the higher and more recognition of the higher relations and duties of life, undergo a marked dissolution. His veracity, his honor, his pride of character, his sense of duty, all suffer, and are finally paralyzed.

Thus in all cases of inebriety there is a chain of dissolution which can be traced back to causes and conditions which may be reached by therapeutic aids and means of prevention. This is the line of scientific study from which the real facts may be discovered.—Quarterly Journal of Inebriety.

AN EVERY-DAY STORY.

How a Bright Young Man Ruined Home, Character and Happiness.

Many years ago, while a clerk in Wall street, New York, a new financial institution was started in Broadway, and, learning that an acquaintance of mine had been appointed to a prominent position therein, I called to see him with my congratulations for his good fortune. Being a young man of very good abilities, the prospect seemed favorable for his further advancement and usefulness.

But who can tell what lies in the unseen future! Some years after I learned that he had lost his situation on account of intemperate habits. These evil habits, I was informed, had been contracted by the free use of wine among his friends socially and at public dinners.

After losing trace of him for many years he called at my house in the spring of 1876 to solicit pecuniary assistance. He was so altered in his appearance that I at first hardly recognized him. I listened to his sad tale of degradation and suffering, he having been separated also from an interesting family by his own acts. In the midst of his drunken career he had come near to the borders of death, and, on recovery, a kind physician, who had attended him in his sickness, took him into his employ in order to try and save him. He accompanied this physician in his visits to many persons who had limbs maimed and broken by accidents which occurred when they were stupefied with liquor. The sight of their helpless and forlorn condition led him to reflection, and the thought came to his mind that perhaps his body might yet be a case for the surgeon's knife. He then resolved at once to stop short in his downward career, and proposed, with the assistance of friends, to go to Binghamton and spend a year at the Inebriate Asylum at that place, hoping that course would be the means of his cure.

About a year after this interview, I heard that he had left Binghamton fully cured, and succeeded in obtaining a situation as book-keeper in a railroad office in New York. While he was employed there, a vacancy occurred in the cashiership of a bank in the city of his former residence, not far distant from New York, and through the influence of relatives and friends there, he was appointed to fill the vacancy. Shortly after his appointment I called upon him at his office, and found him very happy in the changed condition of his affairs. He said he was now restored to his wife and family, and the future looked bright and encouraging. But in my visit there, an incident occurred which struck me unfavorably. As I was walking near his place of business I observed him enter the bar-room of an inferior-looking hotel. I followed him to the bar where liquor ran freely, but he purchased only a few cigars. He apologized to me for being found there, but gave as his reason, that in that place they had a favorite brand of cigars which he could not get elsewhere. I remonstrated and told him that I thought it was very unsafe for him to go where there was even the smell of liquor. But he replied that he apprehended no danger, as he was so sick and disgusted with alcoholic drinks that nothing could again induce him to touch them.

Hardly a year passed before I heard that he had relapsed into his former habits and lost his situation. Soon after he called at my office in a partially intoxicated condition and solicited money to buy food, stating that he was almost starved. I refused to give him money, but offered to get him a dinner. He thanked me, and I told my son to go with him to a certain "Temperance restaurant," and provide him with a good meal. My son afterwards took him to the "Woman's Christian Temperance Prayer Meeting," where he was introduced, and, at his request, made the subject of prayer. He left before the close of the meeting, stating that he was anxious to be in time for the next Philadelphia train. My son followed him towards the depot, but on the way his appetite seemed to furiously crave drink, and he took opportunity suddenly to escape out of sight.

The last sad news that came to me was that he had died of delirium tremens in a police station in Brooklyn.

How my heart ached for his poor wife and family, who had their hope so raised to be cast down again in utter disappointment.

This sad case teaches us an important lesson. It shows the fearful strength of the chains of intemperance, the necessity of watchfulness and of looking to a Higher Power for deliverance.

It would seem that this man, with such a favorable change in his circumstances, had every inducement and encouragement to persevere in the work of reform. It shows that there is no safety for one who has been formerly addicted to intemperate habits to place himself in the way of temptation by visiting where liquor is sold, even for the purchase of other articles. We are told to pray: "Lead us not into temptation," but if a reformed man is unavoidably thrown into such places, he should cry mightily unto God to "deliver him from evil."—Christian at Work.

GAME TO THE LAST.

A Woman Who Was Proof Against the Tyranny of Her Husband.

In a Jefferson avenue stairway, directly back of a fruit stand, a man and a woman sat on a step yesterday. He had several bananas and oranges on his knees, and a policeman who halted to wop his heated brow was led to remark:

"Well, old man, you seem to be having a good time."

"Yum!" was the reply, as he buried his nose in another orange.

"Are you his wife?" was asked of the woman.

"Yes."

"And you don't like fruit?"

"Yes, I do."

"Then what kind of a game is he playing?"

"We are on an excursion," she explained. "He got mad and I got mad. He says I've got to eat dirt first. I've said I won't and I won't. He thinks he'll bring me to time."

"Sang!" growled the husband as he gnawed close to the rind.

"I'll never give in!"

"More mad!"

"I don't care! I figured on this and came fixed for it!"

And she slipped off her shoe, took a Canadian quarter out of it, and beckoning to the fruit-man, she said:

"Oranges, bananas, peanuts, taffy and lemonade! We'll see who bosses this job before I get through! Get a whole dollar back of this, and if that isn't enough I'll pawn my parasol for more!"

And as the officer walked on the husband was ripping the veneering of his third banana, and the wife had bitten the broad side out of a nickel-plated orange.—Detroit Free Press.

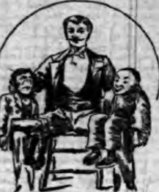
THE ART OF VENTRILOQUISM.

With Plain, Practical Directions, by Which the Various "Voices" May Be Acquired in a Few Weeks.

At the present day, when every schoolboy is more or less a conjuror, and any one possessed of a few dollars can obtain the most elaborate "tricks" that are being continually invented by the ingenious artists and exponents of the magic art, it is rather surprising that its sister accomplishment, "Ventriloquism"—an art now, as ever, quite as mystifying and equally entertaining—is so little understood.

The prevailing idea is that the ventriloquist "throws his voice" in the direction in which he wishes it to sound. This is altogether wrong, and a little serious thought would convince any one that it is so; but it is just for the want of this serious thought that persons remain in ignorance about it. They accept the theory and trouble their heads no further on the matter.



THE VENTRILOQUIST AT WORK.

Perhaps some reader will say: "How is it that when a ventriloquist calls to some imaginary person, say under the floor, the answering voice comes from under the floor?" I say that the voice does not come from under the floor. If the ventriloquist is a good performer the voice appears to come from under the floor, I admit, but in reality it is not so. The secret of the art lies in the correct imitation of a sound as it is heard after traveling from a distance; and the effect of the voice appearing to come from under the floor is obtained by the skill of the artist in producing a sound exactly resembling a person speaking in that direction, as it would be heard after coming through the floor.

There is another idea very general about ventriloquism: It is thought that a special gift is necessary. This, to a certain extent, is correct, as natural qualifications are necessary to become proficient in any calling. One man is naturally a mechanic, while another is more fitted for a lawyer; this man would succeed best as a farmer, while that man would get on better as a vocalist or a musician.

But it is not exactly in these qualifications that the gift necessary is supposed to exist. It is imagined that a peculiar formation of the throat and vocal mechanism is requisite. This is also wrong. The lungs and other vocal organs should be in a sound, natural, healthy state.

If this is the case, all that is required, when the following instructions are learned, is patience and perseverance, without which nothing can be accomplished.

One other remark I should like to make here, and it is necessary that the intending student should understand it before he commences practice. Avoid straining after effect. If a certain sound or voice can not be obtained at first easily—which is likely to be the case—do not strain to get it, but practice gently until it can be produced easily. This advice can not be too often repeated, as beginners are likely to forget it.

The first thing necessary in commencing the study and practice of ventriloquism is to learn to speak without moving the mouth—an accomplishment not very difficult, but which must be learned before any thing further is attempted.

It would be advisable for the student, when practicing this part of the lessons, to stand before a looking-glass; he will then be able to detect any muscular movement of the face or lips, and correct it.

When in this position, let him open his mouth slightly and hold the jaws firm, as if he was trying to prevent some one from opening them. The front teeth should be about a quarter of an inch apart, and the lips held naturally.

He should now go through the alphabet, slowly sounding every letter distinctly, and in a loud, full tone of voice. The vowels will be easy enough, but some of the consonants will be difficult to articulate plainly without moving the lips. These must be imitated as closely as possible, and, with a little practice, this can be done well enough to be indistinguishable at a short distance.

The most difficult letters to pronounce without the action of the lips are, in their order, P, M, B, F and V.

P being the most obstinate letter to pronounce, we will tackle it first. It is utterly impossible to pronounce it correctly without moving the lips; another letter must, therefore, be substituted for it.

The student will find that K is the nearest approach; he must, therefore, when sounding the letter alone, pronounce it as key, and in words he must substitute the K for the P whenever it occurs—as kut for put, kerhaks for perhaps, kussy for pussy, etc.

With a little practice, this substitute letter can be pronounced so much like the original that very few will distinguish the difference.—Golden Days.

Their Predicament.

Mildred—So you and Charlie are both Presbyterians. I think it's so nice for a girl and her fiance to belong to the same church.

FREEHOLDERS PROCEEDINGS.

[OFFICIAL]

ELIZABETH, N. J., Aug. 7, 1890.

Regular meeting of the board of chosen freeholders of Union county held on Thursday, Aug. 7, 1890, at 2:30 o'clock P. M.

Present—Director Hubbard and Freeholders Bender, Briant, Doty, Howard, Jones, Kyte, Littell, Pierson, Roll, Russell, Sullivan, Thompson, Trabon, Vanderbeek, Wright, West—17.

Absent—None.

The minutes of the last meeting were read and on motion approved as read.

COMMUNICATIONS.

To the board of chosen freeholders of the county of Union.

Gentlemen—At a meeting of the city council of the city of Elizabeth held on the 1st inst., your petition asking council to grant your board permission to make connection with the Westfield avenue sewer for the purpose of draining county road running from Elizabeth to Elmora, was received and the petition granted.

Yours respectfully,
E. L. P. COLEMAN,
City Clerk.

On motion of Freeholder Roll received and placed on file.

From county engineer:

To the board of chosen freeholders of the county of Union:

Gentlemen—In compliance with one of the provisions of the specifications for all the county roads now under construction, I feel obliged to call the attention of the board to the work on the following contracts, which, I consider is being unduly delayed, to the serious detriment of the best interests of the county.

Morris avenue, Summit and New Providence.

Contracts dated May 23, 1890.

I have repeatedly urged upon the contractor the necessity of beginning this work, but so far without effect, except that he has begun to haul stone on the latter contract.

North avenue, Union township and Rayway and West Jersey street, city of Elizabeth.

Contracts dated May 10, 1890.

The contractor has only this week begun work on the Union township contract, and nothing has yet been done in the city of Elizabeth.

Morris avenue, Union township.

Contract dated Sept. 3, 1889.

While much of the work has been done at each end of the township, there is yet a great deal to do, and it is a cause of just complaint on the part of the residents along the line of this avenue, that the work is not pushed to an immediate conclusion.

I know of no reason why it should not be completed at once.

In regard to the foregoing contracts I would now suggest that the board now take such action as it may deem proper to insure prompt and energetic work on the part of the contractors for these avenues.

F. A. DUNHAM,
County Engineer.

On motion of Freeholder West received and referred to the committee of the whole.

COMMITTEE REPORTS.

County Engineer F. A. Dunham submitted his report showing the condition of each county road at this date, which on motion of Freeholder Vanderbeek was received and placed on file.

To the board of chosen freeholders of the county of Union:

Gentlemen—The committee appointed at the last meeting to confer with city authorities in regard to expense of erecting booths under new election law, would report that the representatives of the cities were of the opinion that inasmuch as they paid proportion of the county tax they should not be called upon to bear any part of the expenses. Your committee after taking in consideration the matter would recommend that the election booths to be paid for by the county be used at the municipal elections, provided the cities procure proper places for their storage, take full charge of them at each election and pay all the expenses for any damage done to them and of keeping them in repair.

J. F. HUBBARD,
C. D. WARD,
E. M. WOOD,
Committee.

On motion of Freeholder Trabon received and adopted unanimously.

To the board of chosen freeholders of the county of Union:

Gentlemen—Your committee on Plainfield bridges would respectfully report that they have examined the bridge on La Grande avenue and Richmond street, over Cedar brook, and find the capacity of throatway insufficient to carry the water, therefore your committee would recommend the building an iron, I beam bridge eighteen feet span and width of street, cost not to exceed twenty-five hundred dollars.

All of which is respectfully submitted,
A. VANDERBEEK,
WILLIAM HOWARD,
JAMES T. PIERSON,
GEO. W. DOTY,
WILLIAM H. BRIANT,
Committee.

On motion of Freeholder Jones received and adopted unanimously.

To the board of chosen freeholders of the county of Union:

Gentlemen—Your committee on public buildings would respectfully report that they sent out specifications for two hundred election booths to be delivered at the various polling places throughout the county, and have received the following bids:

C. A. Smith, Westfield, $992.50; Spicer & Hubbard, Plainfield, $1,634; Patrick Sheridan, Elizabeth, $1,466; P. P. Freeman, Rahway, $1,594.

Your committee would recommend that the bid be awarded to C. A. Smith of Westfield.

All of which is respectfully submitted,
WILLIAM HOWARD,
JAMES T. PIERSON,
GEO. W. DOTY,
Committee.

On motion of Freeholder Roll received and adopted unanimously.

From committee of the whole:

To the board of chosen freeholders of the county of Union:

Gentlemen—Your committee would recommend the adoption of the following resolution:

Resolved, That notice be given by the clerk of this board to such contractors on county roads as are behind with their work, that such work is not being pushed to the satisfaction of the board according to contract, and that this board calls their attention to the time limit for completion of said roads specified in the contract, and will insist upon the terms and conditions thereof.

WILLIAM T. WEST, Chairman.
GEO. KYTE, Secretary.

On motion of Freeholder Pierson adopted unanimously.

RESOLUTIONS.

By Freeholder Doty:

Resolved, That the committee on Westfield avenue county road be empowered to examine the bridge crossing said avenue near the residence of Mr. Linden Cole and if in their judgment it is necessary, to rebuild the same at a cost not exceeding the sum of $1,200, provided, however, that nothing be done in the way of rebuilding until such direct outlet shall be approved by the committee.

Freeholder Roll moved its adoption.

On roll call adopted unanimously.

By Freeholder Vanderbeek:

Resolved, That the committee on Plainfield bridges be authorized to proceed to build a bridge over Cedar brook on LeGrande avenue according to recommendation of committee at a cost not to exceed twenty-five hundred dollars.

Freeholder Briant moved its adoption.

On roll call adopted unanimously.

By Freeholder West:

Resolved, That a committee of five be appointed to examine the Banta bridge, over West brook, Roselle, and report to this board the necessity and probable cost of replacing the present superstructure by a new and substantial bridge.

On motion of Freeholder Kyte adopted unanimously.

The director named the following committee:

Freeholders West, Thompson, Pierson, Briant, Bender.

By Freeholder Pierson:

Resolved, That the lunacy bill for this quarter, amounting to $6,683.45, be paid when bill is approved by the lunacy committee.

Freeholder Howard moved its adoption.

On roll call adopted unanimously.

By Freeholder Wright:

Resolved, That a committee of five be appointed to examine the bridge on Jaques-ave, Rahway, and report at next meeting of the board the necessity for and probable cost of rebuilding the same.

On motion of Freeholder Littell adopted unanimously.

The director named the following committee: Freeholders Wright, Howard, Vanderbeek, Russell, Sullivan.

By Freeholder Howard:

Resolved, That the clerk of this board be and is hereby directed to communicate forthwith with the clerks of the various cities and townships and obtain their consent in writing to the purchase of the polling booths required by the new election law, at the price named by C. A. Smith, of Westfield, and when such consent is obtained the public building committee be authorized to enter into contract with Mr. Smith as per their recommendation.

Freeholder Briant moved its adoption.

On roll call adopted as follows:

Ayes—Director Hubbard and Freeholders Bender, Doty, Howard, Jones, Kyte, Pierson, Roll, Sullivan, Thompson, West—12.

Not voting—Freeholders Briant, Littell, Russell, Trabon, Vanderbeek—5.

IN CHANCERY OF NEW JERSEY.

To Henrietta Schlitz and Charles C. Schlitz, her husband.

By virtue of an order of the Court of Chancery of New Jersey, made on the day of the date hereof, in a cause wherein Freeman Steile is complainant and you are defendants, you are required to appear, plead, answer or demur to the bill of said complainant on or before the nineteenth day of August next, or the said bill will be taken as confessed against you.

The said bill is filed to foreclose a mortgage given by you to the said Freeman Steile, dated October 26th, 1888, on lands in the city of Plainfield, New Jersey, and you Henrietta Schlitz are made defendant because you own said lands, and you Charles C. Schlitz are made defendant because you are the husband of the said Henrietta Schlitz and claim some interest in said lands.

Dated this eighteenth day of June in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and ninety.

SOME SOCIAL PLEASURES.

O, free and easy neighbors are so nice to have about;
The daytime isn't lonely when they're running in and out.
They give a sense of safety from the burglars in the night—
Oh, yes, a social neighborhood is ever a delight.

It's pleasant in the morning, when you're busy making cakes,
To have old Mrs. Jones drop in to tell you all her aches,
And when she's gone see Mrs. Todd come padding up the walk
To cheer your drooping spirits with how people of you talk.

It is indeed enjoyment when the servant from next door
Comes for a cup of sugar or a pinch of tea or more;
It's fun to lend your papers, books and tools, because, you know,
To get them back necessitates a call you likely owe.

It's pleasant in the afternoon, when dying for a nap,
For Mrs. White to visit with her baby on her lap,
And have to say it's beautiful and cunning—when it ain't,
And kiss it when its squalling tries the patience of a saint.

It's nice when neighbor's children in your garden come to play
And pluck your choicest flowers which they, after, throw away,
And trample with their muddy feet your cleanly stoop and hall,
And raise so grand a racket that you can not think at all.

And when your neighbor's chickens, goats, pigs, cows, and dogs and cats,
Come in to scratch, root, howl and bite and fight ferocious spats,
The day is never lonely for you're busy [illegible]
[illegible]

It's pleasant in the evening, when you want to go to bed,
To entertain late callers while they talk you nearly dead;
You like to hear their merry laugh and loud discussions long,
And have them wake the baby with a jolly midnight song.

Indeed it is delightful to all patiently and smile
When these familiar neighbors of the free and easy style,
Run in to chat or borrow—while the ones you care to see,
For fear they are intruding, stay away so [illegible]

Yes, for a fact, it's pleasant to have neighbors all about;
They find you're very handy when they feel like going out.
They "accidentally drop in"—a dozen times a day—
And give you such enjoyment that you wish they'd stay away.

THE STRANGLER VINE.

A Horrible Plant in Yucatan, the Grip of Which Is Death.

A Prospector, While Searching for Wealth, Falls Into the Clutches of the Deadly Creeper—His Terrible Struggle for Life.

YOU want to know how those marks came there, do you? Well, you would guess a mighty long time before you would come near it, so I'll spare you the trouble and tell you the story."

He held up his brown right hand as he spoke, says the San Francisco Examiner. Across the back of it were two livid lines. One of these lines passed inside his hand and wound around his little finger. This finger was twisted and broken and bent backward. Right up to the finger-nail extended the fiery thread-like line.

The second line was a deeper red, wider than the other, and from it other filament-like lines branched, covering the wrist with a network of scarlet tendrils. The main line could be seen to wind once around the wrist and was then lost up the speaker's sleeve.

"Well," he resumed, "you remember the excitement that followed the discoveries of silver in Yucatan in 1877. The Indians had been bringing down small quantities of horn silver for some time and selling it at Merida. Finally one of the half-breed merchants of that town got an Indian drunk and induced him to tell where they obtained the silver. They say it was one of the mines from which the Aztecs, or whatever race it was that built the cities the ruins of which cover so many miles in that country, used to get silver for their temples. At all events the merchant came back with two burros laden with almost pure silver. He said that there was silver enough in sight at the mine to load a fleet of steamers. He told in a general way where the treasure mountain was, and started out with a pack train for more. One of his mules strayed back nearly a month later, but that was all that was ever heard of him.

I THOUGHT I COULD TRACE THE OUTLINES OF TWO HUMAN FORMS.

"I was one of the swarm of prospectors that started out to find the old mine. It had taken the merchant two weeks to make his first trip, so we could calculate about what distance he had traveled. I had for a companion a Balize Indian hunter, who knew something of the interior country. We traveled ten days through the wildest country that any one ever heard of. Mountains whose snowy tips were thousands of feet above the clouds and whose sides were covered with jungles so thick that for days together we simply had to hew our way through it. At last we reached a valley, the other side of which was bounded by a separate chain of mountains. These, from where we stood, seemed perfectly unassailable, but my companion said he had been on top of them.

"'From the summit,' he said, 'you can see the Chihuandassl.'

"I had heard of the Chihuandassl. The name means Table of Dead Men, and the Indians say it is covered with plants that have the power of motion.

"'Have you ever been on the Chihuandassl?' I asked.

"'No man has ever gone there and returned to tell of it,' he answered.

"We crossed the valley, passing through the ruins of a great city built of almost transparent quartz, and finally struck the trail he spoke of and two days later stood on the top. On the other side was a narrow gulch and beyond it a sheer wall many hundreds of feet high. Still the top of this was lower than we were and we could look down upon the Table of Dead Men. The mesa on the other side of the gulch seemed perfectly level, and as far as we could judge was surrounded on all sides by just such a precipice as we saw. The country is all sandstone, and the swift little rivers have nearly all worn deep channels for themselves. In many localities you can walk one hundred miles, be able to throw a stone into the river, and yet you may die of thirst, so high and erect are those fearful walls. The Chihuandassl was covered with some low vegetation, and there were a few trees in the distance.

"'That is the flower that travels,' said my companion.

"He noticed my look of amused incredulity and resumed rather angrily:

"'You don't believe it? I have seen it move. Look there!'

"I looked. The table was agitated and looked like the waves of the sea. The whole green surface seemed to approach the edge nearest us. My hair rose for a moment, then I burst out laughing. 'It is only the wind tossing the snakeweed,' I said.

"'But there is no wind here.'

"He spoke truly. The air where we stood was perfectly still. Yet, I explained, it might be a breeze engen*dered by the nature of the country* that did not extend to our side.

"'No, no,' he insisted. 'The Indians who have lived here for years know better. Those flowers are devils. No one who goes ever comes back from there.'

"Two Indians who loved one woman went up on the Chihuandassl to battle. Human eyes never again saw them alive. We are told that they fell victims to the flower that creeps.

"I had a first-class pair of glasses with me and I directed them to the plateau. Half covered with the vines and creepers I could see something white. There were two spots that might be skulls, and I thought I could trace the outlines of two human forms. They might have been rocks, and were doubtless what originated the Indian legend.

"An idea suddenly occurred to me that this story of certain death to whoever went up to that mountain-top was a story of the Indians to prevent any one from going there.

"'I'll bet a horse,' said I, 'that the mine is there, and I'm going to see.'

"I did, to cut it short. I left him there, and, with one mule, started for the Chihuandassl. I calculated that I could get around in three days, and told him to camp there and wait for me. It was nasty work getting down into the river-bed, but I did it before night, and had the satisfaction of camping on an old trail that night. Early the next morning I entered a fissure at the base of the lone mountain. It was a dry water course, not more than a dozen feet wide, and wound around between high sandstone walls. It was, however, comparatively free from brush, and I got along famously for a time. There were many rattlesnakes and centipedes along the old water course, but nothing more.

"I had been going up the old channel for probably four hours, getting higher every step. The walls of the water course were getting lower, and at this point I was not more than forty feet below the surface. As I turned a sharp bend, however, I came right up against a bowlder that completely filled the creek bed. The trail ended right there. It appeared as if the rock had recently rolled down to where it lay. I thought that if I could climb over it I could continue on up the water course. So I started to climb. The bowlder was rough enough to enable me to gain holds for my hands and feet, and though it was slow, hard work and I often slipped back, at last I managed to surmount it and stood on top. To my intense sur*prise I found myself within a dozen feet* of the floor of the mesa and just above me one arm of the giant cactus I had seen from the other mountain. Then I determined, instead of continuing in the dry creek bed, to scale this wall and so reach the mesa where I expected to find the silver mine.

"The sandstone was soft and I had a strong knife. Besides, at the edge I saw some vines hanging over that looked strong enough to bear my weight if I succeeded in reaching them. So I began to climb the wall.

"At last I grasped the hanging vines.

"The stems were covered with fine points like a prickly pear, but I could not let go without falling. I reached my other hand higher and grasped another vine.

"In an instant its tendrils were around my wrists, other stems fell over the edge of the cliff. They curled around my arms and waist like snakes. Then they began to draw me up, and almost before I realized it I was dragged over the edge of the chasm almost to the foot of the cactus.

"The vines dragged me on, other stems curled about my legs and drew tighter and tighter.

"Then I realized that the Indian story was no fable. The idea of being in the power of this constricting thing that covered acres of land paralyzed me for an instant. The hand that had first touched the vines was being crushed in the devilish tendons. My little finger was broken backwards by the power of the vine. The pain brought me to my senses, and I began to fight for my life. One hand was still free, and in it was my knife. I began to hack at the snake-like coils of the devilish vegetable. As fast as I could cut away one running stem another would coil around me. Fight as I would, the vine was stronger, and on and on it dragged me.

"My foot struck something and I felt it crush and crumble beneath my heel. I looked down. It was a human head, one of those white spots I had seen through my glass. The body, fearfully shrunken and emaciated, lay there among the coiling, twisting vines. Near it was another.

"I realized it all while I backed and struggled. These two had been caught in the toils of the awful monster like myself and strangled.

"I was getting weak. The pressure about my limbs was unbearable. I had cut myself badly in cutting the strangling bonds. I looked over the mesa with a wild hope of seeing some one or something to help me.

"The mesa was all in motion. The vines were twisting, curling, falling, rising, trembling. It was a moving mass like the ocean and the waves were reaching and falling towards me.

"It was not the wind, blowing the snakeweed. The fiendish plant had life and motion, and every fiber of it was straining to reach me. I knew that if those advancing waves of black ever reached me I was lost. I would be like those shriveled bodies by the giant cactus.

IN AN INSTANT THE TENDRILS WERE AROUND MY WRISTS.

"I made a final effort to escape. I could hear the muscles crack and strain as I pulled. I cut the thickest stem that enveloped me, and, for the first time since the struggle began, was able to make a step backward. But the fight was not over yet. A dozen smaller tendrils, like so many whip-cords, were tangled about me, cutting into my flesh with a terrible power. I had kept my throat free, though the vegetable serpents seemed to strive to coil about it. So I cut and struggled backward. A final slash, a jump, and I was over the edge and on the bowlder in the dry creek. But the demon's arms followed me. I knew that they would seize me again before I could get down, so I dashed to the other side of the water-course and clambered up there.

"How I thanked God when I found nothing there but greasewood and cactus. I saw the vines swing and sway over where I had escaped, and then I fainted.

"When I came to, the mesa was quiet again. The vines had receded, and if it had not been for my aching, swollen limbs I would have sworn it was all a nightmare. But there laid the two dried-out bodies. While I lay there I recognized them. It was the half-breed merchant from Merida. The other was doubtless the Indian who betrayed the secret of the silver mine."

THE CRANKS.

There is one kind of man has accomplished much good,
Though often without a sole thank;
Because his intentions were misunderstood,
The man to you known as a crank.

When Noah his ark in the days of old reared,
The rabble around him were frank
To tell him a flood was something unheard,
And to laugh at the commodore crank.

But when the tide rose o'er the mountain tops wide,
And they strove in the sea's bosom dank,
They thought of the truth they once did deride,
And remembered the words of a crank.

When Columbus first told to the Castilian court
Of a country rich, verdant and rank,
They laughed him to scorn, and made him their sport,
And doubtless some called him a crank.

But when a new world he discovered full soon,
Their puns and their railleries sank;
Each strung up his harp to fit a new tune,
And praised the wise thought of the crank.

When Fulton his steamboat was building, 'tis said,
Folks thought it a lunatic's prank,
And deemed his fit home in a house for the mad,
For fools, you know, laugh at a crank.

But when the invention, completed at last,
Moved off mid machinery's clank,
They opened their eyes as she swiftly steamed past;
Not one of them called him a crank.

When Pasteur his mission attempted to show,
Some called him a fool mountebank;
But now they are forced to acknowledge we owe
A pæan of praise to the crank.

His thoughts are all twisted and tangled one way,
Like the strands in a thread knitter's hank;
But this will be righted and straightened some day,
And then all the praise to the crank.

Like a foreign hand-organ that grinds but one tune,
When turned by an Italian lank,
His mind ever dwells on one thing; only one,
The one-sided mind of the crank.

Perpetual motion oft claims his thought,
Though to others 'tis almost a blank;
If his wished-for invention should ever be brought
To work, it will be by a crank.

On this you can bet with assurance your gold,
And high on your winning can bank,
Though hatless, though homeless, though houseless and old,
The smartest of men is the crank.

SAVED BY A BANK-BOOK.

Disastrous Experience of a Greenhorn on a Florida Homestead.

I HAD been a clerk in a city store ever since I was old enough to work, and I was green. There is no doubt about that in my mind now, though I spurned the thought then. I had sold the stony little farm on the bleak Vermont hillside, which had come to me after my father had worried himself into his grave trying to get rich on it, and had landed in Florida full of guide-book opinions of the balmy climate, the fertile soil, the clamoring market for sub-tropical fruits, and the ease with which they could be raised in that "land of the cypress and myrtle."

"I took up a homestead on the long, narrow strip of land that divides the Atlantic ocean from the Indian river. I did not go to see it before 'entering' for it at the land office, because I knew that to be unnecessary. The guide-book said that strip was wonderfully fertile, salubrious and easy of access. I found a good many homesteads on it not yet occupied, and I wondered a little that a greater rush of settlers had not been made for it. However, I set this down to my own good luck in being so early in the field, and figured on selling off enough of the homestead in a year or two to pay for a fine house on what I retained for my own use.

"I reached the spot by sail-boat from Titusville, at the head of the river, and was delighted to find that I had neigh*bors, not far away to the north*, and also to the south. They were 'crackers.' That is the name which one native Floridian applies to other native Floridians whom he does not like. They had orange groves, to be sure, but they did not seem to be growing rich on their crops. This I attributed to their shiftless method of agriculture. Instead of clearing their land of the big pine trees that cumbered it, they merely girdled the trees, and left them standing, dead and bare, a constant menace to passers-by and to the young orange trees which were planted among their roots, as well as an eyesore on the landscape.

"I determined to cut my trees down, in the good old New England fashion, clear the land thoroughly, and raise vegetables between the rows of orange trees till they were old enough to bear a golden harvest. First I set to work on the underbrush, and then came my first experience with palmetto roots. If there is one thing more exasperating than another to get out of the ground, it is a palmetto root. A palmetto as high as your waist, with a stem as thick as a baby's arm, will have a root as big around as a boy's leg and as long as the whole boy. This root runs along, just under the surface of the ground, send*ing down a fringe of tough feelers into* the subsoil, that holds it like the suckers of an octopus.

"But the most exasperating thing about it is that when you have dug down and got a fair hold on the thing, with your hands, if it's a little one; with your hoe (a big, strong, heavy affair, made for the purpose), if it's a middle-sized one; and with a chain attached to a mule, if it's a big one; the pesky thing breaks off in joints about a foot or two long, at the first good pull; and you have to hitch on all over again.

"Well, by the time I had two acres of palmetto roots pulled out and a wilderness of big trees down on top of them, my back was almost broken, my ready money all gone, and no prospect of a crop in sight. I had come down in the early fall and now it was about Christmas. The season had been a pretty dry one and the logs looked so full of sap that I thought they would burn, though too green to burn fast. So I set them on fire.

"That was the most disastrous fire I ever lit. I forgot that the sap of these trees was mostly resin. The way the flames crept along through that mass of underbrush and leaped up every resinous pine tree it met was terrific. I fought it as long as I could move a limb and then dropped, exhausted and despairing, and watched it roar off through the woods like an evil spirit that I had raised and was powerless to control. It was sundown when I gave up the fight and I could do nothing more that night. Too wretched to eat, I drank freely from my little store of whisky and threw myself on my couch.

"The liquor and the exhaustion made me sleep far into the next day, and I was awakened a little after noon by loud knocks at my door. Opening it I was confronted by five or six big, rough men, all armed with shotguns and with an ominous look on their faces. They strode into my cabin and shut the door behind them.

"'Stranger,' said the spokesman, gruffly: 'You have started a fire here in your darned Yankee ignorance of farmin', and all the good you've done is to burn the rawsing and the bark off a lot of green trees, and now ye've got a lot of black logs on your hands that are a derned sight meaner to handle than ever. But yer derned fire has spread into the groves of yer neighbors, where the dead trees were still a standin', and they have been turned to the ground, as anybody but a natural-born fool might 'a'-knowed they would, and our orange trees is ruined with them. Such varmint as you isn't fit to live in this country. Say yer prayers, mister, for we're going to plant you before we go back.'

"I was terribly frightened, for I could see they were in dead earnest. My teeth began to chatter, but a bright thought struck me. I had deposited some money in a bank at Jacksonville on my way down, and had a check-book with some blank checks left in it, though the money had all been drawn out long ago.

"'Gentlemen,' I said, 'I am clearing this place for a Northern syndicate, who are going to make extensive plantations here, and I can pay you on the spot for your losses, caused by my ignorance of Florida forests, and I assure you that such a thing will not happen again.' With that I whipped out my check-book, took up a pencil and prepared to write with as much show of confidence as I could muster under the circumstances.

"I had been pretty free with the five or six hundred dollars I had brought down with me, and so the story of the Northern syndicate seemed to them to be likely enough. The word syndicate, any way, seems to have an awe-inspiring power down there. The idea that a syndicate might be penniless seems preposterous. But it was the bank checks that overwhelmed them; checks on a real National bank were something they had heard of, but never handled before.

"You may be sure they swindled me awfully in making up the estimates of their losses, but I was not disposed to be penurious, merely making enough objections to allay possible suspicion. So I drew a check for each man, big enough to buy his whole farm five times over, and they went away laughing to themselves at my gullibility.

"As soon as they were out of sight, I packed into my boat all my outfit, set every stitch of sail and reached the nearest town by the next night, sold my outfit for enough to buy a ticket North and did not breathe freely till I felt myself well beyond the reach of these simple 'crackers,' whose groves I had ignorantly ruined, and in whose hands I knew my life would not be worth an hour's purchase when they discovered how I had escaped their just indignation."—N. Y. Tribune.

STRICT SOBRIETY.

How Colonel Blowers Failed to Carry Out His Pledge.

COL. HARVEY BLOWERS promised his wife that he would never again drink a drop of intoxicating liquor. "Molly," said he, "from this time forward number me among your soberest acquaintances."

"Harvey, you have made me so many promises."

"Yes, dear, I know that."

"And each time you have broken them."

"That's very true, precious, but I will never do so again."

"How many times have you made such a promise?"

"Oh! never mind that. I have come to the conclusion that unless a man reforms he is gone."

"Well, Colonel, I will give you one more trial."

"Now you are talking. One more trial is all I want."

The next day, after the above-narrated conversation, the Colonel accidentally met an old friend. Had not the meeting been accidental it would not have occurred. The Colonel owed his friend. After a few moments of pleasant conversation the two men went into a saloon. The Colonel said that he would take seltzer. His friend looked at him in astonishment.

"OH! I'M WITH YOU."

"I've stopped drinking," said the Colonel.

"The deuce you have!"

"Yes."

"Since when?"

"Well, I haven't taken a drink for several days."

"What's the matter?"

"Nothing, only I promised my wife that I would not drink again."

"That's all right, of course, but you are not that foolish, I hope."

"It is not foolishness, old boy. I must stop."

"When, just as you meet me? Take a little something."

"I don't want seltzer, that's a fact. Give me a little ginger ale."

"Oh, now here, Colonel, don't whip the old man around the stump."

"Well, confound it, give me a little whisky," said the Colonel.

A few moments later the friend said: "Won't you have something else, Colonel?"

"Nothing else, thank you."

"You can stand another whisky."

"Of course, I can stand another, but I don't want one."

"Well, hang it, let's take one anyway."

"All right, blamed if I care."

They drank. After about ten minutes had elapsed, the Colonel said:

"Suppose we try another one?"

"Can we stand it?"

"Stand it!" The Colonel laughed.

They took another one and seemed to stand it.

"Well, sir," said the Colonel, "do you know that a few drinks of whisky make a man of me? It's a fact. My memory is better, my mind becomes more acute. After I take a few drinks I can recall odd little scraps of poetry and little grabs of sentiment which had long been forgotten. Here, fill 'em up again."

They drank.

"I promised my wife that I would not drink again," said the Colonel.

"Well, you haven't drunk again," replied the friend. "You've drunk whisky."

"By George, that's a good joke," exclaimed the Colonel. "Haven't drunk again. Haw! haw! haw! Old fellow, you ought to start a humorous paper."

"I could run her and don't you forget it."

"Well, I should say so. Say, when I go home my wife will not know that I have taken a drop."

"Of course she won't. Suppose we try it again."

"Oh, I'm with you."

They drank.

"I don't see how these fellows around town can stand it to drink so much," said the Colonel. "I couldn't, I am sure. In fact I don't see by any man desires to throw himself away. Let's see, what remark was it that the Governor of North Carolina made to the—"

"Haw! haw! haw!" laughed the friend. "That's a good one. A little more of the same, please. Well," he continued when the drinks had been brought, "here's a rum go, as the Englishman says."

"A bloody rum go," added the Colonel. Then they leaned on the bar and laughed.

As the Colonel was going to dinner, he mused:

"I was never soberer in my life. Blamed if I don't believe that I am soberer than I was before I took a drink."

Dinner was not quite ready. The Colonel's wife was tacking down a carpet. The Colonel said that he would help her. She looked at him suspiciously. It hurt his feelings. He got down on his knees and went to work. His words [illegible] Pretty soon his wife, in attempting to arise, uttered a shriek. He had tacked her skirts to the floor. Then he began to blubber. It was no use, he said, for a man to try to be anybody. Everybody was working against him. He would go away and never come back again. His wife kissed him and he blubbered afresh. The Colonel, like many another man, is a brute.—Opie Read, in Arkansaw Traveler.

WANTED THE TOWN.

The Only Man on Record Who Ever Frightened a Western Real Estate Shark.

Let an Eastern man register at a hotel in any of the far Western towns and he is sure of a caller within an hour. The caller will turn out to be a real estate agent, and he will be followed by No. 2, No. 3, No. 4, and so on until the list is exhausted. A Detroiter who recently made a trip to Washington Territory had no sooner registered at the hotel in a certain town than he was asked for a brief interview, and the interviewer began:

"You are probably seeking a real-estate investment?"

"Yes."

"You want an investment that will double in one year's time."

"I do."

"I have it."

"How much capital will be required?"

"Ten thousand."

"I wouldn't fool away time with it."

"Do you wish to go $50,000?"

"That would be no object, sir. What can this whole town be bought for?"

"You don't—don't mean—"

"But I do. Go out and get me a ten days' option on the whole town, everything included, and, if not too high, I'll close the deal and pay the cash inside of a week."

The agent walked softly out, his eyes as big as onions and his hair on end, and the Detroiter was not bothered by any others. They hadn't any thing rich enough for a man who could buy the whole earth.—Detroit Free Press.

MADAM WAS PLEASED.

But Unfortunately She Expressed Her Delight Too Soon.

Housekeeper (to pleasant-faced girl at employment agency)—Have you any objections to the country?

Girl (politely)—None at all, madam.

Housekeeper—I have quite a large family.

Girl—The more, the merrier.

Housekeeper—Seven children, two of them quite young.

Girl—I love little children.

Housekeeper—It will be necessary for you to bake bread, wash and get the meals. I attend to the pastry and chamber work myself.

Girl—I will also make the pastry and do the rest if you will allow me.

Housekeeper—I can not give you more than three afternoons off.

Girl—Two will be sufficient, perhaps more than I will want, as my plan is to give strict attention to my household duties and thus get the work done up promptly every day, so as to have plenty of opportunities to rest between times.

Housekeeper—I am delighted—

Stranger (suddenly entering)—Sorry to interrupt you, madam, but you are conversing with one of my patients who has just escaped from the Hopelessly Incurable Lunatic Asylum. — N. Y. Weekly.

His Preference.

"Would you rather spend the afternoon at the base-ball grounds or here at the tennis club?" she inquired, fishing for a compliment.

"Here, by all means," he replied. "There isn't a single bar-room handy to the base-ball grounds."—Munsey's Weekly.

"Just foraging on my own hook," replied the little trout, and it was landed.—Judge.

CONGRESSIONAL PRIMARIES.

By order of the County Democratic Executive Committee.
THOS. S. [illegible], Chairman.
CHAS. A. [illegible], Secretary.
Dated September 1, 1890.

THE REASON WHY.

Vermont has always been a Republican State sure and steadfast. When other States, by a decreased Republican vote, have manifested popular dissatisfaction with the policy and action of the Republican party, Vermont has kept on recording her uniform large partisan majorities, no matter whether important national questions were before the people or not. So politically iron-clad has Vermont ever proven herself to be, the Democrats had no more expectation of making gains in that region than they had of converting to free-representative principles the Czar of Russia.

An election has just been held in Vermont and with what result?

A falling off of several thousand from the usual Republican majority, and a gain of [illegible] Democratic members of the Legislature.

Shades of Jefferson and Jackson, against whom Vermont was so bitterly antagonistic, where will the thunderbolt of popular indignation strike next?

If the election had taken place in Mississippi, instead of Vermont, the New York Tribune and kindred partisan journals would be crying aloud fraud, fraud, but the Green Mountain State being completely under Republican control, these false cries dare not make the charge of [illegible].

What caused such a remarkable change? We think a truthful answer is before us.

Ex-State Senator [illegible], of [illegible], Vermont, a life-long Republican, who voted for Abraham Lincoln and every Republican candidate since, in an open letter gives the following as among the reasons why he cannot longer go the ticket.

Read what he thus deliberately declared:

"I am opposed to fostering and building up monopolies.

I am opposed to the McKinley Tariff Bill, gotten up, as the report of the hearings before the Ways and Means Committee clearly shows, in the interest of the capitalists and against the common people.

I am opposed to legislation under the guise of protection so fraught with evil to the country that Secretary Blaine, a protectionist, became alarmed.

I am opposed to the Republican members of Congress obeying the behests of a certain wealthy wool-grower, who pleads for an increase in the tariff on wool, although he admits that he has made enormous sums of money under the present rates of duty, and that his income is nearly one-third greater than it was eight years ago, when he began the business."

That tells the story. The revolutionary, monopolistic, [illegible] and prodigal course of the present Republican Congress is working a powerful effect among the people. The result in Vermont is a just protest against a reckless Congress.

If any single New England State so demurs, what may be expected from the mighty West, where Republicans, by scores of thousands, are in open revolt and mean what they say.

Equal and exact justice to all the people and every legitimate pursuit is the corner stone of free government. Remove that foundation, and the edifice reared in 1787 by wise and patriotic men will topple over.

If Congressmen cannot prove themselves statesmen, they should at least be gentlemen. The recent exhibition of vulgarity and fisticuffs on the part of certain Republican members was a disgrace to the American name, intensified by the fact that they were not called to account.

Republican Congressmen charge the Democratic administration of President Cleveland with parsimony, because, instead of squandering, it husbanded the peoples' money. Prudent economy and faithful supervision are the sure tests of wise statesmanship, while profligate expenditure is the direct opposite.

A Maine Republican member of Congress, called back to that Prohibition State for the special purpose of aiding the re-election of Speaker Reed, failed to deliver an appointed speech because he had such a large of [illegible] fire-water on board he could not possibly mount the rostrum. Notwithstanding that lamentable and publicly exhibited condition of a prominent leader of their party, some Republicans still declare that the Democrats monopolize the drink habit. Look within your own doors, gentlemen, and forget not that [illegible] is sounding brass, but [illegible] are solid gold.

The Senate of the United States evinced a spark of common sense when it rejected by a decided vote the motion of Senator [illegible], made no doubt at the instigation of would-be Philadelphia monopolists, to strike quinine from the free list. [illegible] the people [illegible] epidemics.

In the days of Henry Clay a twenty-five per cent. rate of duty was deemed amply sufficient to foster infant American industries. Mr. Clay has been dead many years, and the infants he cared for have grown to [illegible] manhood and waxed fat, yet some of them, at this late period, hunger and thirst after more bounty, protection at the public expense, which [illegible] is the natural result of all such [illegible] measures as that known as the McKinley, and ever will be.

The [illegible] American, [illegible] what it regards as authentic returns from the State census, now makes the following as the representation of the several Counties in the House of Assembly, until the next census:

Atlantic	1	Middlesex	3
Bergen	3	Monmouth	3
Burlington	3	Morris	2
Camden	4	Ocean	1
Cape May	1	Passaic	4
Cumberland	2	Salem	1
Essex	10	Somerset	1
Gloucester	1	Sussex	1
Hudson	11	Union	3
Hunterdon	2	Warren	2
Mercer	3
			60

The only changes are a loss of one Member each by Burlington and Morris, and a gain of one each by Camden and Hudson.

THE TRENTONS DIDN'T COME.

They Said the Weather Was Bad, But Others Said "[illegible]."

The game of base-ball scheduled for Saturday between the Trentons and the Crescent League didn't occur. The Trentons staid away from Plainfield, evidently afraid to come. They had defeated the Crescents, earlier in the season, in a game the Crescents ought to have won, and were well aware that they had no chance of winning the second game.

The weather in Plainfield Saturday morning was inclined to be showery, but the weather-wise base-ball management had sufficient gift of prophecy to know that there wasn't going to be rain enough to affect having a game, so they wired to the Trentons to come rain or shine. The Trentons twice sent word that they would surely be on hand for a game, and at about noon the Crescents received a message that the Trentons would reach here on the 2:30 train.

The train came, but the Trentons didn't, and in the evening they telegraphed that the rain had poured such torrents in Trenton that they couldn't get away. The manager of the Crescents promptly telephoned to other Trenton parties and received the information that no rain whatever had fallen in Trenton during the day.

As soon as it was evident that the Trentons had failed to keep their promise the Crescent management announced the fact to the expectant spectators, and stated that although a "scrub" game would be given all who desired could get their admission fee returned by applying at the box office. Owing to the fact that the cashier had but a limited supply of small change, and as few could change his bills, a number had to be given tickets instead of money. These tickets for this one game may be redeemed for cash at Laing's Hall, Tuesday evening at eight o'clock.

Three Games With Somerville.

The talk of the town is the series of games arranged between the ball teams of this city and Somerville, which news was first told in THE PRESS. They will be played the last three Saturdays of this month. The first, on September 13, will be at Somerville and the other two on following Saturdays in this city. The managers of the two clubs will hire in New York a professional umpire unknown to both. Each club will pay an equal share of the salary. An effort will be made to secure the one who umpired the Princeton-Yale matches. The entire receipts of the first game go to the Somerville club, and the entire receipts of the second game will go to the Crescent League. The receipts of the third game, after deducting the umpire's salary, will be equally divided between the two clubs.

The Crescent League's team will remain as it is. There will be no changes. The Somerville team, however, will be strengthened. The battery will be Harkins and Bowes. The rest of the team will probably be: O'Rourke, first base; Farrell, second base; Williams, third base; Howe, short stop; and Davenport, Bergen and Carbonell in the field. It is a strong team but the Crescents can beat it.

There is no one to be afraid of in this Somerville team. Galligan will be the extra man to go in the box if Harkins is hit, but he can't hurt anybody. Bowes caught for Plainfield in a game that the Somerville's won. Howe played here with the Metropolitans and could not hit over Martin's [illegible] besides being struck out by Gentle Gregg. O'Rourke played with the Crescents a year ago, and Farrell is a back number. All else that can be said is that Williams is a good one, the outfield is strong, and Harkins is a hitter from way back.

A Test at Law.

The Somerset County Board of Freeholders have refused to pay the Somerville newspapers the legal rates for publishing official reports. The papers decline to take less than the amount they claim the law allows for the advertising, and have carried the case to the courts. The situation is the same in many other New Jersey counties, and the newspapers of the State await with much interest the result of the test case. The papers have long been complaining that for publishing municipal and county reports they get far less than their space is worth, but this is the first legal test.

A Republican View of It.

(From the N. Y. Tribune.)

The threatened war between the Democratic bosses in Union county for leadership promises to break out shortly. There was a call issued yesterday by the Democrats in Elizabethport for a meeting on Wednesday night at Kenney's Hall, to indorse the candidacy of Wm. Hicks for Sheriff. This can only be regarded as a direct slap at the aspirations of Assemblyman Fred Marsh, who wants to be a Senator, as both he and Hicks hail from Elizabeth, and Elizabeth cannot expect to monopolize the two offices and leave the rest of the county out in the cold. The supporters of Hicks say they will bolt the ticket if he is not nominated.

OFFERED TO BURN DOWN THE HOUSE.

And Punctuated His [illegible] Speech With Pistol Bullets.

When the inhabitants of the Borough heard pistol shots, Saturday night, resounding along the atmosphere over the territory where Stony brook runs across into [illegible], they knew that the old feud between Louis Spriggs and Louis Wyckoff had broken out into bloody hostilities.

Mr. Wyckoff and Mr. Spriggs both live on Howard street, in houses opposite one another. If the Wyckoffs once loved the Spriggs, and the Spriggs the Wyckoffs, that love vanished long ago, for the enmity between the two households is firmly established. Ever since the youthful scion of the house of Spriggs first uttered that charming refrain—

Wyckoff, Wyckoff,
I'll [illegible] your head off!

in the ears of one of the younger Wyckoff children, and the insulted child responded with—

Spriggy, Spriggy, you think you're big;
Go wash your face, you dirty pig!

there has been bitter feeling between the two families.

Beyond the throwing of stones at the dogs of the enemy, however, and the casting of hot and unclean dishwater at the spies from the enemy's camp, and the hurling of cabbage-stalks against the enemy's front doors, no serious attempts to stain the sod with gore have been made, until Saturday.

Saturday night Louis Wyckoff was enjoying the pleasures of the family circle when he heard some one thumping against his side fence. In the code of punishments of the Wyckoff-Spriggs feud to thump against the side fence is a gross insult, and Mr. Wyckoff at once suspected that the thumper was the senior Spriggs.

As soon as Mr. Wyckoff showed himself Spriggs jeered and laughed, and seemed greatly tickled with the idea that he had disturbed the equanimity of the Wyckoffs. Then he produced a revolver, and fired bullets into the fence, and pranced around in the vacant lots, and fired more bullets, some at the fence, some at the wood shed, and some at the house. At this Wild West exhibition Mr. Wyckoff went in and got a gun, and told Mr. Spriggs to vanish. Mr. Spriggs was bold and defiant, and told Mr. Wyckoff to go back and get a kerosene can, or that he, Mr. Spriggs, would set fire to the Wyckoff house. Mr. Wyckoff raised his gun to his shoulder, and Mr. Spriggs, seeing that the gun meant business, retired to a respectful distance.

The result of the rencounter was the arrest of Mr Spriggs, and when the case had been thoroughly ventilated before Justice Hardy Saturday the prisoner was adjudged guilty and fined $10 and costs.

THE "WHITE CAP" MAN IN JAIL.

A Long Suffering But still Loving Wife Tells a Painful Story.

Edward C. Wilson, who received, last month, a warning, from the "White Caps," was a prisoner in the City Court on Tuesday, accused by his wife of neglecting and abusing her. Mrs. Wilson said she didn't want to have any harm done her husband; she merely desired that he be compelled to keep sober and cease maltreating her. She would like very much to have him go back to his work in Connecticut, but still if he wouldn't work he was welcome to stay in her home as long as he behaved himself. She didn't ask him to support her, she had hands and worked herself, and had a son to help her.

Edward had been all right, she continued, for a whole year, during which he hadn't drunk a drop, but a year ago he was led astray, and another had been his ruin. During the past week he had abused her continually, both by outrageous insults of tongue, and by blows and kicks. Monday he had again applied the vilest of epithets to her, and would have beaten her, but she escaped.

Mrs. Wilson was reticent about testifying, and wanted her husband released on the promise that he would reform, but Wilson in open court applied such an insulting and cowardly insinuation against his wife that Judge Codington felt no disposition to be merciful to him.

When the option of a $10 fine or ten days' imprisonment was announced Mrs. Wilson illustrated anew the story of woman's ready forgiveness for long suffering, and offered to scrimp and save each week one dollar of her own hard earnings, till she was able to pay the fine and let her husband go unpunished. The Court, however, protested against her suffering further for the man's misdeeds, and she sighed while Edward was led away.

The letter which Wilson received, in August, signed "White Caps, No. 9, first warning," accused him of scandalous neglect of his wife and threatened him with bodily injury.

GREEN HAY BURNS A BARN.

Another Midnight Blaze Due to Spontaneous Combustion.

The barn used by Austin Sturtevant and Charles A. Sturtevant, situated on Orchard place, near Liberty street, was burned at about 1 o'clock Tuesday morning. The fire was said to have been incendiary, but it transpires that the mow was packed with green hay which was moist enough to heat itself into a blaze, and the cause of the fire is therefore attributed to spontaneous combustion. The entire upper part of the barn was a blaze, and the flames were bursting through the slate roof, before the horses could be rescued from the stables below, and the wagons and harnesses saved. The fire department did good work, but nothing but the charred shell of the structure remains. Austin Sturtevant's house was somewhat blistered, in spite of liberal applications of water. The Sturtevants lose about $600, partially insured.

Plainfielders on the Petit Jury List.

The Plainfielders drawn by Sheriff Gaede on Tuesday on the panel of petit jurors were Abram Angleman, John C. Mosher, Lewis C. Dunn, Orlando E. Chamberlin and Eugene M. Laine. Jail Warden Charles W. Dodd also was drawn, but the Court excused him from serving.

The [illegible] Will [illegible] at Easter Time.

The vacation-loving young people of the Borough were chuckling Monday because their public school does not re-open until next week Monday, while the Plainfield schools opened on Monday. The difference is accounted for by the fact that the city schools close for one week at Easter time, while the North Plainfield schools do not, the Borough Trustees preferring to add the week to the summer holidays.

THE WATER COMPANY WILL CONTINUE ITS WORK.

ITS COUNSEL HAS A CONFERENCE WITH THE CITY'S ATTORNEY, AND OFFERS TO JOIN FORCES.

President Moffett Courteously Intrusts the Whole Matter to the Present Water Board —Other Doings of Interest in the Common Council, Including Signs of [illegible] Among the Big 4.

The harmony that usually characterizes the deliberations of the Plainfield Common Council was considerably disturbed Sept. 3 by the squawkings of a human voice trying on a new opera, whose notes, bereft of melody, went floating across the housetops and through the open windows, piercing the ears of all in the Council chamber with holes large enough to drop nickels in; and there followed, as a seeming result, a surprising chopping-up of the balloting over nearly every question. Councilmen voted for or against a thing just as everybody seemed to think they wouldn't, and the uncertainty of what the vote would be on each important matter arising added a spice of excitement to the interest of the session.

When the Council assembled, the subject uppermost in many minds was that concerning the water-works, and it was one of the first matters reached. The Corporation Counsel lost no time, after his return from Europe, in preparing his views on the subject, and they were presented in the following communication:

To the Honorable Common Council of the City of Plainfield:

GENTLEMEN:—On August 21st, last, Supreme Court Justice Magie allowed a writ of certiorari applied for by Israel Lewis against J. Herbert Johnston, William Fraser, Jr., Cornelius [illegible], [illegible], James Moore, Samuel Knox, John R. Moore and George Eyre, incorporators of the Water Works Company of Plainfield, and the Inhabitants of the City of Plainfield, for the purpose of reviewing the resolution of the Common Council adopted December 17th, last, purporting to give consent to the incorporation of such company, the resolution of the Common Council purporting to accept the offer and contract of said J. Herbert Johnston and others, and authorizing and directing the Mayor and City Clerk to execute the contract with the said company, and the contract purporting to have been executed in pursuance thereof, together with all matters and proceedings of the Common Council touching and concerning the said resolutions, offer and contract.

The probable purpose of the prosecutor is to test the constitutionality of the act of the Legislature adopted April 21, 1876, under which the Water Works Company of Plainfield was formed.

With respect to this question, it is sufficient at this time to say that long before the incorporation of the said company the Corporation Counsel of this city called the attention of the proposed incorporators and of their counsel, Mr. Hill of New York, to the fact that the constitutionality of the statute under which the incorporators proposed to organize, had several times been called in question. The titles of all such cases, and the books and pages in which the same were reported, were furnished by me to the company's counsel, and were carefully examined by such counsel, before the company was incorporated. The act in question has never been declared to be unconstitutional. As was decided by Vice Chancellor VanFleet in May, 1889, "The question whether that statute is valid or not is an unsettled legal problem * * * The question, though twice before the Supreme Court, is still unsettled." The remarks of the Vice Chancellor are as true today as when he uttered them. The committee of the Common Council then having the matter in charge, considered that as there appeared to be no other law under which any company having necessary powers of condemnation could be formed for the purpose of supplying water in this city, and as the proposed incorporators, after having their attention called to the cases in which the constitutionality of this law had been questioned were willing to invest their money, and take the risk of the statute being subsequently declared unconstitutional, the city could well afford to consent to the proposed incorporation, and to the proposed contract, whereby the whole expense of construction, including the supervision of the city's engineer, was to be borne by the Water Company.

The counsel for the water company adopted the view that inasmuch as the law had despite all attacks stood upon the statute books for some fourteen years, and several cities and towns were supplied with water pursuant to its provisions, it was highly improbable that the courts would declare the act invalid, and, if they did, he believed that there would be little difficulty in procuring the necessary remedial legislation which all such cities would, with one voice, demand.

The counsel for the water works company of Plainfield called at my office today and informed me that the company were making arrangements to proceed with the execution of the contract in strict accordance with the terms thereof, and that the company would be glad to unite with the city in taking any action that might be deemed advisable, looking to the full and entire completion of the contract in good faith as originally contemplated. The counsel for the company also offered to join forces with the city in defense of the action brought by Mr. Lewis in case the city should deem such concert of action advisable.

The writ was granted expressly on condition that argument should be had at the coming November term of court. The importance of the case renders it probable that a speedy decision will be handed down.

I advise that your honorable body refer the matter to some appropriate committee with power to act in conjunction with the Corporation Counsel in taking such action as the interests of the city may seem to require.

Dated September 3, 1890.

Respectfully submitted,
CRAIG A. MARSH,
Corporation Counsel.

Promptly following the reading of this report came the adoption of the suggestion that a committee of three be appointed to act with the Corporation Counsel in the matter. Before the committee was appointed, however, Councilman Newhall requested the privilege of being excused from serving on it.

"Giving this matter in charge of a new committee," he said, "will relieve the Water Board of a great responsibility. This responsibility we don't shirk, but we are willing to be relieved. Though in the natural course of events such a question should go to the Water Board, I hope that the Chair will grant me the courtesy of leaving me off the committee."

President Moffett listened quietly to Mr. Newhall's statement, and appointed the Water Board, with Mr. Newhall as chairman, as the committee.

The only other mention of water works appearing during the session was caused by the introduction of the "seventh report of progress" by Supervising Engineer Rudolph Hering.

Mr. Hering stated that the wells, connecting pipes and other essentials for collecting the water from the ground had been completed, and the erection of the pumping station was well under way. The building was being constructed of mountain stone and cement, hard and durable, and the workmanship was satisfactory, but the external appearance was coarse and inartistic, and the attention to architectural requirements demanded by such a conspicuous site had not been given. He had the assurance of the company, however, that they would yet give the building a thoroughly attractive appearance.

Two-thirds of the time—the report continued—for the completion of the water system, had expired, and though bids for material had been received the contract for the purchase of street mains and connecting pipes had not yet been completed. Even if a large force were immediately put to work it was not practicable to finish the water works properly by January 1, as the contract demanded.

Mr. Hering's report was referred to the Water Board, whose chairman, Mr. Newhall, "called attention to statements now made for the first time by Engineer Hering that the time had passed when it was possible to complete the works under the strict terms of the contract. Besides," he continued, "though the company has paid the $2,500 reported delinquent at the last meeting of the Council, there is now a few days overdue another $1,000. We should like, therefore, to have this entire matter referred to our Board with power. We want authority to take whatever preliminary legal proceedings the Corporation Counsel may deem necessary."

Mr. Newhall concluded with the statement that though he desired such action he didn't wish to make the motion himself, and Councilman Smith moved that the Water Board be given full power to take whatever preliminary legal proceedings Counselor Marsh might advise concerning the water company's fulfillment of its contract. The motion was unanimously carried.

Another matter concerning which much public interest had been aroused was the proposition which has been under consideration some time to give the city a perfect fire alarm system, and the popular local advocacy of the scheme was gratified by the awarding of a contract to construct in Plainfield the best system in the world.

The Committee on Fire and Buildings reported that after a careful examination of the several systems proposed, and a thorough consideration of the various contracts suggested, they deemed the offer of the Gamewell Fire Alarm Telegraph Company the most advantageous and the best. The committee had secured the addition of several advantages to the original proposition, and the company had agreed to furnish privileges worth $200 or $300 more than they had mentioned at first, with no increase of the original price, $3,125. For this sum they stood ready to construct, within four months after the signing of the contract, a perfect system of fire alarm, complete in every particular, and including a central or battery station, a signal station with thirteen connecting signal boxes, placed advantageously throughout the city, with five keys for each box, a whistleblowing machine to be attached to a whistle on the electric light works, gongs for the engine houses, and tappers for the house of the Chief Engineer and other fire officials. By the mere pulling down of a hook in each signal box the exact location of the fire is registered, and an alarm is automatically sounded indicating in just what part of the city fire is discovered. The boxes also contain signal keys for police service. The company proposed to use twelve miles of hard-drawn copper wire in the system—eight miles of bare wire, and two miles of insulated. At the completion of the system, in four months, and the payment of the specified sum, $3,125, it would become the property of the city, and the city would be licensed to use it under the Company's patents. It would be put in operation as soon as the Board of Engineers and the Committee on Fire and Buildings had inspected it and accepted it.

Mr. Newhall suggested, when the reading of the proposed contract had been finished, that all danger from electricity ought to be very carefully guarded against. He thought that all the wires used in the service ought to be insulated; it would be safer and more satisfactory in the end. He also deemed it advisable that an agreement be procured from the company guaranteeing the proper working of the system for a certain length of time.

Councilman Hetfield said that he didn't consider it necessary that all the wires should be insulated. The use of bare wires except in the neighborhood of electric light wires was entirely safe, and wholesale insulation would but add to the expense.

Chas. Wann, of North Plainfield, a representative of the Gamewell Company, was accorded the privileges of the floor. He stated that the cost of insulated wires would be about $30 per mile more than bare wires. The wires would be placed at the top of the present telephone and electric light poles, out of reach of the other wires. Insulation, he continued, was necessary only in proximity to electric light wires, which also were insulated. The thirty years' experience of his company had demonstrated the thorough success and safety of bare wires where no other wires than telephone or telegraph were near. Other cities mingled fire alarm, telegraph and telephone wires freely. As to a time guarantee, his company had so much confidence in their apparatus that any defects in mechanism or construction that manifested themselves inside of two years would be made good at the company's expense—and if there were any defects they would be discovered in less time than that.

Mr. Newhall expressed himself entirely satisfied with the statements of Mr. Wann, but still felt a dread of stringing any more bare wires along the streets or across buildings and lots. He felt that too much caution in such matters could not be exercised.

Mr. Hetfield still thought entire insulation a needless expense.

Mr. Smith agreed with Mr. Newhall that all the fire alarm wires ought to be insulated, to guard against every possible accident.

A motion was already before the Council to agree to the contract submitted by the Gamewell company, and Mr. Newhall moved to amend the contract by providing that the company give a time-guarantee satisfactory to the Committee on Fire and Buildings, and also providing that all the wire used in the system shall be insulated, a fair additional amount being added to the cost for such additional insulation.

For the amendment all voted aye except Mr. Hetfield who explained that he was in favor of the time-guarantee, but opposed to entire insulation as a useless expense.

The original motion, to accept the Gamewell Company's proposition, was then unanimously adopted as amended, and the Board of Engineers and the Committee on Fire and Buildings were authorized to fix the locations for the signal boxes.

The report of the Board of Fire Engineers was presented, stating that the cost of the new 10-inch steam whistle to be purchased by the city for use in connection with the Gamewell system of alarms would be about $300, while the old bell and tower could be sold for $400. The whistle would be perpetually connected with a strong head of steam, free of charge at the electric light works. The Board also recommended that the inlet to the fire well at the corner of Front and Somerset streets, be changed, at a cost of not over $60, from the forebay at French's Mills to the raceway, as now it constantly failed when most needed. The report was referred to the Committee on Fire and Buildings.

Wm. E. Johnson, sexton of the Methodist Episcopal church, was appointed keeper of the town clock at a salary of $8 50 per month.

Edwin H. Dobbs was appointed regular policeman in place of Eugene A. Laine, resigned, and Patrick Kiely was also appointed a regular policeman.

City Judge W. R. Codington reported that during the last quarter 73 prisoners had been brought before him, and $220.50 in fines had been paid. Overseer of the Poor J. Oakley Nodyne, reported that $1,095.69 had been expended by the city on the poor the past three months, and forty-eight families and single persons had been assisted.

Several residents petitioned for relief from the constant submersion of the roadway North of the railroad track near the Netherwood station, stating that in Winter the place was almost impassable, and that even in Summer the road was often a foot under water. The Committee on Streets will consult with the Land Improvement Company owning the adjoining property with a view to remedying the difficulty.

On motion of the Finance Committee the City Treasurer was authorized to borrow $1,000 for the poor fund, $5,000 for the general fund, and $2,500 for the fire department fund, and was authorized to pay two $500 fire bonds now due.

The Committee on licenses stirred a breeze by reporting as not approved the application of James Day for a hackman's license and Joel C. Giddis for a license to operate a stage line between Plainfield and Dunellen, giving as their reason the statement that the city had enough hackmen already.

Mr. Hetfield protested against discrimination concerning men going into the hackmen's business. This was the first instance, he said, where any attempt had been made to prevent a hackman from entering his chosen line of work.

Mr. Roberts and Mr. Smith considered that North avenue was already blockaded by too many vehicles.

Mr. Spangenberg thought it inadvisable to try to shut any hackman out at this late season of the year.

A vote was taken on the application of Giddis, and the first noteworthy split of the evening—outside of the nine-to-one vote on the fire alarm insulation question—occurred. Councilmen Dunham, Hetfield, Jenkins, Johnson, Moffett, Newhall and Spangenberg voted to grant the license. Councilman Gallup, Roberts and Smith voted no.

Then a vote on Day's application was taken, and Councilman Roberts pursed his lips and said "we might as well all vote aye," and voted aye himself. Consequently only two Councilmen—Johnson and Smith—voted against granting the license.

Liquor license applications next attracted attention. August H. Krohne of Plainfield avenue, asked for wholesale or "quart" license, and the License Committee reported that the application conformed to the laws and ordinances, and was correct in form.

Mr. Spangenberg instantly announced his intention of voting against the application.

"We have enough of such places already," he said. "Those to whom we have already granted licenses have paid high fees, and we ought to protect them against encroachment."

Mr. Smith held that Krohne's business would not interfere with that of anybody but the one other wholesale dealer.

Mr. Dunham at this point threw a little bombshell that he had been nursing in silence all the evening.

"I," said he, "dare to say that this man who now applies for a license has been selling illegally, in defiance of the law. It's a farce for him to seek our protection now. And what's more I believe there isn't a man here that doesn't know that Krohne has been selling illegally."

Mr. Smith retorted that Mr. Dunham's remarks were entirely wrong, as Krohne had not been dispensing illegally, and Mr. Hetfield stated that he for one hadn't known and didn't know (as Mr. Dunham charged) that Krohne had been selling against the law.

A tie vote resulted, Councilmen Gallup, Hetfield, Moffett, Roberts and Smith voting in favor of granting the license, and Councilmen Dunham, Jenkins, Johnson, Newhall and Spangenberg voting against it. The application was declared not granted.

The application of Michael F. Watson for a "quart" license next came up, and was defeated by the following vote:

To grant—Councilmen Hetfield, Moffett and Smith—3.

To refuse—Councilmen Dunham, Gallup, Jenkins, Johnson, Newhall, Roberts and Spangenberg—7.

Only one "quart" application was left—that of Matthew Kilpatrick. It was refused.

To grant—Councilman Gallup—1.

To refuse—Councilmen Dunham, Hetfield, Jenkins, Johnson, Moffett, Newhall, Roberts, Smith and Spangenberg—9.

Mr. Spangenberg announced that because he had voted against these applications it must not be inferred that he had joined a temperance society; the reason for his voting as he had was because he was in favor of high license for all. At this Mr. Dunham gave one of his cutest winning smiles, said that as for him he didn't think that temperance societies would hurt anyone, and rolled his eyes like cherub-marbles across the room towards the high license man.

Two stepping-stones presented to the city for use at the Public Library were accepted with thanks.

An ordinance was presented having in view the macadamization of Plainfield avenue from Seventh street to the city boundary line.

Mr. Hetfield objected to macadamizing streets in the outskirts and neglecting thoroughfares in the heart of the city. Ordinances for macadamization of Third and Fourth streets [and Elm place, Councilman Jenkins interposed] had been adopted long ago, and yet those streets were in many places in very bad condition.

Mr. Smith, Chairman of the Street Committee, said that those thoroughfares would be attended to as soon as the property-owners subscribed the customary percentage of the cost. Plainfield avenue was one of the oldest thoroughfares in Plainfield, and for eleven years no street had been in a more disgraceful condition. The property-owners had subscribed $2,000 more than one-half the cost of improvement, and the purpose of the ordinance was to keep faith with the subscribers and to put the avenue in first-class order, even going so far as to curb it in places where washouts frequently occurred.

Mr. Hetfield insisted that the streets in the heart of the city ought to be given attention before Plainfield avenue. Such streets as Madison avenue, Central avenue and Richmond street had been macadamized entirely at the city's expense; and why couldn't Third and Fourth streets be perfected now without demanding subscriptions?

After further discussion the ordinance was adopted by a vote of seven to three, Councilmen Dunham, Gallup, Johnson, Moffett, Newhall, Roberts and Smith voting in favor of it, and Councilmen Hetfield, Jenkins and Spangenberg against.

The Committee on Lights were given power to place electric street lamps along the improved Plainfield avenue.

On motion of Councilman Jenkins, the Mayor and Street Committee were appointed a committee to confer with the North Plainfield authorities concerning the widening and opening of Peace street.

Councilmen Smith and Newhall together framed a motion that when Council adjourn it be to meet Monday evening, September 15, in special session, to consider street railway matters, the water works question, and the proposition to audit city laborers' bills every two weeks.

Mr Hetfield moved to amend by adding the matter of street macadamization to the list of items for special consideration. The amendment was lost.

For the amendment—Councilmen Gallup, Hetfield, Jenkins, Moffett, Spangenberg—5.

Against—Councilmen Dunham, Johnson, Newhall, Roberts, Smith—5.

The original motion was then carried unanimously, and the Council adjourned for two weeks.

A Quarter-Century of Wedded Bliss.

Mr. and Mrs. G. E. Martin, of Warrenville, celebrated their silver wedding Thursday, and entertained a large number of friends at an evening reception. Among the guests from a distance were Mr. and Mrs. John Bacon and Mr. and Mrs. Sylvester Bacon of Westfield, and Miss Emma Hopper of Long Island City. The merriment was sustained till four o'clock in the morning. Many handsome gifts were presented.

A PITFALL FOR BOROUGH FEET.

Unguarded Excavations Secure a Victim, and Yawn for More.

Residents of the Borough say that their lives are in peril every time they pass Richard Elliott's vacant lot and gravel pit on Somerset street after nightfall. The ground has been excavated from the back of the lot close to the sidewalk line, and besides being considered an eyesore is a constant source of danger. It is a dark spot, after sundown. A few planks are usually laid across the edge of the opening, but no handrail or other guard has been erected, and no light is ever displayed; consequently, pedestrians may at any time, without warning, step off into space, and serious injury may result.

Last Monday night a woman, a resident of Duer street, returning from the grocers' excursion, congratulating herself on having passed the day without mishap, had occasion to pass the gravel pit. To avoid crowding others, she took a step aside, and fell headlong into the great hole beside the walk. She was stunned by the fall, and lay unconscious several minutes. When she recovered her senses two men with considerable difficulty lifted her out, and assisted her home. It is considered extraordinary that no bones were broken, nor serious internal injuries received.

The Borough authorities are the proper ones to see that every precaution is taken along their thoroughfares, to prevent such accidents. If they don't heed the case in point they may yet be taught a very severe lesson.

North Plainfield Assessments.

The Somerset County Board of Assessors has prepared a table of ratables in which North Plainfield Township appears as follows: Acres, 7,317; real estate, $1,640,700; personal estate, $261,550; debt, $85,250; valuation taxable, $1,817,000; polls, $955; school tax, $5,733.72; county tax, $8,721.60.

Money Missing and Man Gone.

Levi Darby, who lives near Dog Tavern on the road to Rahway, reported to Justice Nash this morning that the entire savings of his "chore-boy" had been stolen from the lad's room, and that a "hired man" was missing. He therefore wanted a warrant issued for the "hired man," but the Justice told him that mere absence from a place where money was simultaneously missing was no proof of guilt, and refused to issue a warrant.

It's a Brave Lawyer Who Fights a Railroad.

Charles A. Reed is busily engaged looking up evidence in the case of Miss Van Doren against the Philadelphia & Reading Railroad Company as first told of exclusively in THE PRESS, and which will probably be tried this month before the U. S. Circuit Court at Trenton. About a year ago Miss VanDoren was injured by a runaway horse which was frightened by a locomotive standing near the Middlebrook crossing.

A Lark That May Mean Horse Thief Imprisonment.

Wm. C. Kelly, of Oak Tree, drove to South Plainfield, Monday, to order his Winter supply of fuel. While he was dickering with the village coal baron two skylarking young men, boisterously intoxicated, took possession of his horse and buggy and drove to Plainfield. After a spin through Front street they tied the horse to a tree on Leland avenue, where the animal was found this morning. The two young men have vanished. They are known to the police only as "Thomson and pal."

Plainfield Lady Riders Astonish the Country Folks.

(From the New Brunswick News.)

Quite a sensation was created on our streets by the appearance of a party of lady bicycle riders from Plainfield. The ladies were Mrs. Green and daughter, Miss Maltby and Miss Fritts, daughter of Dr. Fritts, of that place. The ladies rode over by way of Metuchen in two hours, making some short stops, and returned home by way of Bound Brook. They were entertained during their stay in this city by the Misses Cheeseman, of Bayard street. They all rode what is known as the Safety bicycle.

Here's Good Advice For Plainfield Too.

(From the Somerset Gazette.)

A week from to-morrow the West Ends will play the Crescents of Plainfield at Somerville. The following Saturday the clubs will play at Plainfield, and there will be a toss up as to where the third game will be played. We hope there will be no bad words or feelings over the games. Let the Somerville people use the Plainfielders like gentlemen. Let it make no difference what the Plainfielders may say or do, show them that we are gentlemen. Let them have their say. It will not hurt us. The game will undoubtedly draw a large crowd.

He Lost a Little Piece, While His Father Lost It All.

Dewitt France got the fingers of his left hand in the cog-wheels of the reel on the hose carriage when the hose was being laid for Monday's fire. The result was that the end of one finger had to be amputated, but the other fingers although much mashed, may be saved.

His father, Gus France, many years ago, lost a whole finger of his right hand upon a like occasion. He was running to a fire when he stumbled and fell just under Tier's dam. His entire weight came on one finger which was rigid and pointed towards the ground. The bones were so crushed that the finger had to be cut off.

Another Hack at the Lee Estate.

The France Lee contested will case was recalled again at Elizabeth Friday by a suit which was begun against John H. Jackson and Monroe B. Long, the executors. The suit is brought to recover $2,100, which Charles E. Abbott & Son, of Rahway, claim France Lee owed them for services performed for him. They allege in their complaint that the old hermit, on April 2, 1888, at Rahway and Elizabeth, did confess the indebtedness and promised them that their services should be paid in full. He died not long afterwards and his executors ignored the claim. City Attorney Garret Berry, of Rahway, is counsel for the plaintiffs. The case will be tried at the January term of the Union County Court.

Swore to Tell the Truth, and Then "Forgot" It.

Mrs. Eppinger, who sells candy and cigars on Cottage place, had Harry Gardner arrested Monday and charged him with calling her improper names and striking her with his fists because she ordered him out of her place. Next morning she "had forgotten" everything that occurred, and to all Judge Codington's questions responded that she "didn't know," though she had told Captain Grant the whole story only an hour before. Gardner, however, had already admitted that he had been intoxicated and had misbehaved, and after censuring Mrs. Eppinger for her sudden loss of memory the Court fined the young man $10, which was promptly paid by a friend.

COUNCILMEN SAY SHARP THINGS.

A Wordy War at the Borough Meeting Over the Macadamization of Craig Place.

The September meeting of the North Plainfield Borough Council, which was held Friday night, was enlivened by warm personal discussion. Every time a resolution to macadamize a street is introduced those who have been fighting unsuccessfully for the benefit of other thoroughfares get angry and say sharp things, and last night was no exception. The difficulty arose over the resolution of Councilman Smalley to macadamize Craig place. Councilman Buckle promptly accused Mr. Smalley of personal motives, intimating that he was seeking only to benefit the property of Craig place relatives, and adding that Mr. Smalley had already shown too much family favoritism to the detriment of others. Councilman Smalley said he was seeking nothing but the public good.

Councilmen Emmons and Hegeman also had a wordy set-to. Mr. Hegeman made remarks which were taken as a sneer on the intelligence of Mr. Emmons, and Mr. Emmons retorted by questioning the depth of Mr. Hegeman's common-sense.

When the war of words was over, the resolution to macadamize Craig place was adopted, and Greenbrook road was also ordered macadamized.

S. B. Wheeler and Samuel Whiteley were appointed special marshals.

The Fire Committee was instructed to procure bids and specifications for the construction of an extension to the lock-up in the rear of the engine-house.

The Street Committee were authorized to borrow $900 for use on the roadways.

An attempt was made to transfer from the borough fund to the street fund the $550 received this year for liquor licenses, but the effort failed.

Dedication Anniversary.

The anniversary of the dedication of St. Mary's church, of this city, was held Sunday. The Rev. Father Quill, Professor in St. Peter's College, Jersey City, preached the sermon. The musical portion of the services was rendered by the regular choir of the church in an acceptable manner.

A Gala Night for the Crescent Knights.

At a regular drill of Crescent Division, Uniform Rank, Knights of Pythias, held in their armory on Monday, Lieut., Col. George H. Polhemus presented to the Division a handsome gavel. Captain John H. Carney, in a few well chosen remarks, received the gift in behalf of the Division. Col. Polhemus for Goodwill Lodge of Scotch Plains, presented an organ, an altar and a desk. The Captain also received these gifts in his eloquent way. It was a gala night for the Crescent Knights. Lieut. Flannery entertained those present by singing some of his latest selections.

A Friendly Contest.

The Trentons being too frightened at the Crescents' uninterrupted succession of victories to dare play them again, the managers of the home team could only get up a scrub match for the interest and amusement of those in attendance at the ball grounds, Saturday evening. The score was:

He Likes to Loaf Around and Watch the Beggars Work.

A clerk in a down-town broker's office in New York, well known among Plainfield commuters, is enjoying a unique vacation. It is the first one he has had for about twelve years. He says he is having enough fun now to last him twelve years more. Before his vacation began his friends in the office asked him where he was going. He declined to answer. When he was free he didn't hurry away to Saratoga or to Long Branch or to the mountains. He staid at his home one day. The next morning he went to the city and sauntered to his office. He sat down in an easy chair, pushed his hat back on his head, and placed his feet on a desk. There he sat for several hours. He refused to explain his conduct until just before he left. Then he said to the clerks:

"I suppose you think I'm an idiot? I'm not. For twelve long years I've been looking forward to this. I like to sit here and watch you beggars work. I'm gloating over you. It does me more good than a trip on a steam yacht." Every day since then, except Sunday, he has done the same thing. Sometimes he slumbers. He says he dreams that he is at work. The joy, he declares, of waking up and finding that he isn't is unequaled. He revels in a gigantic jag of joy.

SPEER'S
GRAPE WINES,
ALSO
UNFERMENTED GRAPE JUICE.

Used in the principal churches for communion. Excellent for females, weakly persons and the aged.

ADOPTED IN HOSPITALS AS THE BEST FOR INVALIDS.

Speer's Port Grape Wine,
FOUR YEARS OLD.

THIS Celebrated Wine is the pure juice of the dead ripe Oporto Grape, raised in Speer's vineyards, and left hang until they shrink and become partly raisined before gathering. Its invaluable

Tonic and Strengthening Properties

are unsurpassed by any other Wine. Being produced under Mr. Speer's own personal supervision, its purity and genuineness are guaranteed by the principal Hospitals and Boards of Health who have examined it. The youngest child and the weakest invalids use it to advantage. It is particularly beneficial to the aged and debilitated and suited to the various ailments that affect the weaker sex.

It is in every respect a WINE TO BE RELIED ON.

Speer's Unfermented Grape Juice

Is the juice of the Oporto Grape, preserved in its natural fresh, sweet state as it runs from the press by fumigation and electricity, thereby destroying the exciter of fermentation. It is perfectly pure, free from spirits, and will keep in any climate.

Speer's (Socialite) Claret

Is held in high estimation for its richness as a Dry Table Wine, especially suited for dinner use.

Speer's P. J. Sherry

Is a Wine of superior character, and partakes of the rich qualities of the grape from which it is made.

Speer's P. J. Brandy

IS A PURE distillation of the grape, and stands unrivalled in this country for medical purposes. It has a peculiar flavor, similar to that of the grapes from which it is distilled.

See that the signature of ALFRED SPEER, Passaic N. J., is over the cork of each bottle.

OFFICIAL PAPER OF THE STATE, THE COUNTY AND THE CITY, AND HAS THE LARGEST CIRCULATION OF ANY PAPER PUBLISHED IN THE COUNTY OF UNION.

[illegible] A. DEMAREST, - - - City Editor.

—Oh, move the freight house!

—The afternoon services at Holy Cross church were resumed Sunday for the Winter.

—A. B. Conway, of North Plainfield, has been nominated for Coroner by the Somerset County Prohibitionists.

—Harry Goode, of North Plainfield, received severe injuries in a runaway accident Tuesday.

—A baker at Yeahl's cut several fingers to the bone Wednesday. The wound was dressed at Randolph's city Pharmacy.

—Thos. Mair, of Mountain avenue, North Plainfield, has been nominated by the Somerset County Prohibitionists for Assemblyman.

—A dog belonging to Elston Lowery of Dunellen, bit Isaac Hillyer as he was walking by the house. Suit for damages is about being entered.

—It is rumored in Fanwood that the much desired post office will be established at Baker & Reed's new store, with Mr. Reed as Postmaster.

—The Olympia club house and bowling alleys on Sycamore street, will be occupied by the Crescent League until such time as their new house is completed.

—Frederick J. Glasby, Sheriff, has sold to Sarah H. Barnes, of this city, land on Clinton avenue, 200 feet northeast from Dunellen avenue, Plainfield, 50x175, for $1,000.

—Charles H. Hand and wife have transferred to William C. Smith, of North Plainfield, lot on Southwest side of Mr Howell street, 150 feet, for a consideration of $00.

—Jacob Sender, the old veteran whose pension was so long delayed as told in The Press of Sept. 3 has received a check for $736 45 back pay and notice of an allowance of $12 a month hereafter.

—A Plainfield housewife advertised in a recent issue of The Press for a waitress. Fifteen minutes after the paper was issued a satisfactory applicant, who had learned through The Press of the vacancy, was permanently secured.

—In drawing jurors at Elizabeth, on Tuesday, the following were chosen: Fanwood—Brockist Hand and Charles Robb. Westfield—James Bateman and Wm. Schermerhorn. The city of Elizabeth furnishes one-half of the panel.

—A mania for disfiguring the billboards about town seems to have taken possession of some of Plainfield's urchins. The law provides for the punishment of those who deface signs, and if the offenders are caught they will pass through an unpleasant experience.

—Miss Scribner and Miss Newton's well-established kindergarten and school for girls will reopen Wednesday, Sept. 17, at LaGrande avenue and Washington street. The regular course for this year is very comprehensive, and includes modeling, drawing and sewing.

—They can raise peanuts, at least [illegible] the Plainfield bureau of religious [illegible] of the U. S. census, [illegible] [illegible]. Vines that grew from some [illegible] carelessly planted in a box of earth in the office, were pulled up Thursday and young peanuts found clinging to the roots.

—A larger assortment than ever of new goods, at unusually low prices, is offered by Pecker, the furniture dealer, of Park avenue and Second street. Such [illegible] goods were never shown in Plainfield. Manufacturing, repairing and upholstering to order, are specialties at Pecker's.

—A meeting of the Y. P. S. C. E. Local Union of Plainfield will be held on Thursday evening, Sept. 18, at 8 o'clock at the Trinity Reformed church. Addresses will be given and reports read from the different societies. Good singing by a chorus choir, under leadership of Mr. [illegible] Dunham. All are welcome.

—Graham Frazee stuck his head out of the smoking-car window of the 4:30 express from New York, Monday. He struck the ashes off his cigar against the telegraph poles that were flying by. The experiment was an entire success, although not only the ashes, but the cigar and almost his whole hand were knocked off.

—Miss Maude Agnes Bowers is forming classes, for adults, in elocution and the Delsarte system of physical culture. She is a graduate of the Boston School of Oratory, besides being particularly well endowed with natural gifts of artistic grace and elegance. For terms, she may be addressed at 166 West Front street.

—The Board of School Trustees held a regular meeting Monday night, for the transaction of general business and the payment of bills. There were present Messrs Kirkner, Murray, Professor Martin, Principal Bulkley and the new senior class teacher, Mr. Hunt. An agreeable showing for Irving school was reported, inasmuch as it had opened with an attendance of 194 which is an increase of last year's roll.

—The Pond Machine Tool Co's employes have been notified that their hours of labor will be 60 hours per week on and after September 20. The noontime will be 45 minutes, and the works will close on Saturdays at 4:30 p. m. The majority of the workmen are dissatisfied at this new arrangement, and a petition is being extensively signed that the present half-holiday on Saturdays be continued, and the present arrangement of working hours remain as it is.

—Plainfielders on a North River ferryboat, a few days ago, witnessed an interesting phenomenon in a fall of rain. In Jersey City the rain had fallen in torrents for an hour, yet over New York the sky was cloudless. As the ferry boat lay in her slip the pouring rain thundered on the upper deck. A couple of hundred feet from shore the river was calm, and no drop broke the stillness of the water. The boat started and as it gained headway out from forward, the noise overhead suddenly ceased. The sun was streaming radiantly down, while just over the stern of the boat the air was thick and the heavens sent down their floods. In New York the streets were dry and dusty.

—The recent shooting accident at Fanwood, which resulted in the death of little Freddie Kinsey at the hands of his fourteen-year-old brother, prompts the editor of The Somerset Unionist to moralize concerning the careless use of firearms. "There ought," he says, "to be either a reformatory bound for small boys when carrying a gun, with which occasionally they may kill a midge, or other lame bird, but which are a constant terror to every other child or grown person in the neighborhood. The muzzle of a gun pointed straight at the body of a person walking along the highway may have no really dangerous quality, but it certainly inspires no amiable feelings, especially when in the hands of small boys."

Following in Plainfield's Footsteps.

The Westfield Athletic Company have filed articles of incorporation with the County Clerk of Union. The capital of the Company is $5,000. The incorporators are Albert A. Drake, George Peck and Martin W. Gordon. The object of the Association is the promotion of baseball, football, lawn tennis, cricket and all other legitimate games and athletic sports. The company intends to have improved grounds and erect a club house.

Mrs. L. Adams, of West Front street, returned Monday from a five weeks' tour of her native State, Ohio.

Mr. and Mrs. Wm. M. Stillman left town Sept. 3 for Castine, Me., where they will spend several weeks.

F. E. Knight, of Boston, has leased George Thatcher's house for two years, and will take possession in a few days.

Mrs. Coombs, and daughter, of Brooklyn, have rented a house on Bay street, through Mulford's real estate agency.

F. A. Pope, Assistant Postmaster, is the happy father of an eleven-pound boy. Master Frank became a member of the household Friday night.

E. C. Mulford of North avenue, has rented Mrs. Crane's house on East Fifth street, to Mr. Wilder, of the New York law firm of Wilder & Lynch.

Dr. D. C. Adams and Capt. Benj. Drake left town on Monday for the Adirondacks. They will camp out three weeks, and their especial object is deer.

Mr. and Mrs. Albert Robertson, of National City, California, have been visiting their uncle and aunt, Mr. and Mrs. S. O. Dunn, of East Fourth street.

Wm. B. VanNest, formerly of Martinsville, but latterly of Illinois, died September 4. He was a brother of Mrs. Wm. Cobliner, of Dow street, North Plainfield.

The Rev. Mr. Nilsson of Dunellen, has returned from his vacation, and will soon move into the new parsonage, which is one of the handsomest houses in the town.

Emma A. Jones has transferred to John J. Pollion, land on East side of Kensington avenue, 150 feet from North side of Putnam avenue, 150x175 feet, for a consideration of $2,150.

A party of young ladies from Plainfield visited New Brunswick on their bicycles Thursday afternoon, and were entertained at the home of the Misses Cheesman, Bayard street.

Ernest Lambert of the New York Tribune staff, has come to Plainfield to live and taken up his residence on Bay street where E. C. Mulford has leased him one of the pretty new houses just completed.

Mr. and Mrs. W. L. C. Herman and daughter, of Minneapolis, Minn., accompanied by Mrs. Herman's mother, Mrs. J. M. Wyckoff, of Leroy, N. Y., are visiting Dr. and Mrs. D. C. Adams, of Grove street.

During the stay at the Marion House, Lake George, of the families of J. W. Murray, E. N. Erickson, O. T. Waring, and others, the little chapel near by, one Sunday morning, looked inside like a Plainfield church interior.

Wm. J. Dobele, of the Borough, and one of the faithful employes at the Reynolds pharmacy, with Mrs. Dobele, left town September 3 for a week's visit with Mr. Dobele's sister, Mrs. Swope, 919 North Third street, Philadelphia.

A party of eighteen gay Plainfielders, with Mrs. T. Logan Murphy as chaperone, drove to Hotel Netherwood, Saturday evening, had a banquet and a merry social time, and returned home sufficiently early to escape intruding on the Sunday morning hour.

Leo Doll paid a flying visit to Plainfield Friday. He left his family all well at his Summer cottage on Lake George, and came to New York for the purpose of laying in a new stock of various kinds of ammunition before going further up into the wilderness after deer.

At the annual meeting of the Union County Democratic Executive Committee, held in Elizabeth, Thursday, R. M. Shreve and V. L. Frazee of this city were appointed members of the finance committee, and E. P. Thorn and August Saltzman of the printing committee.

Frederic R. Coudert, the eminent New York lawyer and Plainfield real estate owner, who was severely injured by being thrown from his horse near New Market several weeks ago, is recuperating at Fire Island. His physicians say that it will be a month more before he will be able to use his injured leg.

Funeral services over the remains of Caroline Delamater, widow of the late Charles L. Delamater, were held at the residence of her brother-in-law, Chas. P. Hasson, 150 Broadway, on Monday. The body was taken to Woodlawn Cemetery, Newburg, N. Y., Tuesday morning, for interment.

The recovery of Miss Lilly M. Taylor, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Wm. F. Taylor of Somerset street, from a protracted siege of illness, is considered almost miraculous. Twice she was given up by her family to die, but her physician, Dr. Berg, has been so untiring in his exertions to save her life that now she is rapidly convalescing.

The many friends of Kittie Drayton, wife of John U. Fraley, Jr., formerly of Park avenue, will be grieved to learn of her death, which occurred at Pompton, of consumption, Saturday. The remains have been brought to this city, and funeral services were held at the residence of Mrs. Fraley's mother, Mrs. Adelaide D. Drayton, 16 Crescent avenue, Tuesday afternoon.

The Trinity Reformed church pulpit was occupied Sunday morning by the Rev. Dr. Hartranft, one of Plainfield's most gifted divines. The Doctor has many earnest admirers among the Trinity people, and a good-sized congregation, for this season of the year, turned out to hear him and be spiritually fed. They were not disappointed, as he delivered a very able discourse on the "Perfect Christian Man." His text was Romans 14, verses 5, 6 and 7.

At Valois, on the St. Lawrence river, the other day, Willie McClure, the fourteen year-old son of Counselor McClure of this city, won the second prize in the single scull race. Young McClure had only two weeks' training and pulled in a borrowed shell that was some pounds too heavy. The large crowd present at the races freely expressed their appreciation of his fine work, and experienced oarsmen said that if he had as good a boat as the winner, he would have been first at the finish.

Mrs. L. Prescott, accompanied by her mother, Mrs. Mary L. Force, are visiting friends at Greenpoint, L. I.

Among the recent arrivals at Hotel Netherwood are Comptroller Myers, Mrs. Myers and family of New York.

Mr. and Mrs. Edsall, and their son, J. Linn Edsall, started on Tuesday for a two weeks' carriage-drive through Northern New Jersey.

The New Jersey State Homoeopathic Medical Society Tuesday elected Dr. T. S. Davis, Second Vice President, and placed Dr. Edward Rushmore on the Committee on Practice.

R. V. Lindabury, one of New Jersey's best-known lawyers, returned from Europe on the steamship Eider Sunday, and is spending the late Summer and early Autumn in Plainfield.

Howard Fleming was seized with a severe chill, Tuesday, on the train coming from New York. Kind friends assisted him to a carriage in which he was taken to his home on Park avenue.

Mr. and Mrs. E. R. Taylor, of Rock View avenue, Washington Park, are enjoying a visit from Mr. Taylor's brother, Laurie, of Mt. Vernon, Ohio, and Mrs. Granville Brown, a sister of Mr. Taylor, from Marion, Ill.

A letter to Senator McPherson from the pension commissioner at Washington, says that another of the claims the Senator has called up—that of Wm. Addis of this city—has been allowed. Senator McPherson knows no politics when the rights and rewards of old soldiers are in question.

SCHOLARS RESUME THEIR STUDIES.

Miss Bulkley Tells Them They Have the Best Advantages in the World.

The Plainfield public schools re-opened Monday with increased attendance. The day was occupied with arranging the classes and announcing the schedules of studies.

Interesting opening exercises were held at the Stillman High School. Besides the address of welcome by the Principal, Miss Julia E. Bulkley, who has just returned from a trip of more than a year abroad, speeches were made by Dr. J. B. Probasco, of the Board of Education, Wm. J. Leonard, and Franklin B. Wiley of the High School Class of '79. Miss Bulkley compared our public school system with that of other countries, and stated that our pupils were afforded the best advantages in the world. While in England she was allowed free access to the public schools in London, through the introduction of Dr. Fitch, Her Majesty's Inspector of Schools; and through the intercession of Minister Phelps was favored by Herr Von Gossler, the Minister of Public Instruction in Germany, with an insight into the workings of the German school system, a privilege accorded to few. As a result of her examination of the various systems she unhesitatingly pronounced ours the most thorough and satisfactory.

The corps of teachers in the public schools for the coming year has had but few changes. E. R. Hunt, an Amherst graduate, will succeed Lincoln B. Goodrich as assistant principal, taking charge of the senior class work in the languages and mathematics. Miss Stout's faithful services at the Franklin school during last year, when she filled Miss Bullock's position while Miss Bullock was absent, have been rewarded by appointment as principal of the Bryant school. Miss Stowell, of the Bryant school, has gone to the far west, and Miss Owen has been removed from the Irving building to fill her place.

REFORM HALL.

A Splendid Address by Mr. Haines.

A hearty welcome greeted Samuel A. Haines in Reform Hall Sunday night, a pleasing feature of the occasion being a large and beautiful floral display contributed by a prominent citizen of Union county in honor of the distinguished speaker.

Mr. Haines, after narrating numerous interesting incidents connected with the growth of temperance sentiment across the Atlantic, went on and delivered an address of great eloquence and power against the awful effects of intoxicating liquor. He plead earnestly for an awakened conscience among the Christian people of our country on behalf of God, Home and Native Land, and the coming of that glorious day when prohibition ballots shall fall like snowflakes in the air, all legal authority be withdrawn from the devastating liquor traffic, and home happiness reign supreme. Profound attention followed his remarks from beginning to end.

President Harper presided, the Rev. Mr. Honeyman read the scripture lesson and offered a fervent prayer, and a full choir, led by Mr. Vanderbeek, conducted the musical exercises.

Sweet Love—15.

He raised his tennis racket,
Brought it forward with a [illegible];
And then he "cut" the ball, he said,—
He must have cut it deep.
Away it soared—a master curve,

Mr. and Mrs. Sandford Thrown Out of Their Carriage.

At about noon Monday, the horse that Frederick Sandford was driving before the phaeton in which was seated himself and wife, was suddenly startled by something, and in turning from Somerset street into Craig pl so cramped the carriage as short as to wreck both wheels on one side. Mr. and Mrs. Sandford were thrown completely out. The former escaped all danger except to his clothes, but Mrs. Sandford was considerably bruised. She was taken to her home on Washington avenue, where she was treated by Dr. Long. No serious results are feared. The horse, which ran away with the broken carriage, was subsequently caught.

Have Beaten Every Club They Have Played Against.

Below is the result of games won and lost by the Crescent League's team this season. Out of 35 games played the home team lost but 4, of which 2 were in April before the present nine was organized. Since then the Crescents have defeated the same teams with ease:

A MAD DOG'S REIGN OF TERROR.

Dogs, Horses and a Woman Bitten—A Baby's Narrow Escape.

A mad dog held a reign of terror in the Netherwood suburbs Wednesday. It dashed down East Front street from the direction of Scotch Plains and entered the yard of J. K. VanNest, near the Terrill road. Mr. VanNest's housekeeper, Maggie Quenner, was standing on the lawn as the animal came running up. She failed to notice that it was frothing at the mouth and was snapping its jaws viciously, and held out her hand, in playful manner, towards it. The dog made a sudden spring, caught her hand in its teeth, and sunk its poisoned fangs into her flesh. She screamed with terror, and the dog left her and ran across the lawn. As soon as possible she was taken by carriage to Plainfield, where Dr. Long cauterized the wounds. The woman was greatly frightened, and expressed much fear that hydrophobia would develop; but the physician assured her that symptoms of madness are exhibited by only one patient out of twenty bitten by a dog actually mad.

After biting Miss Quenner the dog bit several dogs owned by Mr. VanNest, including a valuable mastiff, and attempted to bite a hunting dog owned by William Allen. Mr. Allen himself was on his lawn when the mad dog visited his premises, and to ward off an attack struck the animal with a club. Before he could follow up the blow to advantage, however, the dog had run away and was causing a panic among the horses in the stables of the neighborhood, snapping at their heels, and inflicting slight wounds. It finally ran into the cellar of Mr. Field's house, where Chas. Field shot it.

The baby of the Allen family narrowly escaped being bitten. The dog was running directly towards her when Mrs. Allen ran forward, snatched the child from the grasp of its foaming jaws, caught the little one to her breast, and carried her into the house.

That the dog was really mad is firmly believed by all who saw it, and Dr. Long decided from Miss Quenner's description of its actions that there was no doubt of its being in the advanced stages of hydrophobia.

CALVES GAMBOL ON THE GREEN.

A Somewhat Thrilling Though Ludicrous Scene in the Suburbs.

The story runs that in one of our suburban towns—say Fanwood, for instance—a gentleman owning twin calves, Bessie and Flossie, was asked by a young lady if she could not have the pleasure of mounting one of them. The request was granted, and family and friends at once repaired to the fields to witness this unique event, where Miss Flossie and Miss Bessie, with their mother, were quietly enjoying their evening repast.

While the young lady was endeavoring to tame and coax one of the gentle creatures, one other lady in the party thought she would try her persuasive powers on the twin-sister, Miss Flossie. The latter, however, apparently not accustomed to such loving embraces, did not submit very graciously to the kind treatment.

By some unexplained action, the lady became entangled in the rope, and Miss Flossie began to revolutionize around the stake—carrying the lady with her—a strange though funny sight. Finally Miss Flossie was caught and held, not without a great amount of strength, while the unfortunate victim was released from her unpleasant position, and, thankful to say, uninjured—only a little frightened.

Moral: Never try to ride calves.

Good 'Possum Hunting in Plainfield.

Private watchman Moran killed two opossums on East Front street, before daylight on Monday. One was near ex-Councilman Begnolin's house, and the other nearer the city just in front of the Myers residence.

His Arm Mending.

Little George Brunner, Jr., eight years of age, who fell in the North Plainfield gymnasium, last Friday, and sustained a fracture of his fore-arm, has entirely recovered from the shock and is otherwise doing well under the care of Dr. Long.

Went to Astonish the Natives.

Plainfield Engine Company, No. 2, accompanied by the Plainfield Cornet Band, will go to Perth Amboy, October 15, to participate, as the guests of Lincoln Hose Company, in a firemen's parade. If the Common Council will permit the Company's steamer to leave the city it will be drawn in state by four horses.

A Foggier Trip to Black River Falls.

A special train will convey excursionists from Plainfield, Dunellen, Bound Brook, Finderne, Somerville, Raritan, North Branch and White House to Pottersville, among the hills of Somerset, next Wednesday, when every one along the line will have a chance to enjoy the beautiful and picturesque region along the Black river. See advertisement in another column.

Peculiar Accident to a Train.

The passengers occupying seats on one side of a car in a fast Lehigh Valley train had a narrow escape from serious injury Saturday night, between Bound Brook and New Market. The train was running at a good speed and was rounding a curve when the door of a freight car standing on an opposite track fell partly outward and against one of the passenger cars.

Five panes of glass were shattered and the fragments scattered over the passengers who occupied the seats next those windows. Three passengers were cut about the head and face by the glass, but were able to continue their journey. All the upright strips on that side of the car were reduced to kindling wood. The company has begun an investigation as to the cause of the accident.

A Warning to Look Out For Mr. McClure.

MEGANTIC CLUB,
SPIDER LAKE,
PROVINCE OF QUEBEC.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE PRESS:—I thought it best to send you a warning against one W. E. McClure, a resident of Plainfield, and member of the Megantic Club. He has been here and caught the largest black bass ever taken by a member since the club has been organized. The bass was of the small mouth variety; no other in this lake. It weighed six pound full; twenty-two inches long; girth measurement, 15 inches. On the same day he caught two weighing 4½ pounds and one that weighed 3½—total weight, four fish, 19¾ pounds.

I did not see Mr. McClure as he had left when I arrived at the club, but have the assurance of a number of members, also ladies visiting the club, that the above figures are correct. I am also informed by the same authority that in their opinion said McClure was much excited, with a tendency—as the doctors would say—of mild insanity. If you should discover anything strange in his behavior, you will know the cause. I send you this information that you may act and govern yourself according.

An Offensive Breath
is most distressing, not only to the person afflicted if he has any pride, but to those with whom he comes in contact. It is a delicate matter to speak of, but it has parted not only friends but lovers. Bad breath and catarrh are inseparable. Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy cures the worst cases as thousands can testify.

TURNED OUT THE PUBLIC.

Alleged Union County Road Frauds Secretly Discussed.

(From the New York World.)

The Republican majority in the Union County Board of Freeholders at their recent meeting did not openly discuss the serious charges made against the county road jobbery by Franklin L. Pope, of Elmora. They chose to debate the matter with doors closed to the press and the public. When the Board had been assembled a short time Freeholder West moved that it go into executive session on the county road matter, and the reporters and a number of prominent citizens, including the last Director of the Board, ex-Freeholder C. W. L. Martine, were forced to retire.

Ex-Freeholder Martine was fairly boiling over with indignation, and denounced the action of the Board as an insult to the taxpayers of the county, who had a perfect right to know what their representatives were deliberating about. "Such a thing," remarked Mr. Martine, "as going into secret session when public matters were to be discussed was unheard of in all my experience of several years as an officer and member of the Board. Matters must be coming to a pretty pass when Freeholders are afraid to have their opinions on important county matters published. When I was Director of the Board, if any criticisms were made by the Elizabeth Board of Trade or any individual against the acts of the Freeholders we always courteously invited the faultfinders to attend our meetings, witness the way our committees transacted business, and if there was any grievance to complain of to make it known then and there, and it would be fairly and freely considered, open and above board, and not with closed doors and the press and public barred out.

"I unhesitatingly repeat that the action of the Board in preventing the assembled citizens from hearing what the Freeholders had to say in reply to Mr. Pope's attack was an outrage. Nearly all those who attended the meeting went there expressly to hear what the Board had to offer in defense of its action on the county road question."

The charges of fraud and collusion made by Mr. Pope were pointed, and were done in a public manner over his own signature. It is the general verdict that they should have been as openly met by the Board and refuted, if possible, or satisfactorily explained. The failure to do this publicly, it is held, does not argue well for the position of the Freeholders. The county road transactions are under the especial supervision of the Freeholders, and if Mr. Pope's allegations are true they are strongly tinctured with fraud and imperfect work.

Arranging for the St. Club Tournament.

The Plainfield Bicycle Club at Monday night's meeting appointed a committee to arrange for their annual Fall tournament in The Crescent. The committee consists of E. L. Walz, Jr., A. L. C. Marsh, D. H. Lenox, R. F. Murray and F. L. C. Martin. Capt. Martin is chairman.

Then We'd be Satisfied.

Supt. Wm. Peddie came to Plainfield on the "Star," Thursday afternoon, and inspected the painting of the park railings and the station exterior. He seemed entirely satisfied with the appearance of the handsomest station on the road.

Now if he will only order the interior of the station painted, and move the freight house, the Plainfield people will be perfectly satisfied.

Nothing to Drink in Westfield, Sundays.

John Kelly was arrested at the union depot Sunday, says the Elizabeth Journal, by Officer Eckert. Kelly was drunk and acting in a disorderly manner. The officer alleged that it was not the prisoner's first offence, but that he makes a practice on Sundays of coming from Westfield, getting drunk and loafing about the depot. The justice imposed a fine of $2 and costs, or ten days. There are two or three other Westfielders charged with the same conduct on Sundays.

Another Brooklyn Belle Becomes a Plainfield Wife.

The marriage of George Winans, of Washingtonville, to Miss Fanny Breakey, of Brooklyn, took place at the home of the bride's parents Tuesday night. The Rev. E. P. Ketcham, of this city, performed the ceremony in the presence of about seventy-five friends and relatives of the bride and groom. The happy couple took their departure for their new home in North Plainfield, amid a shower of rice, and with the best wishes of the assembled guests for their future happiness. Among those who were present from Washingtonville were Mrs. Sarah Winans, Mr. and Mrs. Andrew Wilson, Mr. and Mrs. Alfred Winans, Miss Hattie Milligan, Miss Lizzie Milligan, Silas Winans, Isaac Winans, John Bicknell, W. H. Rogers, J. H. Manning and Mr. and Mrs. Walter Titus. Many beautiful gifts were received by the bride from her host of friends.

The Champions of Connecticut to Meet the Champions of New Jersey.

The Norwich ball team that defeated the Crescents two weeks ago by a score of 7 to 6, have agreed to play a return game in this city on Thursday the 18th inst. On Monday the Norwichs by beating both the Mystics and the Hartfords, won the State championship of Connecticut.

The coming game therefore, will be to decide the Inter-State Championship of New Jersey and Connecticut. It was only after much solicitation and at much expense, that the Crescent team's managers could induce the Norwichs to come to Plainfield. The Norwichs are now in receipt of invitations from all over the country, offering big money to get a game with them. As they defeated the Crescents once, they think they can do so again.

The match will undoubtedly attract a large attendance from all over the State. In spite of the expense of getting the team here, there will probably be no increase in the price of admission.

The Best Service in the Country, It Will Be.

Close upon the heels of The Press' expression of the community's desire for an electric fire alarm service, the Council have made a contract for one. The people are thus much to be congratulated, not only upon securing the convenience and protection of such service, but because the service contracted for will equal any in the United States. The Council are satisfied of such fact for they have awarded the contract to the company represented by Charles Wann; and to that gentleman's standing in this city as an upright, conscientious man, was due as much as anything else the awarding of the contract.

The committee in asking for a bid from the Gamewell company, said they wanted only the very best apparatus they made. Consequently, not a city or town in the country has a fire alarm telegraph system that will not be equalled by Plainfield's. That is all very creditable to the committee, but besides that, after securing the very bottom price, they induced the company to add two more tappers and another signal box.

John have you seen that woman lately?
John in astonishment! What woman?
That woman picking grapes for Speer's Wine. Just see her in another column and read about it, the wines are found by chemists to be absolutely pure and equal to the best in the World. The Board of Health in large cities and leading Hospitals have adopted their use where wines are needed.

NEWS FROM OUR NEIGHBORS.

(Special to THE PRESS.)

BOUND BROOK, Sept. 9—The walls of the new St. Joseph's Roman Catholic church are completed, and the handsome new front is finished. At the top a stone cross, five feet tall, has been placed, giving a frontage height of eighty-four feet. The roof-beams are being placed in position, and the work is being rapidly pushed. It has not yet been decided whether to have a bell or a statue in the belfry window, but it is probable that a statue of St Joseph will be chosen. A satisfactory bell cannot be bought for less than five hundred dollars, while a statue can be procured for about one fourth as much. A great many of the Catholics prefer the bell, and it may be that some generous-hearted citizen will present one to the church.

The towns-people are indulging in considerable talk concerning the proposed nomination of Col. C. W. Thomas on the Democratic ticket for Assemblyman. In an interview with a Press correspondent Col. Thomas said that some of the North Plainfield politicians had been speaking to him about the nomination, and he had told them that he would gladly accept the nomination if it were regularly made. Col. Thomas has many warm friends in Somerset county, and he would be well supported if nominated.

Hiram Giddis, overseer of the Windsor estate, is a hero in town because of his fight with a nest of black snakes. He had a sharp battle, and killed three dozen of the creatures, which ranged in length from six to ten feet. Hiram says his last girl jilted him because she thought him a coward, but he thinks he can get a wife now, since establishing his prowess.

Improvements in town are increasing: B. Billian has given his barber shop a new coat of paint, Isaac McCord is building a new house on High street, and E. F. Fennessey is the happy papa of a baby girl. R. H. McCullough, of North Plainfield has the contract for furnishing the pews in the new St. Joseph's church. A large number of bass and other fish are now caught daily along the Raritan. This is the best time of the year for fishing in these parts.

ETHELRED JONES.

The Westfield Musical Society has over one hundred and fifty members enrolled. The first general rehearsal will be held October 4. The following officers have been elected:

President—James O. Clark; First Vice President—Joseph Sherman; Second Vice President—Robert Luckey; Secretary—W. B. Dudley; Assistant Secretary—J. W. Ransom, Jr.; Financial Secretary—Charles H. Day; Treasurer—J. W. Beebe; Librarian—L. A. Lightfoot; Assistant Librarian—R. P. Grant.

Questioning the Commissioners' Authority.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE PRESS:—The Commissioners of the Borough have given notice to the owners of property on the road leading to New Market, to set their fences back 2½ feet and to put down flagging, asphalt, or broken stone, to the depth of four inches. It is not claimed that the existing fences are upon the line of the roadway, and I beg THE PRESS to give information as to the source of authority assumed by the Commissioners in assuming to take private property for public purposes.

If any such authority exists, the law would provide a way to recompense the owner for his damage, and the Commissioners would or should be required to remove and re-set these fences at the expense of the Borough after a settlement had been made for the land that they now propose to appropriate without consent and to which they have no more right or title to than

Not a Blunder in the Ballots, but the Law.

(From the Elizabeth Journal.)

It was declared by a Cape May paper last week that the ballots for the constitutional amendment election were all wrong, and would have to be recalled by the secretary of state. It has since been discovered that the ballots are in accordance with the law, but there is a blunder in the law. The error is so serious that it is just possible that there may be no special election after all on Sept. 30, though it is probable that the lawyers will find a way out of the tangle. One thing is at least certain, all of the 850,000 ballots prepared by the secretary of state and distributed broadcast throughout New Jersey will have to be destroyed.

County Clerk Crowell has the supply of ballots for this county, but he will not distribute them pending Attorney-General Stockton's opinion, which will be immediately given.

The second proposed amendment is all right. The error was made in preparing the first amendment, that which provides for special legislation. In drawing the law providing for the submission of the amendment to the people, the legislature mistook the clause to be amended, and the law and the ballots prepared by the secretary of state apply to the wrong clause of the constitution.

Still Lying About Plainfield.

Within ten days no less than six barns in Plainfield have been set on fire by incendiaries and burned, the aggregate loss being several thousand dollars. Soon after midnight yesterday morning some unknown person set fire to the barn of R. Hoffman on West Front street, and in half an hour the building was in ashes. The flames communicated with the paint works of Ferdinand O. Smith, and they were also burned. Hoffman's loss is $1,500; no insurance. Smith's loss is $2,000; insured for one-half of that amount.—N. Y. World.

Of all the lies the World has published concerning Plainfield in a year past those contained in the above are the biggest, boldest and most damaging. There has not been even one barn set on fire in this city in ten months, let alone ten days. Hoffman's barn caught fire from Smith's paint shop adjoining, and Hoffman himself only claims a loss of $250.

The fire was not of incendiary origin, either; and the only other barn burned in Plainfield in months, was one that accidentally caught fire from the lighting of some matches by boys near a gasolene barrel. There should be some way found to put a stop to the World's misrepresentations which are so continued and vicious as to appear intentional.

The gormandizer likes it because it is fine. The workman likes it because it quenches his thirst, enriches his blood, and strengthens his muscle. It is cheap. The mother likes it. It keeps her boys at home. The women of America like it, because it takes the place of intoxicants. This Hires' Root Beer.

Vacation Spray.

The following by Thos. A. Gere, an old Scotch Plains resident and good friend of a host of Plainfielders, we clip from the Tribune:

I gave a mariner raisins four,
Three times he tapped my flask,
And then I thought the time is ripe
Whose questions I may ask,
Said I: "Old salt, old sea-dog friend,
When thou didst roam the main,
Some thrilling times thou must have seen
Which if recalled again
Would make an interesting tale"—
I have got out my pad—
"Spin me a yarn of some—or one,
To print it I'll be glad;
Tell me," said I, to draw him out:
"Amidst old ocean's surge,
Wast ever placed in such a way
Thou hadst to swim for life?"
He took another thirsty pull,
That made my flask look weak;
He lighted up a fresh cigar,
And then began to speak:
"Aye, aye, my lad; indeed I was;
I cannot call to mind
The scores of times I've undergone
Some danger of that kind."
Now, tune up scenes of battered boats
Shattered by writhing whales;
Of decks washed bare at dead of night
In far off Indian gales.
Of foot-ropes missed from lofty yard,
The sudden jibing boom;
A hopeless slip from ice-clad shrouds,
So oft the sailor's doom!
I bent to catch his slightest word—
Here's all he thickly said:
"I allers had to swim fur life
If the water was over my head."

PILLAGED HIS TENANT'S HOUSE.

A Grass Widower Landlord Abuses His Wife and Insults Her Friends.

Isaac Jones, a colored coachman, carried his silk hat into the City Court room, on Tuesday, swore out a complaint against his landlord, James O'Neill, also colored, and asked for his immediate arrest. Isaac said—and a "ladifren" corroborated him—that O'Neill had been "raisin' a muss" ever since last Friday. O'Neill and his wife had apartments in the house Jones rented of him. Last week Mr. and Mrs. O'Neill had a quarrel, and Mrs. O'Neill moved her dishes and clothing and other "things" into the rooms of the sympathetic Joneses, till she could find a new home for herself apart from her husband. Every day since the rumpus with his wife O'Neill has raised a row with the Joneses, and on Tuesday he went into the room where "Lucretia," Mrs. Jones, lay ill, bellowed abusive names at her, hurled forth anathemas at every female in the house, and proceeded to smash such of his wife's belongings as he could find. When Isaac went to seek Judge Codington, O'Neill was still talking "wretched" to Lucretia and the rest of the women folks, heaping insult after insult upon them, and the work of pillaging his wife's goods was in full blast. He will have a hearing at an early date.

ROAD CROSSING ACCIDENT.

A Driver Severely Hurt and One of His Horses Killed.

Joseph Holland, a teamster, formerly employed in the mills of Wm. Bloodgood, of this city, met with a serious accident on Saturday afternoon about four o'clock while crossing the Lehigh Valley tracks near the residence of Albert Winans, at Cranford. Holland was driving a team of horses, and did not notice the approach of a freight train until he was upon the crossing. The locomotive hit his team. One horse was instantly killed, and the other very badly injured. The crash threw Holland out of his wagon, and he was severely hurt. Medical aid was summoned and the unfortunate man was conveyed to his home.

All the Schools Received New.

The Carpenters and Joiners Union of this city have purchased a handsome flag which they propose to present to the Bryant school as soon as the Board of Education shall meet and accept it.

VACATION'S UP AND SCHOOL OPEN!

This is the season for a brisk demand in CHILDREN'S CLOTHING. During the months of Summer enjoyment they have played the dickens with their clothes, and usually have little left fit to appear in school with

We have always made the clothing of the little ones a specialty, and this Fall we shall strengthen our well deserved reputation of keeping the best stock of these goods in Newark. You'll find it to be money in your pocket and the saving of no end of trouble to come straight here with your children and fit them out for the coming season. We can not only show you all the styles to be met with elsewhere, but many novel conceits which we have designed exclusively for us. Our prices for the newest styles are no greater than you'll pay for the old ones, and as to reliable work there isn't a store in the country that is more particular than we are, especially in children's goods. We know, in advance, the strain to which the little garments will be put, and every safeguard against a sudden coming from together is taken advantage of.

It's a pleasure to talk children's clothing just now; it's a pleasure to show it. We've got something to show and talk about.

HOW CAN THE LONG
BE THE SHORT

A line may be a very long one and yet be the shortest between given points. For instance, the St. Paul, Minneapolis & Manitoba Railway has over 3,000 miles of road; magnificently equipped and managed, it is one of the greatest railway systems of this country; for the same reasons it is the traveler's favorite to all points in Minnesota, North and South Dakota and Montana. It is the only line to Great Falls, the future manufacturing center of the Northwest; to the fertile free lands of the Milk River Valley; and offers a choice of three routes to the Coast. Still it is the shortest line between St. Paul, Minneapolis, Fargo, Winnipeg, Crookston, Moorhead, Casselton, Grafton, Fergus Falls, Wahpeton, Devils Lake, and Butte City. It is the best route to Alaska, China and Japan; and the journey to the Pacific coast, Vancouver, Tacoma, Seattle, Portland and San Francisco will be remembered as the delight of a life-time once made through the wonderful scenery of the Manitoba-Pacific Route. To fish and hunt; to view the magnificence of nature; to revive the spirit; restore the body; to realize the dream of the home-seeker, the gold-seeker, the toiler, or the capitalist, visit the country reached by the St. Paul, Minneapolis & Manitoba Railway. Write to F. I. Whitney, G. P. & T. A., St. Paul, Minn., for maps, books and guides. If you want a free farm in a lovely land, write for the "Great Reservation" read it and resolve to accept the golden

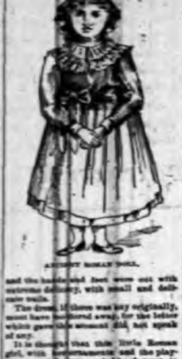
DRESSING DOLLS.

All Little Girls Who Have Dolls Will Be Interested in This Article.

Herodotus, Josephus, and others who wrote ancient history, have very considerately given some information about the games and sports indulged in by boys and young men. But they have not told us what pastimes were provided for little girls.

Perhaps you think there were no dolls then. If you do, what I have to tell you will make those classic days seem very near and real, because you can see that a doll was as precious to a girl then as yours is to you now.

Last May, near the Hadrian's villa, in Rome, were found, at a depth of thirty feet below the surface, two stone burial caskets. In one of these was the perfect skeleton of a little girl wrapped in linen which, upon exposure to the air, fell rapidly to dust. Upon her head were fragments of a myrtle crown—the Roman symbol of youth—and on her fingers were four rings, one of them with her name, "Filetus," engraved upon it. There were also in the narrow sarcophagus—as the ancients called their stone coffins—many other articles of more or less value. Among these an exquisite [illegible] hairpin, cut like a cameo, and set in Etruscan gold filagree work; pearl earrings, carved amber pins for the hair, and a gold necklace with little white pendants of elegant workmanship. But the most interesting thing of all the treasures which loving hands had laid away with little "Filetus" centuries ago was a doll, most perfectly made of oak wood. The face and hair were carved in the most minute and careful way, the latter waving low on the forehead, and bound with a fillet. The joints were articulated so that the legs, arms and waist move in sockets, and the hands and feet were cut with extreme delicacy, with small and delicate nails.



ANCIENT ROMAN DOLL.

The dress, if there was any originally, must have mouldered away, for the [illegible] which gave this account did not speak of any.

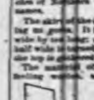
It is thought that this little Roman girl, with her ornaments and the playthings which were probably dearest to her, must have been laid away to her rest before the Christian era, and, taking a long backward look through the centuries, it is touching to realize that the same things that were pleasing then are still the delight of young people.

The doll whose picture appears in this article has a variety of dresses, but with [illegible] of them is her owner better pleased than this, a perfect fac-simile of the German costume worn by certain natives of the Black Forest.

The coloring of the dress is certainly not a delight to the eye that loves harmony, but it is an exact copy in every particular of a costume worn by a little girl called [illegible], which you must pronounce in three syllables. It is the diminutive of Frederika, and a favorite name in [illegible], as Southern Germany is called. In the Suabian dialect the termination [illegible] takes the place of the [illegible] of Northern Germany, in proper names.

The skirt of the dress is straight, having no gores. It is thirty-two inches wide by [illegible] long; a hem an inch and a half wide is turned up at the bottom, the top is gathered all around.

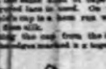
The material of the dress is a stiff-feeling woolen, something like thick alpaca. The sleeves are slightly wadded, which makes them look stiff and clumsy. They are cut in one piece and gathered into the arm-hole. The waist is half low-necked, and is trimmed around the neck, with a strip of the material plaited down on both edges. The waist is nearly straight, and with no darts. There are seams under the arms and [illegible] at the back. The little slashes on the pattern are to give room for the swell of the hips below the waist line. The skirt, which is sewed to a band, is separate, and fastens on over the waist. The cuts show front and back of waist.



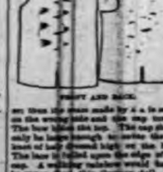
A wide white lace ruffle is sewed to a muslin band, which buttons around the throat. A [illegible] ribbon wound over it several times conceals the muslin band. The large bow with which it is tied at the back is quite an important addition to the costume. In front, hangs a narrow ribbon with a little silver coin or medal upon it. With the grown-up peasants the medal is generally symbolic of their trade or occupation.

The apron is a straight strip of material of some light, bright color, and is tied with gay ribbons of another shade.

The cap is made of black velvet and surmounted by a bow of black ribbon with a [illegible] edge. [illegible] floating [illegible]. The little cap is trimmed with a broad fall of plain black lace, of the kind sometimes used here for veils. In Switzerland the same kind of caps are worn, but [illegible] lace is used. On the edge of [illegible]'s cap is a bow run with thick, black [illegible] silk.



After cutting the cap from the diagram, join [illegible] marked x x together, [illegible]

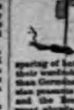


FRONT AND BACK.

[illegible] than [illegible] made by x x is sewed on the wrong side and the cap turned. The bow [illegible] the top. The cap should only be large enough to cover the top knot of hair [illegible] high on the head. The lace is [illegible] upon the edge of the cap. A [illegible] would hardly be gayer than this German doll. Her dress is a [illegible] blue, her apron light green, with bright purple ribbons. The ribbon around her neck, with the big bow at the back, is a bright yellow. Some of the skirts in Southern Germany are [illegible] plaited, so a doll who wishes to go to a fancy party in the costume of that country would be justified in making herself more showy by wearing a plaited skirt instead of the plain, if she preferred.

In the district where dresses of this kind are worn, the costumes of Protestants and Catholics are quite distinctly different. [illegible] was a Catholic, and in copying [illegible] distinctive dress of her own the artist has put a little [illegible] to the doll's neck.

In the old countries, where people seldom seem to be in such a hurry as the Americans, they do not seem to be so sparing of button-holes as we are. In a German child's winter costume, including the under-clothes, there are sometimes thirty-five button-holes, as I have been told. The Italians are not sparing of button-holes, either, although their wardrobes are less profuse in them than Germans. The French and Russian peasants save them when they can, and the Bretons, who use buttons in great abundance, simply for ornament, manage to use strings and loops very extensively for fastenings.



A girl who likes to make dolls' clothes will be much more independent if she knows how to make the button-holes herself. Perhaps by looking closely at this striking portrait of a partly-worked button-hole a young worker will be able to copy it. First, a straight cut is made, then as this is for a cloth garment, the little round hole at one end is made so it will fit nicely around the shank of the button. To me, cutting that smooth, round place at the end has always seemed a very formidable bit of surgery, but lately, by watching a dress-maker, I found out that it is easy enough.

Her way was to stick a pin through the cloth at the upper end of the cut, only taking up one or two threads, and then to cut the pin out. As I am not by your side to show you what I mean, won't you take a piece of waste cloth and experiment with a pin and sharp scissors until you see how it is done. For wash goods and thin materials it is not necessary to do more than make a plain, straight cut of a proper length for the button, but the stitch is the same, and that I think you can learn by looking at the picture. The under thread, which is to be worked over, should be linen or double silk; it is carried around the button-hole and held while working by being twisted around the needle it is threaded into. You must remember always to put the thread you are working with around and over the point of the needle before you pull it through. This is to make a strong, durable edge. In the button-hole stitch used for scallops and other embroidery, the thread is not put over in this way, but held below the needle while it is drawn through.—Mary C. Hungerford, in Christian Union.

A G. A. R. BUTTON.

The Part It Played in a Nice Little Romance.

"TWO years ago, while I was journeying toward Chicago," says a gallant Captain of the late war, "I had a most interesting conversation with a good-hearted and social Western man who sat beside me in the smoker; and it was he who told me the greater part of what I shall relate. He said that in his neighborhood there lived a certain Colonel Fifer, a veteran of the late war, who was a millionaire. Although he had the means to surround himself with every comfort and every pleasure, he had for several years lived in the plainest manner and had cared nothing for the gayeties of the world. But it was not surprising that he lived as he did, for fate had dealt him cruel blows. In one year not only his wife, to whom he was most tenderly attached, but also two idolized children, a daughter sixteen years of age and a son of twenty, were swept from his side by death. At the age of fifty years he was left alone. The chief object of his life had been to promote the comfort and happiness of his family, and they were gone. He had his great riches, but there was no one near and dear to him with whom he could enjoy them. Some men, visited by a similar misfortune, would have yielded to despondency, but he was a man of too much resolution and good sense to allow himself to become morbid and to let his life go to waste.

"One day, in the course of his travels, he visited a small Western city for the purpose of examining the inducements to invest in real estate.

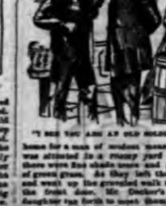
"While making his inquiries in the city he chanced to see standing in the doorway of a grocery store a man who had a pleasant, intelligent face. The appearance of the man impressed him so favorably that he obeyed a sudden impulse to make his acquaintance. Accordingly Colonel Fifer introduced himself to the man, who proved to be the proprietor of the store, and, finding him very polite and friendly, soon told him what his business was. The man—Joseph Decker was his name—said that, although he was not pecuniarly interested in the real-estate business, he thought he could give the Colonel some valuable information. They had not been talking long before Colonel Fifer noticed that the store-keeper was gazing intently at the lapel of his coat, to which was attached a small bronze G. A. R. button.

"'I see that you are an old soldier,' said Mr. Decker.

"'Yes, I have seen a little service,' the Colonel modestly replied.

"'I know you were a good soldier, by your looks,' said the other, eagerly, 'and I wish you would allow me to shake hands with you, for I have been a soldier, too.'

"They shook hands heartily, and soon were engrossed in reminiscences of the war, as only two thorough veterans could become engrossed. Although each of those refrained from recounting his own valorous deeds, it did not take them long to become convinced that each had seen hard service and had been a brave soldier. Mr. Decker became so much interested in his new friend that he insisted that he should go home with him to dinner, and should be his guest throughout the remainder of the day, the Colonel having informed him that it was his intention to leave the city on a late afternoon train. The Colonel felt that he ought not to accept so much hospitality from a stranger, and endeavored to excuse himself, but in vain. Mr. Decker would not take no for an answer. It was then noon, and they immediately started for Mr. Decker's home. In ten minutes they reached it. The house was evidently not a fashionable one, but it was a comfortable home for a man of modest means, and was situated in a roomy yard where there were fine shade trees and plenty of green grass. As they left the gate and went up the graveled walk toward the front door, Mr. Decker's only daughter ran forth to meet them. She had a winning face, a lithe and graceful figure, and the tender feeling that beamed from her eyes as she spoke to her father convinced Colonel Fifer that she was a dutiful and affectionate girl.

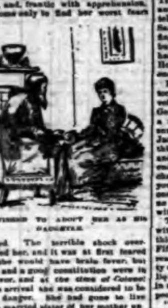


"I SEE YOU ARE AN OLD SOLDIER."

"They went into the house and seated themselves in the pleasant parlor. Dinner was soon announced, and then Colonel Fifer met Mrs. Decker for the first time. She proved to be a very agreeable woman, and was not less anxious than her husband to make their guest feel at home. It seemed to the Colonel that he had never met with a family that interested him more. They were so kind to each other, so desirous to please their guest, that he felt his heart warm toward them as if they were old friends. After dinner they insisted that he should take a ride with them.

"When it was time for Colonel Fifer to take the train, Mr. Decker drove to the station, and the Colonel parted with the friendly family with much regret, after having extended a hearty invitation to them to visit his home.

"About a year passed away, during which the Colonel did not hear anything concerning the family that had interested him so much, although pleasant recollections of them often came to his mind. One day he picked up a daily paper and began to read an account of a cyclone that had done much havoc in the West. Much to his alarm he noticed that the city where Mr. Decker lived had been partially destroyed by the tornado, and among the list of killed he found the names of his friend and his amiable wife. The picture of the happy family returned to him and his soul was filled with sadness. It seemed cruel and wrong that so great a misfortune should visit people so worthy. He looked for the name of the daughter in the list of dead, but could not find it. Probably she had escaped, and he immediately formed a generous resolution. He packed his valise and made a journey to the unfortunate city. When he arrived he went immediately to the locality where his friend's house had stood. A sad sight greeted his eyes. All of the houses in the vicinity had either been blown down or had been partially torn to pieces. In place of pleasant homes were heaps of unsightly ruins. Mr. Decker's house had been laid flat, and he and his wife, who were supposed to be in an upper room at the time, had fallen into the cellar and had been killed instantly. Their daughter was visiting a school-mate in another part of the city, outside of the cyclone's track, and, frantic with apprehension, ran home only to find her worst fears realized. The terrible shock overpowered her, and it was at first feared that she would have brain fever, but youth and a good constitution were in her favor, and at the time of Colonel Fifer's arrival she was considered to be out of danger. She had gone to live with a married sister of her mother until she could find something to do for a livelihood. It was necessary that she should support herself, for her father's store had been destroyed by the cyclone as well as the house; she would inherit only a little property, and her relatives in the city were in moderate circumstances.



HE WISHED TO ADOPT HER AS HIS DAUGHTER.

"All of the foregoing facts were learned by Colonel Fifer as he talked with citizens of the place, and served to strengthen his resolution to carry out the plan that he had formed. He sought out the girl. She remembered his visit well and was very glad to see him. She told him that her parents had often spoken of the great pleasure that his visit had afforded them, and had hoped that they should see him some time again. Overcome by recollections of the happy days that she had spent with her beloved parents, and by the consciousness of her own loneliness, the beautiful and amiable girl burst into tears. Colonel Fifer hastened to comfort her and then unfolded his plan for her welfare. He told her that he had no family, that he was rich, and that he wished to adopt her as his daughter and heir. She listened astonished, and at first refused, saying that she could not take so great a favor. But he persisted, told her that he was glad to return the kindness that had been shown him by her parents, and that now that he was alone in the world he greatly desired to adopt one that could be as a daughter to him. He argued so well that she finally consented to do as he wished. She soon had good reason for being glad that she had given her consent, for a kinder man than Colonel Fifer is does not exist. He immediately placed her in one of the best boarding-schools in the country, being resolved that she should have the finest education obtainable, and he frequently visited the school and manifested the greatest interest in her progress. Miss Decker was as bright intellectually as she was amiable in disposition, and made excellent use of her opportunities.

"And now comes the conclusion of my story, that part which to me is the most interesting of all, and a part which I am certain will surprise you. Not long ago a young man in whose welfare I am greatly interested, and in whose abilities I take much pride, became acquainted with the charming Miss Decker, and, as was extremely excusable, and even commendable, all things being considered, fell desperately in love with her. He proposed, and to his vast astonishment he was accepted, for he was a very modest young man. Colonel Fifer inquired as to the character and ability of the young man, and was so well satisfied that he readily gave his consent to the marriage, first stipulating that the young couple should make his house their home, and cheer him and take care of him during his declining years. When he is gone they will inherit his property, amounting to a million or more dollars. Next fall the wedding will occur, and now, who do you suppose the bridegroom is? He is my son."

The gallant Captain sat down amid the hearty applause of his comrades, and they all declared that it was the best camp-fire story they had heard for a long time.—J. A. [illegible], in Boston [illegible].

SALT AS A DISSIPATION.

Pernicious Effect of Its Excessive Use on the Gentler Sex.

Salt, the least harmful of condiments, if such a necessary article of diet can be termed a condiment, is by the medical profession recognized as a species of dissipation in its excessive use among many women. Every one knows how flat and flavorless all food becomes when the system is a trifle deranged; it is just then, when men resort to bitters and burning [illegible] to tone up their jaded appetites, that women find their sole recourse in the apparently innocent salt cruet. It is the old story of giving an inch to yield an ell, and before the victim knows it her palate demands a double or triple quantity of the mineral to savor every morsel she eats. Some go so far as to salt not only the substantial dishes, but tea, coffee, fruit, nuts, sweetmeats and wine. They begin by taking a pinch extra now and then to pique their tastes, and before long steal a bit to keep in the pocket, or buy a crystal to nibble on the sly. Nature's revenge on her weak daughter is as insidious as the result her insatiable laws have suffered. She files her first signals of distress in a deadening of the skin, replacing the pink glow of health by a dim, yellowish pallor. Lips and cheeks blanch alike, this change being accompanied by a deepening of every shadow on the face. This is as nothing, however, to the destruction this morbid habit works on a woman's crowning glory, her hair. And it is astonishing how sensitive the hair is to every fluctuation of one's health. Then, each time the comb passes through is brought great handfuls of long, shining strands. No lotion or tonic is effective in checking the loss, and, unless corrected, the abnormal amount of salt in the system will produce partial baldness. Even now quite a number of women are under treatment, some avowedly and others secretly for this form of [illegible].—Illustrated American.

MR. HOOFNACKLE.

A Friend Plays Him a Shabby Trick.

Mrs. H. Discovers that Her Name Is Not in the Elite Directory—She Blames Her Husband for It.

(Written for the St. Louis (German) [illegible], by Louis Willich; translated for this paper by Alex E. Sweet.)

TO THE EDITOR OF THE [illegible]—Dear Sir: My friend Gould, the directory man, has played me a shabby trick. I wouldn't have believed it of him. That unreliable party has published a blue book, or an elite directory, or whatever you may be pleased to call it, which purports to give a list of the high society people, and the name of Jackson P. Hoofnackle does not appear in it. I would not have believed this possible if I had not examined the book carefully, and satisfied myself beyond a doubt that my name has been omitted, and very likely it was done intentionally.

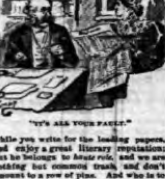
If my wife Sarah had her way I would have brought a $25,000 suit for damages against Gould, but I am afraid if I were to file any such suit the consumptive lawyer Gould employs by the year would make a motion for me to give a ten-dollar bond for security for costs, and I am not quite prepared for a financial crisis of those dimensions, so I have thus far managed to restrain myself.

This is a nice state of things, truly. The idea of a St. Louis elite directory and no Jackson P. Hoofnackle in it. To tell the truth, if it were not for my wife, Sarah, I wouldn't care a snap of my finger whether my name was in or not, but the left-handed compliments Sarah has been bestowing on me, because the Hoofnackles have been snubbed, are enough to exasperate a saint.

Looking through a copy of the directory she remarked in a cynical tone of voice: "I suppose I joined the Ladies' Geranium Club, and paid three dollars a month for nothing at all just to be snubbed this way. It's all your fault, Jackson. You never do attend to anything as you should. You gab and gas, and frequent saloons from one year's end to the other, but when there is a chance to do something for the family you are not there. O, you are a nice one to rely on, you are. You have got no spunk. That's what's the matter with you."

Turning over another leaf, she said, with increased bitterness: "Just look at this! Here are Mr. and Mrs. McFlymsy. Fifteen years ago, when you were already a judge on the bench of the county court, he was a porter in a wholesale liquor store and she was chief engineer in a hash factory. Now they are society people."

"And just look at this," she continued: "Here is the name of Casper Knipplemann; if he wants to write his name he has to rest his tongue on the table, and then make a misspell of it, while you write for the leading papers, and enjoy a great literary reputation; but he belongs to haute vole, and we are nothing but common trash, and don't amount to a row of pins. And who is to blame but you? Whenever I pick up a newspaper I read some complimentary notice about somebody we know, but I never read any thing about you that's worth repeating.



"IT'S ALL YOUR FAULT."

"And so, help Heaven, here is the name of Jerry L. Dusenbury. Well, now that is rich. Ten years ago he had a little bit of a shanty of a store, where he kept on tap perfumed soap, rusty revolvers, old pocket-books, small-tooth combs, rubber sandwiches, brass jewelry and other rubbish, and it was such a miserable ramshackle shanty of a store that if his big fat wife had sneezed in it, she would have blown the sides out of it—and now he is Hon. Jeremiah Dusenbury, who comes from a very old family. I suppose his grandmother didn't die until she was two or three hundred years old. Oh, yes, they come of a very old family, and I expect they have been on a visit to Paris—Kentucky. That's what this directory does for that scum, while we have to be satisfied to be allowed to take back seats and be nobody. Jackson, that's going to be the death of me. I expect to see Hon. Mrs. Dusenbury's portrait as a society queen in one of the big dailies, and a few years ago the only use she had for newspapers was to look through the 'want column,' to see if anybody advertised for a cook or a chambermaid, etc."

I don't know what I am going to do about it, but if Sarah keeps up this talk about the elite directory I'll do something rash.

Your old friend.
JACKSON P. HOOFNACKLE.

AMERICANS OF DISTINCTION.

EDWIN BOOTH, who has himself played the part of Hamlet thousands of times, has never yet seen it played by anybody else.

MRS. HARRIET BEECHER STOWE at 78 years is in the same feeble state of mind and body that she has been in for two years past. She spends much of her time in the open air, and is carefully watched over by her daughters at her Hartford home.

CHAUNCEY DEPEW was called upon recently by a middle-aged lady who was so delighted by his urbanity that she impulsively kissed him when she arose to leave. A reporter who witnessed the disturbance asked Mr. Depew whether he was used to that sort of thing, and he replied: "It is one of the regular rules of the office."

SENATOR EVARTS owns a hunting lodge, a comfortable log cabin, on the banks of the Potomac, in Maryland, furnished ready for instant use, with a colored man and his wife in readiness to receive the Senator and his friends, but it has not been used except by the colored man and his wife during the several years Senator Evarts has owned it.

MRS. GENERAL GRANT seems to have found the elixir of youth. Although sixty-six, she is as agile as a woman of thirty, enjoys perfect health and, barring the weakness of her eyes which were never strong, her faculties are as keen as they ever were. The gray in her hair is scarcely noticeable; her face is plump and of good color. Mrs. Grant dresses in rich black abbey cloths or silk fabrics.

MRS. GILMORE, wife of the famous band master, arranges much of the music for the band and in many ways assists her husband in his professional work. Mr. and Mrs. Gilmore have an only daughter, a beautiful girl of 20, with fine dark eyes, and hair artistically arranged over a pretty forehead and in a low knot behind. The mother and daughter travel with Mr. Gilmore most of the time.

Photographs in Natural Colors.

At a recent meeting of the Berlin Physical Society Prof. Vogel spoke on photography in natural colors as attempted at first by Seebeck, then in succession by Becquerel, Niepce, St. Victor, Poitevin, Zenker, and most recently by a Hungarian named Verres. He exhibited a series of photographs in colors obtained by Verres, which however showed conclusively that he has not solved the problem, since, although the reds appear as red in the photographs, so also do the yellows and greens appear as red and the blues as an undeterminate color. These photographs, on the other hand, mark a distinct advance in color photography, since they are fixed, while those of Zenker, although more strikingly colored, were not fixed. The speaker criticised Zenker's views on the mode of formation of a colored photograph, and expressed his disbelief in the possibility of any one substance being so changed by rays of different wave length as to emit from various parts of itself rays of exactly corresponding wave length.—Scientific American.

A DETROITER ABROAD.

What He Knows About His Native City He Gets from Outsiders.

A prominent Detroiter—one who ranks among the millionaires—was down East this summer, and among the people he met was a gentleman who said:

"Ah! sir, but Detroit is a beautiful city indeed. How far is the boulevard opened east of Woodward avenue now?"

"I—I couldn't say."

"Don't you drive there?"

"No, sir; never on the boulevard in my life."

"I suppose they are still improving Belle Isle?"

"I—I suppose so."

"How often do you go up?"

"I haven't been up there in fifteen years."

"Is it possible! Good fishing at the Flats this summer?"

"I—I suppose so."

"Don't you go up?"

"Never stopped there in my life."

"But you go to Put-in-Bay?"

"Never."

"To Mt. Clemens or Port Huron?"

"No."

"Ever go down to the Fort?"

"Never."

"Ever ride out in the country?"

"Never."

"But you go to the art loan and the cyclorama?"

"No."

"Well, please tell me where you do go?"

"From the house to the office and back. All I know about Detroit I get from outsiders. I guess it is a fine town. I've heard a good many say so." —Detroit Free Press.

TO A LITTLE BROOK.

You're not so big as you were then,
O little brook!—
I mean those hazy summers when
We boys roamed, full of awe, beside
Your noisy, foaming, tumbling tide,
And wondered if it could be true
That there were bigger brooks than you—
O mighty brook! O peerless brook!

All up and down this reedy place
Where lives the brook,
We angled for the furtive dace;
The redwing blackbird did his best
To make us think he'd built his nest
Hard by the stream, when, like as not,
He'd hung it in a secret spot
Far from the brook, the telltale brook!

And often, when the noontime heat
Parboiled the brook,
We'd draw our boots and swing our feet
Upon the waves that, in their play,
Would tag us last and scoot away;
And mother never seemed to know
What burnt our legs and chapped them so—
But father guessed it was the brook!

And Fido—how he loved to swim
The cooling brook,
Whenever we'd throw sticks for him;
And how we boys did wish that we Could only swim as good as he—
Why, Daniel Webster never was Recipient of such great applause
As Fido, battling with the brook!

But once—O most unhappy day
For you, my brook—
Came Cousin [illegible] along that way;
And, having lived a spell out West,
Where creeks aren't counted much at best
He neither waded, swam, nor leapt,
But, with superb indifference, stept
Across that brook—our mighty brook!

Why do you scamper on your way,
You little brook,
When I come back to you to-day?
Is it because you flee the grass
That lunges at you as you pass,
As if, in playful mood, it would
Tickle the truant if it could,
You chuckling brook—you saucy brook?

Or is it you no longer know—
You fickle brook—
The honest friend of long ago?
The years that kept us twain apart
Have changed my face but not my heart—
Many and sore those years, and yet
I fancied you could not forget
That happy time, my playmate brook!

Oh! sing again in artless glee,
My little brook,
The song you used to sing for me—
The song that's lingered in my ears
So soothingly these many years;
My grief shall be forgotten when
I hear your tranquil voice again
And that sweet song, dear little brook!

—Eugene Field, in Chicago News.

A PEDDLER'S ADVENTURE

His Terrible and Lonely Battle with a Mad Man.

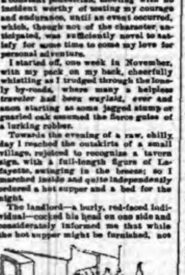
WAS visiting an old uncle of mine who lives in Bainbridgeport in a four-story brick mansion which I am likely to inherit. Uncle Claiborne was formerly an active, enterprising peddler, fond of adventure, and never slow to relate events in his personal experience. I remember one stormy December evening, when the wind was howling dismally outside and the snow driving fiercely against the window panes, he stirred the log fire into a cheerful blaze, and related to me the following exciting adventure:

When I was about your age, Moses, I was reckoned the stoutest lad and most active young peddler in the country, ready for a fight or a frolic; but while a constant pedestrian, meeting with no incident worthy of testing my courage and endurance, until an event occurred, which, though not of the character anticipated, was sufficiently novel to satisfy for some time to come my love for personal adventure.

I started off, one week in November, with my pack on my back, cheerfully whistling as I trudged through the lonely by-roads, where many a helpless traveler had been waylaid, ever and anon starting as some jagged stump or gnarled oak assumed the fierce guise of a lurking robber.

Towards the evening of a raw, chilly day I reached the outskirts of a small village, rejoiced to recognize a tavern sign, with a full-length figure of Lafayette, swinging in the breeze; so I marched inside and quite independently ordered a hot supper and a bed for the night.

The landlord—a burly, red-faced individual—cocked his head on one side and considerately informed me that while the hot supper might be furnished, not a bed was to be had in the house for love or money, as it was assize week and every spare room and closet was occupied.



"YOU CAN'T ACCOMMODATE ME, THEN?"

"You can't accommodate me, then?" said I, much disappointed.

"No," replied he, decidedly. "I am sorry, young man, I can't; but seeing it's a pretty cold night, and no chance of you finding quarters elsewhere, I'll take you in, provided you'll keep watch over a sick man upstairs, and have your supper gratis in the bargain."

"How far is it to the next tavern?" I asked, after a short pause, undecided as to the offer.

"Ten long miles."

I looked up the road, thought of the cold wind and inhospitable farm-houses on my route, and rather hastily concluded to accept the strange proposition of mine host.

"You see," observed he, as he led me into the supper room, "we've a man here, a young lawyer, sick of a fever. All his friends are tired out watching with him. I don't like to leave the poor fellow alone, for I hardly expect he'll last the night through. All you've got to do is to keep an eye on him now, and then when he dies just let us know."

I imagined at that moment the innkeeper's face bore rather a singular expression. I wondered at it then, but I understood better before two hours had passed.

When I dispatched my supper, I was shown into the sick man's chamber, and Boniface, after a few instructions to me, bade me good evening and left me there.

The apartment was of ordinary size and situated in a wing of the building where the noise and bustle would not molest the invalid. The furniture was in the usual style; but there was something very familiar in a portrait that attracted my attention, for, after casting a glance at the sick man, who lay muffled up in bed and breathing heavily, my eye involuntarily turned to the picture again.

It was the portrait of a young and beautiful female that had barely reached her sixteenth year, the face beaming with the innocent vivacity of girlhood, and the eyes sparkling with a wonderful degree of light and intelligence.

Riveted there by an unaccountable and mysterious fascination, I stood gazing at the lovely embodiment, almost expecting the face to glow with animation, the lips to part and speak, when I was startled as a clear, musical voice observed: "A beautiful picture, that."

I turned round to discover, with no small degree of astonishment, that the sick man had partially raised himself to a sitting posture, and was also contemplating the lovely portrait with as much earnestness as myself.

The invalid, despite the ravages of disease, which showed itself in his hollow eyes and attenuated frame, was an uncommonly handsome man; his features bore the impress of aristocratic lineage, and his finely chiseled nose and mouth expressed strong passions and uncontrollable will.

"You feel better," I said, recovering from my surprise.

He waved his hand impatiently.

"You have not answered my question. The picture—the picture; what do you think of it?"

"Pardon me, sir. It is beautiful!"

"You have no idea of the original?"

"None, sir."

"It is the portrait," replied the sick man, speaking slowly and deliberately, and fastening upon me his black, glittering eye—"it is the portrait of my dearest wife."

"Your wife!" I repeated.

"My wife, Evelyn St. Croix," pursued the sick man. "Do you notice her eye?"

"I do."

"A strange, unearthly expression; the artist was true to nature. She was mad when he painted her; she died raving mad."

"What a dreadful fate for one so young!"

"Listen; she deserved it. Evelyn St. Croix was beautiful, but she was weak and vain; she was graceful as a nymph, but false—false as hell!"

The sick man fell back on his pillow, exhausted by the violence of his exertions; then, after a few moments, he raised himself again and muttered hoarsely: "It affects me, the remembrance of her perfidy. It sometimes makes me wild and delirious. Stop! you shall hear about it—the story of my wrongs and sufferings."

"You are too weak; it excites you. I will listen to the story some other time."

"No; you shall hear it now," reiterated the sick man, almost fiercely. "I loved her—met her—loved her in a moment, before I had time to ask her whether she had any affection to bestow upon me. She was disappointed, and married me when she could not wed him whom she adored. I worshiped her, and deemed her as pure as the driven snow. She whispered in my ear that she loved me; and I, fool like, believed it, and accepted her caresses and protestations, never dreaming that woman loves silently the best, and kisses and blandishments are too often an artful cloak to conceal base designs. I was cozened and beguiled with soft, honeyed words and flattering caresses. I dreamt not all the while I was clasping a viper to my bosom—you are not listening to me!"

"I am."

"My family physician was young and fascinating. He had free access to my wife's society. He availed himself of it, and made her love for him a vehicle to his own selfish passions. The world guessed the truth. I knew nothing of my dishonor, for I had faith in Evelyn. My friends wondered at my blindness and pitied me. But finally a note fell in my hands; it opened my eyes—made me feel wretched. I laid a snare for my faithless wife and her paramour, and slew him before her eyes. She went raving mad. Since that fearful hour I have sworn a vow which I have ever kept."

The invalid paused and glanced at me with a ferocity that caused a feeling of uneasiness to creep over me.

"You can not guess?"

"No."

"I will tell you. Every year I have offered up a sacrifice on the altar of my vengeance. You must be the victim now."

"You do not mean that?"

"Ha! ha! ha!" laughed the sick man, suddenly raising himself upon his feet, while his eyes flashed like two balls of fire. "You think me weak—you are mistaken. I have the strength of Samson. You shall see."

As he said this, with one bound he vaulted to the floor, and deliberately locked and bolted the door. And now the horrible truth flashed upon me that I was with a madman, and that he had me completely and absolutely in his power. Confounded as I was by this startling discovery, I endeavored to preserve my composure.

"I am to be your victim?"

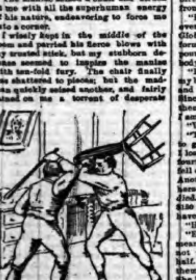
"Yes; you can not escape me!" he hissed. "You are a coward; I know it—I see it in your eye! Call and shout to the walls; they have ears and will listen; every one is asleep; no human ear can catch your cries; you are doomed; ha! ha! ha!"

Long and loud the maniac laughed. I felt the perilous situation I was in, yet I quailed not; every thing depended upon my own courage and self-possession. Quick as lightning I darted forward and caught up my walking-stick—a stout, knotty weapon of defense, nearly as hard as iron.

"Come on!" I cried, defiantly. "If you wish to have a bout with me, you see I am ready."

The maniac seized a chair and struck at me with all the superhuman energy of his nature, endeavoring to force me into a corner.

I wisely kept in the middle of the room and parried his fierce blows with my trusted stick, but my stubborn defense seemed to inspire the maniac with ten-fold fury. The chair finally was shattered to pieces; but the madman quickly seized another, and fairly rained on me a torrent of desperate blows, which required the utmost vigilance on my part to ward off. Failing in overpowering me, the madman, with diabolical cunning, suddenly rushed to the hearth and scattered the burning brands on the floor; and, while clouds of smoke rose from the burning embers, he attacked me with renewed ferocity.



THE FIGHT WITH THE MANIAC.

I had hoped that my continual shouting, and the din of battle, would have aroused the household; but no one came. A new danger menaced me; several times the bedding took fire, but was promptly extinguished by the most tremendous exertions on my part. My antagonist seemed endowed with the strength of 10,000 devils, while I was comparatively growing weaker and weaker. My arms seemed palsied and my head swam dizzily. In a moment I must give up—my strength was nearly exhausted, when, to my great relief, the madman suddenly paused.

Drops of perspiration rolled down his body, and his limbs trembled violently; but I could see, though the unnatural contest had told fearfully on him, he was by no means as exhausted as myself. His eyes glittered with latent ferocity as he shrieked: "You fight well, but I shall win; you are doomed already; I can see it; I will tear you limb from limb!"

I had no opportunity to reply, for, almost immediately, he resumed his savage attack. But the momentary respite had saved me; and, as I warily husbanded my strength, I was overjoyed to perceive that he began to show evident signs of exhaustion; but no—he suddenly recuperated with wonderful power. Again his blows thunder on my stout stick. I am gradually losing my strength. I can not hold out much longer, and the madman sees it, and redoubles his exertions. My weapon is struck at last from my weak grasp; I hear the exultant shout of the maniac in my ear and clinch my fist in one feeble, despairing effort to defend myself from the impending stroke, when suddenly a strange transformation takes place in the madman. He pauses and drops his weapon, his fierce eye assumes a dull, filmy aspect, and the fierce expression fades away in a stupid air of idiocy; he reels and falls to the floor in a death-like stupor; his tremendous vitality vanished as quickly as it came.

At the same instant I hear a hurried tread of feet outside and loud knocking. The door was burst open, and, with the consciousness of safety, the reaction came. With a faint ejaculation of joy and gratitude, I fell insensible to the floor.

When I was restored to consciousness, Moses, I found a crowd of curious faces of men around me, all eager to hear from my lips the particulars of my desperate encounter with the madman.

It appears that I literally battled with him all night, and the extraordinary exhibition of endurance on my part earned for me the reputation of a young hero; but I never told any one that I owed my victory over the madman chiefly to that portrait of the pretty girl; for, whenever I felt myself growing weak, a glance at the face would inspire me with tenfold strength. You smile, but the portrait was, after all, the landlord's daughter, and the story only a romantic fiction of the diseased brain of the madman.

"The picture was not, then, the portrait of Evelyn St. Croix?" I asked.

"No, my dear boy, it was your aunt's picture, as it afterwards proved. So you can now understand the inspirations that gave me the strength to go through that fearful night in a struggle for life."—N. Y. World.

RENOUNCING A THRONE.

Ceremony Through Which Archduchess Valerie Passed on Her Betrothal.

The renunciation of her successional rights by the Archduchess Valerie on her betrothal was performed in Vienna June 16. The Archbishop of Vienna, the highest court dignitaries, the members of the Privy Council, the Ministers, including three members of the Hungarian Cabinet, who came expressly for the purpose from Pesth, and the State Notary assembled in the Privy Council chamber of the Hofburg. Four Captains of the Imperial Body Guard stood on the right of the throne. On the stroke of twelve the Emperor entered the inner apartments, with the bride, her fiance, six of the Archdukes, the Duke of Cumberland, the Emperor's Adjutant-General, and the chamberlains of the bride and bridegroom. The Emperor, standing below the throne, invited the audience to witness the solemn ceremony. Then he mounted the throne, and Count Kalnoky, Minister of the Imperial House, read the deed of renunciation. The Archduchess Valerie, having made a deep reverence before her father, then went to a small table on the left of the throne, on which was a crucifix between two lighted wax tapers. The Archbishop presented the Gospels to her and she, taking off her right hand glove, laid two fingers on the book, and, holding the text of the oath in the other hand, repeated it audibly word by word as read by the Archbishop, including the oath proper at the end of the document. She then signed the act of renunciation, and again bowing low before the Emperor, took her seat on her father's right. The document was then signed by the bridegroom, the State notary affixed the seal of the couple and the ceremony was over. The bride was said to look "radiant with happiness." By the pragmatic sanction, published in 1724 by the Emperor Charles VI., it was declared that the different Austrian countries must never be divided, but that when the male line fails the female members of the house were to be admitted to succession, a provision that admitted the rule of Maria Theresa. The sanction furthermore provides that whenever a princess of the house of Hapsburg marries she must first renounce her rights to succession. Archduchess Valerie had the first claim to the throne, but now the first in the female line of succession is the Archduchess Elizabeth, the late Crown Prince's little daughter, who, if she marries, must renounce in her turn.

THE SNAKE CHARMER.

Manner in Which a Woman Handles Poisonous Reptiles.

Lulu La Toska is the name of the snake-charmer who handles the reptiles at Barnum's show. She is a Russian by birth, and has had control over snakes from her babyhood.

"How do you account for your power over snakes?" was asked by a Chicago Globe reporter at the close of a performance in which she had hung 450 pounds of live coils around her neck and body.

"It is a charm I have possessed since my birth. I was born to govern them, and the mark of a snake encircles me. Since two years old I have played with them. They have bitten me twice, but I am still alive, as you see."

"Where do you get the snakes?"

"They come from India. I am going to get thirty new ones in a few days. I lost one of the old ones I had had for fourteen years, in St. Louis. The stage fell on him and crushed him to death. Another one tried to bite me, and struck herself. She was deadly poison and died. They cost lots of money, from $150 to $500, and it's a big misfortune to have one die."

"How often do they eat?"

"Every three weeks usually, but the mean one that bit itself to death had not tasted any thing for a year and a half. Did you notice me tickle one of them under the chin? That's Emma. She likes it, too, and just lays her head back to enjoy it. She eats two chickens every week now. They are cross and don't eat when they are blind, which they are every six weeks. Then I have to touch them lightly so they will know when I am coming. If they turn their heads to look at me I pick them up, but if they stretch their heads away I let them alone, for they are ugly. We have to humor them like children."

"Is their bite poisonous?" asked the reporter.

"Yes; I handle an Indian bwarpython, one of the most poisonous snakes in the world. I also play with the black rattler without any trouble."

The Asperities of Debate.

The Speaker (to the gentleman from Indiana, who has just called the gentleman from Illinois an ass)—Does the gentleman from Indiana withdraw the epithet?

The Gentleman from Indiana—I withdraw the language, Mr. Speaker, but maintain that the gentleman from Illinois is not in order.

The Gentleman from Illinois—How am I out of order?

The Gentleman from Indiana—Probably a veterinary surgeon could tell you.

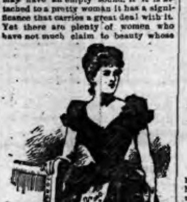
TITLED BEAUTIES.

Well-Known English Women Who Are Popular.

Lady Carew, Lady Curzon, Lady Charles Beresford, Lady Granby, Lady Raincliffe and Others.

[COPYRIGHT, 1890.]
[Special Correspondence.]

What's in a name? Though a name may have an empty sound, if it is attached to a pretty woman it has a significance that carries a great deal with it. Yet there are plenty of women who have not much claim to beauty whose reputation is almost world-wide, and whose pictures can be seen on all sides.



LADY CAREW.

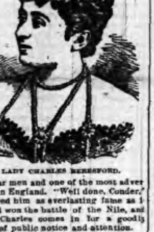
Take a picture of one of these in the academy and watch the crowd collected around it and you will discover that there is a good deal in a name, after all. How much more prominent, therefore, will a woman be who has a name and a claim to good looks as well, and yet does not owe her name to her looks alone.

One of the foremost of those seen in the Row, in the royal inclosure at Ascot, at the garden parties at Marlborough House, in the smartest drawing rooms, in fact everywhere that the chic set do congregate, is Lady Carew. She is very tall and has handsome and rather prominent features, and is generally accompanied by her sister, Miss Lethbridge.

Both sisters dress much alike, vary only perhaps in a little color, and both wear rather bright clothes, which are the more distinguishable from the wearer's station, which is quite equal to that of Lady de Grey, better known as Lady Lonsdale.

Lady Carew is the wife of Baron Carew, and is deservedly a great favorite with her uncle's tenants.

Another woman who has a name as well as looks is Lady Charles Beresford. She, however, gets a good deal of her notoriety from the reflected glory of her husband, who is one of the most popular men and one of the most advertised in England. "Well done, Condor," achieved him as everlasting fame as if he had won the battle of the Nile, and Lady Charles comes in for a goodly share of public notice and attention.



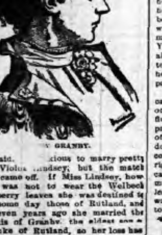
LADY CHARLES BERESFORD.

LADY CURZON.

Four champing black horses, harnessed to a coach with a red body and red running gear, have attracted a good deal of attention, not only because of their looks—they belong to Baron de Hirsh, the millionaire, and cost $20,000—but because they are driven by a lady.

She who handles the team in such scientific style is Lady Curzon, wife of Lord Curzon, the eldest son of one of the richest men in England. Lady Curzon was, before her marriage, Lady Georgiana Churchill, the youngest daughter but one of the last Duke of Marlborough and, therefore, the sister of the present.

When the present Duke of Portland came into his estates and power he, i was said. [illegible]xious to marry pretty Miss Viola [illegible]indsey; but the match never came off. If Miss Lindsey, however, was not to wear the Welbeck strawberry leaves she was destined to wear some day those of Rutland, and not seven years ago she married the Marquis of Granby, the eldest son of the Duke of Rutland, so her loss has not been a great one.



Y GRANBY.

Lady Granby is rather peculiar in appearance, but has a very interesting and taking face. She rather resembles Miss Terry in some ways, and is very fragile and delicate-looking. She can, however, stand any amount of fatigue, and is seen at all the smart balls and parties in the season, and has graced the box seat of several coaches at the different meets this year.

MISS EDITH LANE FOX.

Curiously enough, one of the best-looking and most admired girls in London this season was a cousin of Lady Yarborough, Miss Edith Lane Fox. She has hair Venetian red in hue, and a tall, slim figure with deep, dark, liquid eyes that thrill the gazer. She has the reputation of having worn out three chaperons in one season and looked none the worse for it.

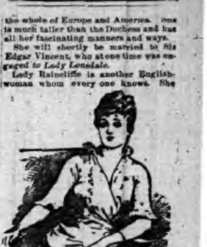
She is seen at all the best houses and entertainments in London, her looks being such as to make her always the center of an admiring coterie, while her sharp tongue has made her plenty of enemies, who say, it is alleged, that she is inclined to be rather fast. However, be that as it may, she is one of the best-known and most admired women in London.

LADY CYNTHIA DUNCOMBE.

Another lady who is admirably suited to belong to the ranks of well-known young women in London is Lady Cynthia Duncombe, the second daughter of the Earl of Faversham and sister of the beautiful Duchess of Leinster, whose [illegible]tation for good looks extends over the whole of Europe and America. One is much taller than the Duchess and has all her fascinating manners and ways.

She will shortly be married to Sir Edgar Vincent, who at one time was engaged to Lady Lonsdale.

Lady Raincliffe is another English woman whom every one knows. She has the advantage of exceptional height, and that alone attracts attention. She is fair, and has a haughty, rather overbearing look which stamps her as a "somebody" wherever she may be.



LADY RAINCLIFFE.

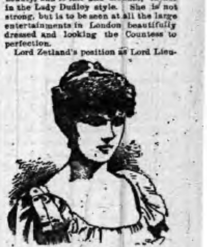
She is the daughter of the Earl of Westmoreland, and is therefore connected with every noble house in England. Her fair complexion and fair hair come to her from her mother, who is extremely blonde.

MISS VIOLET LANE FOX.

Another beauty who is celebrated and is about to join the ranks of married women is Miss Violet Lane Fox, a tall, pretty girl with a lovely figure. Miss Lane Fox has for years been the object of persecution by a man whose addresses she refused, and who has persisted in annoying her by kneeling before her in Hyde Park, ball-room or in any public place he met her. Several times he has been chastised for his insults. He has at last been put in durance vile, and by the time he comes out will find Miss Lane Fox is married and has a stalwart protector.

Her sister, Lady Yarborough, is also a beauty, and is tall and slender, rather in the Lady Dudley style. She is not strong, but is to be seen at all the large entertainments in London beautifully dressed and looking the Countess to perfection.

Lord Zetland's position as Lord Lieutenant of Ireland calls a great deal of attention to him, and his daughter, Lady Hilda Dundas, naturally comes in for a great deal of notice and attention. She is pretty, tall, with a very graceful figure and deep black eyes, dresses very quietly and, in excellent taste, and is a capital rider, though she does not aspire to the ribbons, as does Lady Curzon.



LADY HILDA DUNDAS.

She has a bright future before her, and will for many years be one of the belles of London, whether she marries or remains single. Of course this list may be prolonged indefinitely, but those given above are some of the best-known and best admired of the younger set.

THE PERIPATETIC.

A STINGING REBUKE.

Discourtesy of a Young Woman to an Old Lady and Its Aftermath.

It was on a street-car bound up town at about the time when the men and women who work in the great down-town hive of business for the better part of the day are hurrying home. Every seat was occupied when the car stopped and two women boarded it. The first was an elderly woman, somewhat feeble. The second was younger, sturdy and aggressive-looking.

A good-looking man of middle age arose from his seat, and, touching his hat, asked the elderly lady to be seated. Before she could sit down, however, the younger woman pushed her aside and sat down herself. There was no one in the car who did not know that the man who had given up his seat intended it for the older woman, and the action of the younger one astonished everybody for a moment. Then half a dozen seats were vacated and the elderly woman took one.

The man who had first given up his seat raised his hat to the woman who had taken the place not intended for her, and said in a voice that could be heard throughout the car: "Madam, I believe you to be among that class of women who are always complaining of man's lack of courtesy toward women. You will pardon me if I say that you are also one of that class of women who tempt men to be discourteous." Then he calmly proceeded to read his evening paper.

An audible snicker ran through the car, and one woman whispered to another: "Served her right." The woman flushed and looked straight before her, paying no attention. She stood the looks of the other passengers for fully half a dozen blocks. Then she signaled the conductor, and looking neither to the right nor to the left swept out of the car. A New York Mail and Express man who had curiosity enough to also leave the car at the same place and watch her saw her board the next up town car that came along.

The rebuke had had its effect.

A PECULIAR WOMAN.

An Aged Spinster Who Has Never Traveled Two Miles.

One of the most remarkable people in Georgia, according to the Macon Telegraph, is Miss Amanda Anderson of the East Macon district, near the Twiggs line.

Miss Anderson is sixty years old and is of perfectly sound mind, being even more than usually bright. Her eccentricity shows itself in her desire to remain in one place and never go beyond a certain limit. The longest journey she has ever made was from the place where she was born to the place where she now resides, a distance of a mile and a half. She lives within three miles of the East Tennessee, Virginia & Georgia railroad and yet she has never seen a train of cars. Among the other many things which she has yet to see for the first time are a store-house, or a building built of brick. She claims also that she has never seen but one painted house.

Miss Anderson's ideas of religion are necessarily vague, as she has never been inside a church or listened to a sermon or a prayer, unless it was before she can remember, when it is possible that her mother carried her to church.

Although Miss Anderson's nearest neighbor lives within three hundred yards of her she has never seen his house but once in three years. Her well ran dry last season and she was forced to go to her neighbor's well for water. She appeared perfectly lost and said she had some trouble in finding her way back home.

Third District Congressional Convention.

CONGRESSIONAL PRIMARIES.

[illegible]

By order of the County Democratic Executive Committee. [illegible]

Dated September 1, 1890.

Democratic Primaries.

[illegible]

JAMES E. MARTINE, Pres.

A GREAT BATTLE.

The Maine election appears to have been a [illegible] contest between the rival houses of Reed and Blaine.

The Democrats let the contest go by default, whether wisely or not we are unable to say, they had no speakers in the field, and a large number abstained from voting, notwithstanding which they gained in Assemblymen.

The chief efforts were concentrated in the District now represented by Speaker Thomas B. Reed. That was the battle ground, and there Mr. Reed, commanded in person, aided by McKinley, Lodge and other Congressmen, and also by Dudley, the renowned Indiana "blocks of five" engineer. Money flowed in unlimited supply, and every political scheme, fair and foul, was brought into activity to win the day.

Victory perched on the Reed banner by a largely increased majority.

Blaine and his friends were routed.

There ends the first lesson.

The victors have returned to Washington elated with glory, and confident that the Republican party is now securely within their grasp. Harrison is nowhere, Blaine in a deep hole, and what the Republican National Convention of 1892 [illegible] to do is to nominate by acclamation

For President,
BISMARCK REED, of Maine.
For Vice President,
NAPOLEON McKINLEY, of Ohio.

Moral—[illegible]

A MODEL PRESIDENT.

As time rolls by stronger and clearer grows the conviction in the minds of impartial citizens that the non-election of President Cleveland was a serious public calamity, and time will further prove, that its resulting effects have not promoted the general interests of the people and [illegible] the cause of free representative government.

It is not our purpose to unduly eulogize the administration of Cleveland, nor to cast unmerited reflections upon that of Harrison.

The accomplished facts of history cannot be [illegible] by partisan [illegible], neither can comparisons be deprived of their power to form just judgment.

Contrasts are often even more expressive than words.

The executive actions of President Cleveland are of record, and we unhesitatingly affirm that constant fidelity to the discharge of imposed duty, practical business methods, enlightened statesmanship, wise financial economy, aversion to political jobbery, freedom from mercenary considerations of every name and nature, and bravery to [illegible] what he conscientiously believed to be the right, placed him as President far above the average of his predecessors in office.

Grover Cleveland is worthy of high and lasting honor, because in every official position he ever filled, loyalty to duty was his guiding star, and an honest, efficient and dignified management of public affairs the basis of his ambition.

He was a model President.

ANOTHER PROTEST.

Mr. Leonard Brown, of Iowa, heretofore a prominent and able Republican leader, has written a letter declaring why he abandons that party.

He first arraigns Congress and the Administration "as a combination of rich men, legislating in the interest of the wealthy and [illegible]."

And then he denounces the Force Bill "as a dagger plunged into the heart of the American Republic [illegible]."

[illegible]

GEISSENHAINER.

Congressman Geissenhainer of this District is entitled to and deserves a renomination, which will no doubt be unanimously given him by the forthcoming Democratic Convention.

He has made a good and reliable Representative of the Third District at Washington. Although not addicted to oratorical display, and there are too many windy talkers in Congress, he is a courteous and highly respected member, of sound judgment regarding public affairs, a prosperous merchant of ripe business experience, and ever ready to faithfully serve his constituents. He has proven himself to be an intelligent and practical legislator, and the country needs more of that kind.

The Republican leaders can only trump up two charges against Mr. Geissenhainer—one being his personal wealth, and the other that he never made a speech.

Remembering what has been, that is certainly laughable.

Within the past few years this District was represented two terms in Congress by a Republican millionaire, a respectable young gentleman, who sat there as dumb as an oyster.

But, he was a Republican, you know! That makes a black horse white in the estimation of some politicians.

Your criticism of Mr. Geissenhainer is unfortunate for the other man, Republican brethren!

Try again.

Col. Chas. Thomas of Bound Brook, is looming up pretty extensively for Member of Assembly from Somerset County. No better man could be found for that position on the Democratic ticket. What is the matter with him for a Senatorial dark horse?

The political pot is beginning to boil pretty lively in Union County, and there are many predictions by those who think they know, as to who will be the nominees on the Democratic side for State Senator and Sheriff. That some of the aspirants and those named for said offices will "go by the board" is without question. What the Democratic party of Union County wants are nominees that will win. What is the matter with Fred. Marsh for Senator and Doty for Sheriff?

WOMEN WHO KEPT THEIR PLEDGE.

[illegible] the Waters of Foreign Lands.

Mrs. T. B. Tomlinson, of LaGrande avenue, [illegible] that the idea that when one goes abroad he must drink the wines of Europe [illegible] in preference to the waters is altogether wrong. During her [illegible] this Summer both the Doctor and herself drank nothing but water, and were in the best of health, while those who were afraid of Adam's ale and who indulged [illegible] in manufactured drinks were [illegible] by the [illegible]. At a recent meeting of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, of which she is President, she created a profound impression among the [illegible] by explaining that on shipboard [illegible] the journey abroad she was deeply grieved to see a pastor who is a great friend of the Union throughout the land and who is known personally to many of the members in this and other cities, drink fermented liquors freely, setting a pernicious example to young people [illegible] and establishing within himself [illegible] a taste for that which he had taught others to shun. She deprecated [illegible] this example of failing to practice purity as well as to preach it.

Miss [illegible] Yates, who also had just returned from a long visit to foreign climes, [illegible] heartily what Mrs. Tomlinson said concerning the drinks of other countries. The temptations, she said, were great, but if one had strength of will enough he could withstand all arts [illegible] from violating his pledge. During the many long months she spent [illegible] and [illegible] nothing but native waters, and [illegible] perfect health.

The women unite in declaring that good water [illegible] in every clime, and no one need [illegible] of anything else except from [illegible] health and happiness, they add, [illegible] the drinking of water in the old world [illegible] before the new world was discovered, and health and happiness still [illegible] water-drinkers more than wine-bibbers, the world over.

A New Council at Somerville.

A new Council of the Junior Order of United American Mechanics will be instituted at Somerville, the latter part of this month by Franklin Council, No. 41, of Plainfield. This is the second Council Franklin will have the honor of instituting within the past few months.

The Largest Conversion in Plainfield's Church History.

Forty-five new members joined the Plainfield Methodist Episcopal church recently, the largest number ever admitted to any church in this city at one time. This happy ingathering is due to the untiring zeal of the pastor, the Rev. Chas. E. Mitchell, during his earnest revival work last Winter.

ENGINEER DUNHAM'S "BONANZA."

Every Cent He Gets He Earns, and the Charges Against Him Are False.

Charges which would be serious if true were published in The World yesterday against F. A. Dunham, of Plainfield, Road Engineer of Union County. When a PRESS reporter called on Mr. Dunham to interview him regarding the matter, the busy engineer had not yet learned of the publication of the article, and was shown the following:

> The annual report of the County Collector of Union County has been published in book form and it will now be in order for the Republican Board of Freeholders, who had the authorizing of the expenditures noted in it, to rise and explain for the enlightenment of the [illegible] taxpayers. It will be interesting to know how an official whose salary is fixed by the Board of Freeholders has been allowed to draw a sum nearly five times greater than what he was supposed to receive.
>
> While the County Road bill was passed the Board appointed F. A. Dunham, of Plainfield, as Supervising Engineer of Construction on the county roads at a compensation of $8 per day. He had the privilege of hiring two assistants at a salary of $2.50 each per day. Collector Wood's report shows that Collector Dunham [illegible]. Total, [illegible].
>
> He also drew an account of bridges [illegible]. Total, [illegible]. This would make a grand total of moneys received by Engineer Dunham for his services of [illegible].
>
> Supposing he worked every day of the year, including Sundays, he would be entitled, at the rate fixed by the Board, to 365 days' pay at $8 per day, a total of [illegible].
>
> His two assistants, presuming they had also worked the same time, would receive 365 times $5, their combined salary, amounting to [illegible], or a total for the engineer and his assistants of [illegible], all they were legally entitled to receive, on the presumption that they were on duty every day in the year, a rather unlikely thing to believe, as Mr. Dunham must have put in some of his time in earning the [illegible] which he is credited with getting on account of bridges.
>
> Collector Wood's report shows that Mr. Dunham drew [illegible] for county roads alone, or an excess of [illegible] more than the combined salaries of himself and his assistants.
> The taxpayers are entitled to know by what process of mathematical calculation a man whose salary is fixed at $8 per day, and his two assistants at $2.50 each, can figure up that the county of Union owes them [illegible]. It is to be hoped this will be answered by the Freeholders in a more satisfactory manner than was the query put to the Board recently by Franklin Leonard Pope as to why the mud and clay were mixed with the Telford used in the construction of certain of the county roads, under the supervision of this exceedingly well-paid engineer.

Without any hesitation Mr. Dunham opened his books in the presence of the reporter and exhibited his method of keeping the road accounts.

Instead of himself and two assistants being the only workers for whom he draws pay, the number approaches two score. He has twelve different county road contracts under way, and for each contract is obliged to provide a supervising engineer and from one to two inspectors. Each engineer is paid $8 per day, the same as himself, and each inspector is paid $2.50 per day—eight hours constituting a day's work. When one of his engineers works two hours the county is charged $2. for a quarter-day's labor, and when one works twelve hours the county is charged $12. This same method is employed in keeping the time of the inspectors. In every instance the county is charged for the actual work done—no more, no less. Any one of ordinary intelligence willing to recognize the truth can see that it doesn't take many months for twelve engineers and ten or fifteen inspectors, working from two to sixteen hours a day, to run up a considerable bill. The principal engineers have of necessity been working over time a great deal, while some of the others have put in many short days. A conscientious record has been kept of each man's time, Mr. Dunham and his right hand man, Andrew J. Gavett, going over the books carefully each evening, to see that every detail was correct. The books have been open to the entire staff in Mr. Dunham's office ever since the county road work was begun, and if there had been any crookedness it would have been immediately discovered.

Those who know Mr. Dunham and Mr. Gavett—and who in Plainfield does not?—do not credit them with any desire for illegitimate spoliation of the public treasury; but even if they had combined to pocket over-charges, and had successfully subsidized the dozen of office employes who from a thorough knowledge of the proper charges and of the entries on the books would have known all about it, they could not even hope that falsified accounts would pass successfully the scrutiny of the Auditing Committee of the Board of Freeholders and the examination of the Board itself. The Freeholders have investigated thoroughly every account that has been presented, and no money has been expended except for work actually done.

The payments that have been made to Mr. Dunham on the county roads account has included, besides the salaries of engineers and inspectors already mentioned, the earnings of the office staff constantly at work on maps and other preparatory matters and of the surveying groups who stake out and curb lines and the grades. Then there are numerous incidentals, such as livery hire, which run the monthly expenses up to considerably more than $1,000, and for all this outlay Mr. Dunham of course has to be recompensed. The only money which he receives from the county actually for himself is his regular salary of $8 per day; and the weak attempt of The World correspondent to show that he has been pocketing wholesale illegitimate gains must be credited to ignorance or viciousness.

Mr. Dunham himself does a great deal of over time work, and of course gets paid the regular rate of $1 per hour. Mr. Gavett worked sixteen hours a day till he nearly killed himself and had to take a vacation, from which he has just returned, with his weight still twelve pounds less than normal. The other engineers, inspectors and surveyors, are also working hard. Engineer Dunham and his assistants have a great deal to do before cold weather sets in. They have been pushing matters for the best interests of the people. None of them has received a cent that was not his due, and none of them has attempted or desired to defraud the taxpayers. The Board of Freeholders have audited all accounts and have been satisfied in every instance with the honesty of the service and the thoroughness of the work. And Mr. Dunham's books are open for the inspection of every Doubting Thomas who is open to conviction.

Two Handsome Chapels to be Ready in the Spring.

The foundations have been laid for the new $6,000 chapel of the Plainfield M. E. church on Monroe avenue, near the Irving school.

The plans for the North Plainfield chapel of the Methodist church are being completed, and the building will be inclosed before snow-time.

Seven [illegible] Union.

Seven societies of Christian Endeavor—the Park Avenue Baptist, the Congregational, the First Presbyterian, the Trinity Reformed, and the Warren Mission, of Plainfield; the Baptist, of New Market; and the Presbyterian, of Dunellen—will hold their first meeting as a Local Union, in the Trinity Reformed church, this evening. Reports from each society will be read, showing their growth and giving a record of their prosperous work. Addresses will be delivered by the Rev. C. L. Goodrich, of Plainfield and the Rev. W. C. [illegible] of Dunellen. Spirited Christian Endeavor hymns will be rendered by a chorus of fifty voices, under the leadership of M. Marvin Dunham. Everybody will be welcome. The service of song will begin at 7:45.

TO FULFIL THE CONTRACT.

The Water-Works Company to Consult With the Water Board in a Plan for Avoiding Litigation and Finishing the Works.

Every member of the Plainfield Common Council was present at Monday's special session. Besides the auditing and payment of several street laborers' bills only two matters came up—the street railway project, and the water-works question.

All that was done concerning street railway matters was the granting of the request of the Plainfield Street Railway Company to change their proposed route so as to go from LaGrande avenue through Richmond street, to Third and to Peace.

Concerning the water-works, Councilman Newhall, Chairman of the Water Board, reported that as a result of the consultation between the Board and Corporation Counsel Craig A. Marsh, the following notice had been served on the Water Company:

> To the Water Works Company of Plainfield:
>
> GENTLEMEN:—You are hereby notified that the corporate authorities of this city insist upon the full and entire completion of the contract between the inhabitants of the city of Plainfield and the water works company of Plainfield, for the construction of water works in said city, in strict accordance with the terms thereof and within the time therein limited, and that in case of any default on the part of said company action will be taken forthwith both against said company and its sureties.
>
> The city is advised that the writ of certiorari granted by the Supreme Court in the case of the State, Israel Lewis, Prosecutor, against J. Herbert Johnston, et als., does not operate to prevent the continuation of work under said contract, and the city hereby gives notice that it will resist any claim for extra allowance of time on account of said suit. Demand is hereby made for payment on or before September 16, instant, at 2 P. M., for the sum of [illegible] now due under clause [illegible] of said contract.
> By order of the Water Board as empowered by the Common Council.
>
> CRAIG A. MARSH,
> Counsel to the Corporation.
> Dated September 15, 1890, Plainfield, N. J.

Mr. Newhall added that no response had yet been received. In view of the legal proceedings and apparent delay in the progress of the works,—he continued—the Water Board had thought it wise to suggest to Supervising Engineer Rudolph Hering that some arrangement be made by which the monthly payments to Hering could be discontinued for a time. In response Mr. Hering had sent the following:

> To the Plainfield Water Board:
> GENTLEMEN:—I of course consider that I am personally bound to supervise the construction of the water works until their completion, as per my contract with the city. But in view of the situation as stated by you, if the work is indefinitely stopped, I consider it but right and proper to have the monthly installments cease till work is resumed.
>
> Yours truly,
> RUDOLPH HERING.

Mr. Newhall further stated, that he had just received from the Water Works Company, the following letter:

> To the Honorable Council of the City of Plainfield:
> SIRS:—In view of the litigation now pending in the Supreme Court relative to the contract for a water-supply awarded to this company in December, 1889, and the probable delay consequent thereon, this company desires to place before your honorable body a plan for the practical carrying out of the essential features of said contract within a short time and without the embarrassment of further litigation.
>
> Through lack of time we are unable to present this plan in a formal manner at to-night's meeting, but we hold ourselves ready to explain the matter in open meeting this evening, by our counsel, or by a formal communication to your Board at some future time. We can only add that as the season for out-door work is rapidly passing away the negotiations should be entered upon at once.
>
> THE WATER-WORKS COMPANY OF PLAINFIELD,
> CHAS. K. MOORE, Attorney in fact.

On motion of Mr. Hetfield the entire matter was referred to the Water Board for the Board to report on at the next meeting.

A Church Burned at Somerville.

The First Reformed church at Somerville was burned at five o'clock yesterday morning. The firemen answered the alarm promptly, and saved the building from utter destruction, but the organ was considerably damaged by smoke and water, and the belfry and tower were destroyed. The fire is attributed to the spontaneous combustion of old rags in a closet filled with rubbish.

[illegible] Marsh and Newhall's Turn.

It is a matter of mystery why the News should make an attack upon the Corporation Counsel and Councilman Newhall in the Water Works matter. The paper states in effect that Contractor Moore "hoodooed" them into making a contract, all in his favor, under which the city has no protection nor rights that the water works company is bound to respect. So false a statement must be made through pure cussedness.

Hoerster Acquitted.

The charge of selling beer to a minor, made against Eugene Hoerster by Marshal Rutledge, was tried before Justice Hardy, on Monday. There were four witnesses sworn for the complainant—Lewis Sprigg, Jr., to whom it is alleged the illegal sale was made; his brother and two others.

Mr. Jackson, of Jackson & Codington, was counsel for Hoerster. On cross examination by Mr. Jackson, Lewis Sprigg admitted that before Hoerster sold him the liquor he asked him if he was over 21, and that he informed Hoerster he was. Two of the other witnesses for the borough admitted young Sprigg appeared to be over 21, and one said he himself had offered him a ticket to vote at the last election under the impression he was of full age. On his own behalf Mr. Hoerster swore he honestly supposed young Sprigg was of full age, both from his appearance and statements. Under these circumstances Mr. Hoerster's counsel claimed he could not legally be convicted. Justice Hardy took this view of the law and discharged Mr. Hoerster.

State Scholarships for Plainfield Pupils.

Notice has been read in the Plainfield public schools regarding the provision made by the last Legislature for scholarships in the State College, Rutgers Scientific School, at New Brunswick. In the college are maintained four full courses—civil engineering and mechanics, chemistry and agriculture, electricity, and a special course in agriculture. Appointment to a scholarship entitles the student to a full four years course. Under the law today there are scholarships for every Assembly district, which ambitious students in the public schools can try for. The County Superintendents have charge of the examinations, and from them circulars may be secured setting forth the standard of knowledge required in candidates.

The law provides that if several properly-qualified candidates for appointment pass the examination from the same Assembly district all who are suitably qualified shall receive appointment to such free scholarships, excess from certain Assembly districts being counterbalanced (as they will be) by vacancies in other Assembly districts, provided only that the entire number of appointees shall not exceed the entire number of free scholarships created by the State.

THE LATEST LIE OF ALL.

John Kean, Jr., Has Not Bought the Plainfield Water Contract, but the Shoe May Eventually be Put on the Other Foot.

It is not necessary to tell the people of Plainfield that any statement that the franchise of the Water Works Co., of Plainfield has been transferred to John Kean, Jr., or anyone else; or that the contract is sold to him or anyone else, for $20,000 or any other price; is false. The people did not see it in THE PRESS, so they know it is not so. But some of our contemporaries less wise than the people may copy the falsehood as a fact.

In the first place it is thoroughly impossible for Contractor Moore to sell out, or even transfer, the franchise, because it has been granted to the Water Works company of which he is only a representative. It would be as ridiculous to say that German Force had sold the charter of the First National Bank to John Kean, Jr.

Then, too, the contract is absolutely unassignable without the consent of both parties; and probably the most important party to it is the city. Until the city gives permission the contract can not be sold or bought, and such permission has never been asked by Contractor Moore or the Water Works Co.

A PRESS reporter saw Contractor Moore on Tuesday. He was busy explaining certain specifications to his foremen regarding the work now being done. In answer to the question whether he had heard the report that he had sold out his contract to John Kean, Jr., for $20,000, and that suits against him had been discontinued and judgments arrested as a part of such deal, he said: "I have not sold, assigned or turned over in any way, the Plainfield water contract or franchise to John Kean, Jr., or anyone else. I have not seen John Kean, Jr., for some time. There are no suits against me to my knowledge, to be discontinued; and there is no judgment against me anywhere. I did not meet John Kean, Jr., yesterday at any place or at any time.

"I could not sell or transfer the water contract if I wanted to, because it is not mine. It belongs to the Water Works company, and even they could not sell or transfer it without the consent of the city that gave it."

Inquiries elsewhere succeeded in discovering not the slightest foundation for the false report that John Kean, Jr., had bought the contract for $20,000, and the proceedings of the Council published elsewhere, show that the story was a lie. In fact future developments will probably show that the deal will go the other way. Instead of John Kean, Jr, and the Water Supply Co., absorbing Charles K. Moore and the Water Works Co., the latter combination will take in the former.

This is as it should be. The city's enemies through the News and by action brought before the Supreme Court, have cast a blot upon the contract of the city of Plainfield with the Water Works company. Until the legality of the contract is finally settled, the Water Works company (although possessed of all the money necessary to complete the contract) naturally do not want to continue the work under a contract that might be annulled, and thus leave them with the job half finished but with no authority to proceed under except the general law for corporations which has no provision to prevent every petty property owner along whose front the mains might run, from obtaining an injunction to stop the work.

Therefore a meeting was held in the office of the Corporation Counsel, Monday night, and the Water Board heard the statements of both the Water Works Co., which has a contract amenable to a law that is questioned, and the Water Supply Co., which has a charter which is a law unto itself. The Water Works Co., is willing to let the latter in on the strength of the charter they hold, which in the possession of the Water Works Co., would give it all the standing and protection it may now lack. Then if the law is set aside the work can be continued under the charter.

THE PRESS has taken the position it has in this matter from purely philanthropic motives mixed with an appreciation of the credit due Contractor Moore for the gallant fight he has made against the money and power of one who endeavored to so financially cripple and choke him that he would be compelled to break his faith with the city and betray the friends who had formed the company back of him. It is consequently a source of congratulation that the position of things has been reversed. Instead of the very favorable contract that the City has secured through the efforts of Councilman Newhall and others, being wiped out and the works completed under the charter that is bound by no restrictions for the good of the people; the charter will be made use of only as a protection to the carrying out of the contract and its provisions. A few weeks ago, as stated in these columns, John Kean, Jr., was offering stock in the Supply Co., if the Water Works Co., would get down and out. Thanks to Contractor Moore's brave stand, the shoe is now on the other foot. The Supply Co., will be the one to step down and out, and its members will be permitted to come into the Water Works Co., upon the surrender of their charter thereto.

FLOPS LIKE A WEATHER-COCK.

What the Subsidized Tool Said, and What He Says He Said.

(From the News of Monday.)	(From the News of Tuesday.)
THE DUBIOUS FRANCHISE SOLD TO EX-CONGRESSMAN KEAN. Mr. Charles Moore has finally given up the struggle of trying to build without capital a water works system for Plainfield, and has turned the franchise over to his principal bondsman and creditor, ex-Congressman John Kean, Jr., who in consideration thereof has agreed to discontinue his suits against Mr. Moore, and to reimburse him for the trouble he has been to, owing to the prosecution of the enterprise. Judgment was obtained against Mr. Moore last week when it became evident that he could neither pay the city or Mr. Kean, who was the principal creditor. The time for the execution of the judgment was up Saturday, but it was not passed, since Mr. Moore decided to accept Mr. Kean's generous offer to help him out of his difficulty. It is understood that Mr. Kean gives him $20,000.	A HITCH IN THE ARRANGEMENTS TO SELL. Mr. Moore and his creditors were not able to conclude arrangements satisfactorily yesterday. There is a hitch. It now transpires that the franchise of the Water Works Company cannot be sold without the consent of the Council. It can, however, be transferred. It is also said that the judgment against Mr. Moore was not docketed on Saturday, being withheld on certain conditions to be complied with by him, but, we understand, the judgment is ready to be at any moment in case of failure on his part. We intimated this much in our article of yesterday.

"We intimated this much," is good, but the ignorance of the man who wrote the above, and the vagary of his mind, is further accentuated by the fact that he spells judgment twice on Monday with one "e," and once on Tuesday with two.

SOMERVILLE WINS THE FIRST.

The West End Batters Hammer the Ball, But the Crescent Fielders Pull it Down—Consequently, Instead of 5 to 0, the Score Was 2 to 1.

A glance at the [Somerville] list of batters gives the one reason for the caution that is felt by the friends of the Plainfield team.—The Daily Press, the day before the game.

The first of the series of three games for the championship of Northern New Jersey, between the West Ends of Somerville, and the Crescent League's team of this city, is a thing of the past, yet to this day it is a matter of some wonder why the Plainfield team was not defeated worse than it was. They were away from home, sliding around in the soft mud of a strange field, and the West End's aggregation of sluggers kept the heavy, slippery ball in the air all the time, for the Plainfielders to squeeze and handle with particular care.

It was much easier in the field for the West Ends. Not a ball was batted outside of the diamond within reach of the West End fielders, until the last inning, when a solitary fly went to Carbonell. Harkins pitched a perfect game and but four lonely hits were scored against him. Those hits were very like angel's visits to the Crescents in many ways. They were few; they were far between, being one each in the second, third, fifth and eighth inning; and they were most thankfully received, especially the one of Lufbery's in the eighth that brought Hatfield home from second base, which he had reached on four balls and Martin's sacrifice.

As were the Crescents at the mercy of Harkins, so was Gregg at the mercy of the West End batters. Harkins struck out the Crescents' heaviest hitters when he chose. Gregg struck out but one—and that was with the help of the only error of judgment Umpire Quinn made during the entire game—while his pitching seemed to be just plain home-made pie for the West Ends. In the fourth inning Farrell, Harkins, Reilley, O'Rourke and Bowes hammered the curves all out of his balls. There were twelve balls pitched to them, and they netted two singles, a double, and long flies to centre and right field, in quick succession.

It will be understood from this state of affairs that the Crescents' outfield must have put up a marvelous and errorless game to hold the victors down to two runs. The outfield got nine flies, on two of which were double plays, and in consequence only four of the West Ends hit Gregg safely. The dropping of almost any single one of these flies would have been most disastrous, yet many of them would have gone out of reach if the ball had not been wet and soggy.

Thus did the Crescents escape a crushing defeat by the good work and good luck of their outfield, and they might have reaped a victory if Jones had not had an off day. The West Ends' two runs were both made in the fourth inning by great luck. Farrell made a hit and then a dash for home on Harkins's two-bagger. This ball was thrown in from the field to Jones at the plate. It reached him on the bound loaded with mud, and he dropped it. Many believe if he had held it he would have caught Farrell. That is not so. He had to go too far from the plate to get the throw in. A few minutes afterwards he tried to retrieve himself by catching Harkins off of third base. Harkins is a big fellow, and in trying to throw over his head Jones threw away over Lee's also. Harkins thus scored, but those fortunate runs were all the West Ends got.

The infield playing of both teams was marred by only one error each. Wiegand dropped the first ball thrown him, because he had not discovered it was wet and slippery. Reilley got a little rattled over a ball hit by Lee, on which he could have made a double play; but his three safe hits were ample apology for even a worse error. Lee accepted five chances and Lufbery and Martin three each, without an error; while Farrell's playing was a feature. He had seven chances all handled in fine style, and one especially called forth applause from the rooters of both teams.

As has already been said, the West End outfielders had little to do. The only fly that came to them was McIndoe's in the ninth. It was one of those hits that go over the right field fence at the home grounds. It started the same way, but finding the fence at Somerville much farther the ball began to swing around towards left field. It was a low sailer, and the five hundred people that watched it could hear it hum. There was no one out, the West Ends were only one run ahead, and McIndoe was already on his way to second. Everybody thought it was Davenport's ball but it skimmed over toward Carby and sailed away toward a vacant spot between centre and left field. Carbonell started after it, but all believed it an impossible catch. After a long run, however, he just reached it with the tips of his fingers not many inches above the grass. That was another thing that won the game for Somerville.
